[James Dale Davidson]

"A wise man can see more from the bottom of a well than a fool can from a mountain top."
[Unknown]

There’s a very good reason why the title to this chapter uses the word “liable”. The fact is, there is NO STATUTE or POSITIVE LAW in the entire 9,500 page Internal Revenue Code, which makes a natural person liable for the payment of Subtitle A income taxes, or Subtitle C Employment taxes for other than withholding agents who are accepting voluntary withholding from nonresident alien individuals. There has also never been a claim by anyone in the legal profession or the IRS or in any IRS publication that we have found which contradicts this either that we are aware of. The IRS and the Department of Injustice are speechless when you bring up the following issue in court in front of a jury by asking:

"I am a law-abiding American Citizen who wants to pay what the law says I owe. Prove to me that the Internal Revenue Code is enacted positive ‘law’ that applies to me and then provide the positive law statute within it that makes me liable for Subtitles A and C income taxes and I will gladly pay what you say I owe. I have studied this issue for several years now and read extensively and searched electronically the entire Internal Revenue Code and Treasury Regulations and couldn’t find a statute that makes me liable."

This tactic is very effective with juries and against the IRS. We’ll explain in this chapter the many reasons why we aren’t liable and the many different angles people have come up with over the years that show why we aren’t liable which are also very convincing to juries. We have scoured just about every tax book, every IRS publication, positive law, the I.R.C. (which isn’t “law”, by the way), and went to every seminar we could find to come up with the content of this chapter to make the arguments used authoritative, complete, detailed, and most importantly, unfututed by any government propaganda or legal document that we could find. We have done this to make your search for the truth easier. If we have missed anything or are in error, please let us know what you found out so we can all benefit from your discovery!

The Bible says:

"Test all things; hold fast what is good. Abstain from every form of evil."
[1 Thess. 5:21-22, Bible, NKJV]

"Finally, brethren, whatever things are true, whatever things are noble, whatever things are just, whatever things are pure, whatever things are lovely, whatever things are of good report, if there is any virtue and if there is anything praiseworthy—meditate on these things."
[Phil. 4:8, Bible, NKJV]

Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

This chapter is the result of over four years of diligent study to fulfill exactly the above calling. We have tried very hard to discover what is “truthful” and “good” about our government and our tax law. The result is the knowledge of where the evil lies and what we must correspondingly abstain from. Direct income taxes paid on one’s own labor within states of the Union just happens to be one of the evils and crimes that our research has revealed which we must abstain from, because you will learn in this chapter that they amount to slavery.

What you will find in reading this chapter, as we explain later in section 5.12, is that the more layers of the onion you peel back to expose the real truth about income taxes, the less information you will find, because as we make quite plain in the next chapter, there is a concerted effort by our deceitful and covetous government and the media to cover up the truth. You will therefore find it very difficult to locate materials or evidence published by the government that will refute or even address most of the issues discussed in this chapter.

"He who believes in Him [Jesus, the Son of God] is not condemned; but he who does not believe is condemned already, because he has not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God. And this is the condemnation, that the light has come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil.

For everyone practicing evil hates the light and does not come to the light, lest his deeds should be exposed. But he who does the truth comes to the light, that his deeds may be clearly seen, that they have been done in God.”

[John 3:18-21, Bible, NKJV]

We obtained every government publication we could find on the subject of taxes in either printed or electronic form and found it very difficult to refute the content of this chapter. We looked in the following government publications, many of which we downloaded and posted on our website, for instance, and found very little that addresses anything in this chapter and nothing credible that contradicted it, and this is no accident, but another means of confirming that what we are saying is the absolute truth:

1. Department of Justice, Tax Division, Criminal Tax Manual. See http://famguardian.org/Publications/DOJTDCTM/DOJTDCTM.htm
8. Federal District Court rulings. See http://www.versuslaw.com/
10. Several correspondences received by our readers from the Internal Revenue Service, many of which are posted in our website at: Sovereignty Forms and Instructions Online, Form #10.004, Evidence Section http://famguardian.org/TaxFreedom/FormsInstr.htm

During our search for contradictory information, we obtained internal IRS memos dealing with one or more issues discussed in this chapter, and in every case, they had sensitivity markings limiting their distribution, apparently because the IRS did not want such sensitive information getting into the hands of the general public! Below is a link that provides just one example on our website of such an IRS memo:

Remember, a public servant wrote the above and anything we as the sovereigns pay a government servant to do ought to be available and releasable unless it is classified, which the above was not. The only thing cover-ups do is protect wrongdoers.

Another source for clearly showing the deception of our public servants can be found in the “Tax Deposition Questions” found on our website. These questions are a superset of the We the People Truth in Taxation Hearing questions and the IRS and Dept of Justice violated a written agreement to answer the We The People questions in a public forum because the answers would have been too incriminating and revealed far more of the truth than the government wants you to learn. You can look at these questions at:

</tr>

The above memo, the Tax Deposition Questions, Family Guardian Fellowship, and thousands of pages of additional evidence on our website furnish compelling and overwhelming evidence that there is a systematic cover-up of the truth going on by the IRS and the Congress, which amounts to criminal violation of the following positive law statutes and several others not mentioned:

1. Obstructing Justice, 18 U.S.C. Chapter 73
5. Engaging in monetary transactions derived from unlawful activity under 18 U.S.C. §1957
7. False writings and fraud under 18 U.S.C. §1018
8. Taking of property without due process of law under 26 C.F.R. §601.106(f)(1) and the Fifth Amendment
10. Fraud under 18 U.S.C. §1341
13. Treason under Article III, Section 3, Clause 1 of the U.S. Constitution
15. Bank robbery under 18 U.S.C. §2113 (in the case of fraudulent notice of levies and notice of liens served by the IRS on unsuspecting financial institutions)

Based on the exhaustive evidence and analysis found in this chapter, we will demonstrate far beyond a “reasonable doubt” that the “D.C.” in the phrase “Washington D.C.” stands for “District of Criminals”. We will also demonstrate that through its coerced agents in a corrupt federal judiciary, these criminals have obstructed justice and abused sovereign immunity and official immunity in order to make areas under their control within the “federal zone” into havens for financial terrorists at the IRS, who have recklessly disregarded your sacred property rights and constitutional rights which the government was instituted to protect from the beginning. The only lawfully sanctioned protector of our rights at the federal level has thus become its worst abuser and violator. Your de facto government is a PREDATOR, not a PROTECTOR. It has transformed in the role from a protector under a Constitutional Republic to a predator within a totalitarian socialist democracy. The federal corporation called the “United States Government” (see 28 U.S.C. §3002(15)(A)), and not Microsoft, ought to be tried on anti-trust charges for the virtual monopoly on organized crime and extortion that it currently enjoys in the disguise of a lawful “income tax”. We will also show how corrupted lawyers in the states have colluded with the federal government in denying you your rights in the context of income taxes. You will also learn that the criminal disregard of our politicians and public “servants” towards our constitutional rights and the laws that are documented in this chapter amounts to “communism”, to use the government’s own words and definitions:

The Congress finds and declares that the Communist Party of the United States, although purportedly a political party, is in fact an instrumentality of a conspiracy to overthrow the Government of the United States. It constitutes an authoritarian dictatorship within a republic, demanding for itself the rights and privileges accorded to political parties, but denying to all others the liberties guaranteed by the Constitution. Unlike political parties, which evolve their policies and programs through public means, by the reconciliation of a wide variety of individual views, and submit those policies and programs to the electorate at large for approval or disapproval, the policies and programs of the Communist Party are secretly prescribed for it by the foreign leaders of the world Communist movement. Its members have no part in determining its goals, and are not permitted to voice dissent to party objectives. Unlike members of political parties, members of the Communist Party are recruited for indoctrination with respect to its objectives and methods, and are organized, instructed, and disciplined to carry into action slavishly the assignments given them by their hierarchical chieftains. Unlike political parties, the Communist Party acknowledges no constitutional or statutory limitations upon its conduct or upon that of its members.
The Communist Party is relatively small numerically, and gives scant indication of capacity ever to attain its ends by lawful political means. The peril inherent in its operation arises not from its numbers, but from its failure to acknowledge any limitation as to the nature of its activities, and its dedication to the proposition that the present constitutional Government of the United States ultimately must be brought to ruin by any available means, including resort to force and violence [or using income taxes]. Holding that doctrine, its role as the agency of a hostile foreign power [the Federal Reserve and the American Bar Association (ABA)] renders its existence a clear present and continuing danger to the security of the United States. It is the means whereby individuals are seduced into the service of the world Communist movement, trained to do its bidding, and directed and controlled in the conspiratorial performance of their revolutionary services. Therefore, the Communist Party should be outlawed.

That’s right: Anyone from the government charged with administering the tax code who refuses to discuss the code or the statutory or Constitutional constraints on their power in the context of income taxes is a Communist as our Congress defines it! Welcome to the United Socialist States of America (USSA), comrade! You will also find that this reckless and irresponsible attitude permeates everyone in government and the legal profession you will talk to about the laws on taxation.
Incidentally, the “foreign powers” described above that are behind the current “communist party”, which encompasses both the Democrats and the Republicans presently in office, is the Federal Reserve, the American Bar Association (ABA), Satan, and the legal profession. They have already conspired collectively to transform our constitutional republic into a totalitarian socialist democracy and the next step is complete communism. All it will take is a national emergency like the War on Terrorism to complete that step. After you read this chapter, you will also understand the following Washington Rules of the communists who currently serve in elected or appointed office:

5.1 Introduction to Federal Taxation

5.1.1 Hierarchy of Sovereignty: The Power to Create is the Power to Tax

"Having thus avowed my disapprobation of the purposes, for which the terms, State and sovereign, are frequently used, and of the object, to which the application of the last of them is almost universally made; it is now proper that I should disclose the meaning, which I assign to both, and the application. [2 U.S. 419, 455] which I make of the latter. In doing this, I shall have occasion incidentally to evince, how true it is, that States and Governments were made for man; and, at the same time, how true it is, that his creatures and servants have first deceived, next vilified, and, at last, oppressed their master and maker."
[Justice Wilson, Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 Dall. (2 U.S.) 419, 1 L.Ed. 440, 455 (1793)]
An important concept for readers to grasp are the following concepts underlying the entire legal field:

1. The creator of a thing is always the owner of the thing.
2. Governments can only tax or regulate that which they create.
3. Government didn’t create human beings and therefore can’t regulate or tax them UNTIL they volunteer to occupy an office in the government that WAS created by that government. Otherwise, slavery and involuntary servitude in violation of the Thirteenth Amendment will be the result.
4. The regulated or taxed office within the government that a person occupies can only be exercised on federal territory or in all places EXPRESSLY authorized per 4 U.S.C. §72.
5. If the office is exercised OUTSIDE of places not expressly authorized, it is a de facto and unlawful office. This is covered in:

   De Facto Government Scam, Form #05.043
   http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

6. To prevent people who know the above from avoiding the scam of being taxed or regulated, corrupt governments will try to make their CREATION, which is PUBLIC OFFICE, look similar or identical to things that it didn’t create and are PRIVATE. For instance, they will try to make a PRIVATE human and one using a Social Security Number BOTH APPEAR PUBLIC when in fact they are not. This is how they unlawfully convert the PRIVATE property of innocent Americans into PUBLIC property that they can STEAL, tax, and regulate.

Hiding the above mechanisms is obviously a scam, but the only way you will ever escape them is to understand how this mechanism works. That is what we will teach you in this section.

We pointed out earlier in section 4.1 the hierarchy of sovereignty, in which the sequence that things were created and who they were created by establishes the sovereign relations among all things, including both human beings and artificial creations such as corporations and governments. The analysis there is the basis for further discussion in this chapter. A summary of the hierarchy is below:

1. God created the people (as individuals).
2. The people (as individual sovereigns) created the state Constitution and the states. The state constitutions divided the state government into three branches: executive, judicial, and legislative.
3. The states created the federal constitution and the federal government. The federal constitution divided the federal government into three branches: executive, judicial, legislative. The states also instituted their own internal franchises, including state corporations and state citizens.
4. The federal government created federal States, corporations, and privileged “U.S. citizen” status through legislation.

The above hierarchy recognizes nine distinct sovereignties which are completely independent of each other in law. These are:

1. God
2. The people (as individuals).
3. The “states” (of the Union). These states create special franchises underneath them, including:
   3.1. State citizenship
   3.2. State corporations
4. The federal (not national) government. Remember from section 4.6 earlier that the “United States” is not a nation under the law of nations, but a federation, and there is a world of difference. The federal government then creates special franchises underneath them, including:
   4.2. Federal “States”.
   4.3. U.S. citizens/idolaters. These are people who have surrendered their sovereignty to the government and choose to be government slaves/serfs/subjects.

The courts have historically recognized the separation of these sovereignties, and all exist by virtue of natural law. Below is a diagram of this hierarchy in graphical form:

The rules for how these sovereignties must relate to each other within our system of jurisprudence are as follows, extracted from the rulings of the Supreme Court, federal statutes, the Bible, and historical documents:

1. The people are sovereign over all government:

   "The ultimate authority...resides in the people alone..."

   [James Madison, Federalist Paper No. 46]

   "Sovereignty itself is, of course, not subject to law, for it is the author and source of law...While sovereign powers are delegated to...the government, sovereignty itself remains with the people."

   [Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356 (1886)]

   "Sovereign state" are cabalistic words, not understood by the disciple of liberty, who has been instructed in our constitutional schools. It is an appropriate phrase when applied to an absolute despotism. I firmly believe, that the idea of sovereign power in the government of a republic, is incompatible with the existence and permanent foundation of civil liberty, and the rights of property. The history of man, in all ages, has shown...

the necessity of the strongest checks upon power, whether it be exercised by one man, a few or many. Our revolution broke up the foundations of sovereignty in government; and our written constitutions have carefully guarded against the baneful influence of such an idea henceforth and forever. I can not, therefore, recognize the appeal to the sovereignty of the state, as a justification of the act in question."
[Guiness v. Baford, 31 Ky. (1 Dana) 481, 501]

2. The people came before the states and created the states. Therefore, they are the Masters and the states are their servants:

"It is again to antagonize Chief Justice Marshall, when he said: The government of the Union, then (whatever may be the influence of this fact on the case), is emphatically and truly a government of the people. In form and in substance it emanates from them. Its powers are granted by them, and are to be exercised directly on them and for their benefit. This government is acknowledged by all to be one of enumerated powers.' 4 Wheat. 404, 4 L.Ed.

[Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U.S. 244 (1901)]

"The words 'people of the United States' and 'citizens,' are synonymous terms, and mean the same thing. They both describe the political body who, according to our republican institutions, form the sovereignty, and who hold the power and conduct the government through their representatives. They are what we familiarly call the 'sovereign people,' and every citizen is one of this people, and a constituent member of this sovereignty. ..."
[Boyd v. State of Nebraska, 143 U.S. 135 (1892)]

3. The states created the federal government and are superior to it. The federal government is the servant to and fiduciary of the states and the states are their Master. This is confirmed by the U.S. Supreme Court in Carter v. Carter Coal Co., 298 U.S. 238 (1936):

The general rule with regard to the respective powers of the national and the state governments under the Constitution is not in doubt. The states were before the Constitution; and, consequently, their legislative powers antedated [and are superior to] the Constitution. Those who framed and those who adopted that instrument meant to carve from the general mass of legislative powers, then possessed by the states, only such portions as it was thought wise to confer upon the federal government; and in order that there should be no uncertainty in respect of what was taken and what was left, the national powers of legislation were not aggregated but enumerated-with the result that what was not embraced by the enumeration remained vested in the states without change or impairment. Thus, when it was found necessary to establish a national government for national purposes, the court said in Munn v. Illinois, 94 U.S. 113, 124, 'a part of the powers of the States and of the people of the States was granted to the United States and the people of the United States. This grant operated as a further limitation upon the powers of the States, so that now the governments of the States possess all the powers of the Parliament of England, except such as have been delegated to the United States or reserved by the people.' While the states are not sovereign in the true sense of that term, but only quasi sovereign, yet in respect of all powers reserved to them they are supreme-as independent of the general government as that government within its sphere is independent of the States. The Collector v. Day, 11 Wall. 113, 124. And since every addition to the national legislative power to some extent detracts from or invades the power of the states, it is of vital moment that, in order to preserve the fixed balance intended by the Constitution, the powers of the general government [298 U.S. 238, 295] be not so extended as to embrace any not within the express terms of the several grants or the implications necessarily to be drawn therefrom. It is no longer open to question that the general government, unlike the states, Hammer v. Daggett, 247 U.S. 251, 275, 38 S.Ct. 529, 3 A.L.R. 649, Ann.Cas.1918E, 724, possesses no inherent power in respect of the internal affairs of the states; and emphatically not with regard to legislation. The question in respect of the inherent power of that government as to the external affairs of the Nation and in the field of international law is a wholly different matter which it is not necessary now to consider. See, however, Jones v. United States, 137 U.S. 202, 212, 11 S.Ct. 80; Nishimur Ekiu v. United States, 142 U.S. 651, 659, 12 S.Ct. 336; Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U.S. 698, 705 et seq.,

The determination of the Framers Convention and the ratifying conventions to preserve complete and unimpaired state self-government in all matters not committed to the national government is one of the plainest facts which emerges from the history of their deliberations. And adherence to that determination is incumbent equally upon the federal government and the states. State powers can neither be appropriated on the one hand nor abdicated on the other. As this court said in Texas v. White, 7 Wall. 700, 723, 'The preservation of the States, and the maintenance of their governments, are as much within the design and care of the Constitution as the preservation of the Union and the maintenance of the National government. The Constitution, in all its provisions, looks to an indestructible Union, composed of indestructible States.' Every journey to a forbidden end begins with the first step; and the danger of such a step by the federal government in the direction of taking over the powers of the states is that the end of the journey may find the states so despoiled of their powers, or-what may amount to the same thing-so [298 U.S. 238, 296] relieved of the responsibilities which possession of the powers necessarily enjoins, as to reduce them to little more than geographical subdivisions of the national domain. It is safe to say that if, when the Constitution was under consideration, it had been thought that any such danger lurked behind its plain words, it would never have been ratified.

And the Constitution itself is in every real sense a law-the lawmakers being the people themselves, in whom under our system all political power and sovereignty primarily resides, and through whom such power and sovereignty primarily speaks. It is by that law, and not otherwise, that the legislative, executive, and judicial agencies which it created exercise such political authority as they have been permitted to possess. The Constitution speaks for itself in terms so plain that to misunderstand their import is not rationally possible. ‘We the People of the United States,’ it says, ‘do ordain and establish this Constitution.’ Ordain and establish!

These are definite words of enactment, and without more would stamp what follows with the dignity and character of law. The framers of the Constitution, however, were not content to let the matter rest here, but provided explicitly—‘This Constitution, and the Laws of the United States which shall be made in Pursuance thereof; ... shall be the supreme Law of the Land.’ (Const. art. 6, cl. 2.) The supremacy of the Constitution as law is thus declared without qualification. That supremacy is absolute; the supremacy of a statute enacted by Congress is not absolute but conditioned upon its being made in pursuance of the Constitution. And a judicial tribunal, clothed by that instrument with complete judicial power, and, therefore, by the very nature of the power, required to ascertain and apply the law to the facts in every case or proceeding properly brought for adjudication, must apply the supreme law and reject the inferior stat- [298 U.S. 238, 297] ule whenever the two conflict. In the discharge of that duty, the opinion of the lawmakers that a statute passed by them is valid must be given great weight, Adkins v. Children’s Hospital, 261 U.S. 525, 544, 43 S.Ct. 394, 24 A.L.R. 1238; but their opinion, or the court’s opinion, that the statute will prove greatly or generally beneficial is wholly irrelevant to the inquiry.

“If the time shall ever arrive when, for an object appealing, however strongly, to our sympathies, the dignity of the States shall bow to the dictate of Congress by conforming their legislation thereto, when the power and majesty and honor of those who created shall become subordinate to the thing of their creation, I but feebly utter my apprehensions when I express my firm conviction that we shall see ‘the beginning of the end.’”

4. Each sovereign is on an equal footing with every other sovereign: the People, the States, and the Federal Government. Each of these are legal “persons” and each are equal under the law. The rights of one man are equal to the combined rights of ALL men working in either a state or the federal government. This is the essence of equal protection of the laws which is the foundation of our constitution and our republican system of government. We covered this subject in depth earlier in section 4.3.2 if you would like to review.

[Fourteenth Amendment, Section 1]

“The rights of individuals and the justice due to them, are as dear and precious as those of states. Indeed the latter are founded upon the former: and the great end and object of them must be to secure and support the rights of individuals, or else vain is government.”

[Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 U.S. (2 Dall.) 419, 1 L.Ed. 440 (1793)]

“Arise, O Lord, Do not let man prevail: Let the nations be judged in Your sight. Put them in fear, O Lord, That the nations may know themselves to be but men.”

[Psalm 9:19-20, Bible, NKJV]

“United States government is as sovereign within its sphere as states are within theirs.”

5. No sovereign can serve more than one master above it. To do otherwise would be a conflict of interest and allegiance. By implication, this means that no sovereign can have more than one Creator or one Master:

“No servant can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one and love the other, or else he will be loyal to the one and despise the other. You cannot serve God and mammon.”

6. The main and only purpose of the separation of sovereignties and powers within sovereignties in the above diagram is to protect the individual liberties of the ultimate sovereigns, the people (as individuals) themselves. See U.S. v. Lopez, 514 U.S. 549 (1995):

We start with first principles. The Constitution creates a Federal Government of enumerated powers. See U.S. Const., Art. I, 8. As James Madison wrote, "[t]he powers delegated by the proposed Constitution to the federal government are few and defined. Those which are to remain in the State governments are numerous and indefinite." The Federalist No. 45, pp. 292-293 (C. Rossiter ed. 1961). This constitutionally mandated division of authority "was adopted by the Framers to ensure protection of our fundamental liberties." Gregory v. Ashcroft, 501 U.S. 452, 458 (1991) (internal quotation marks omitted). "Just as the separation and independence of the coordinate branches of the Federal Government serves to prevent the accumulation of excessive power in any one branch, a healthy balance of power between the States and the Federal Government will reduce the risk of tyranny and abuse from either front."

7. A sovereignty is a servant or fiduciary of all sovereignties above it and a master over all those below it. For instance, the states created the federal government so they are sovereign over it and may change it at any time by amending the constitution that created it, or by abolishing it entirely, subject only to their will and voluntary consent.

"A State does not owe its origin to the Government of the United States, in the highest or in any of its branches. It was in existence before it. It derives its authority from the same pure and sacred source as itself: The voluntary and deliberate choice of the people. A State is altogether exempt from the jurisdiction of the Courts of the United States, or from any other exterior authority, unless in the special instances when the general Government has power derived from the Constitution itself."

8. Delegated authority:

8.1. A sovereign can only exercise those powers specifically delegated to it by its Master or Creator in a written voluntary contract called the Constitution. Any other action is specifically forbidden or reserved by implication to the Master and Creator it serves. For instance, the Tenth Amendment reserves police powers to the states. All powers specifically given to the federal government in the federal constitution are therefore reserved to the states or to the people under the Tenth Amendment:

"The Government of the United States is one of delegated powers alone. Its authority is defined and limited by the Constitution. All powers not granted to it by that instrument are reserved to the States or the people."

[United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U.S. 542 (1875)]

"Sovereignty is the right to govern; a nation or State-sovereign is the person or persons in whom that resides. In Europe the sovereignty is generally ascribed to the Prince; here it rests with the people; there, the sovereign actually administers the Government; here, never in a single instance; our Governors are the agents [fiduciaries] of the people, and at most stand in the same relation to their sovereign, in which regents in Europe stand to their sovereigns. Their Princes have personal powers, dignities, and pre-eminences, our rulers have none but official; nor do they partake in the sovereignty otherwise, or in any other capacity, than as private citizens." at 472."

"By the tenth amendment, 'the powers not delegated to the United States by the constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states, respectively, or to the people.' Among the powers thus reserved to the several states is what is commonly called the 'police power,' that inherent and necessary power, essential to the very existence of civil society, and the safeguard of the inhabitants of the state against disorder, disease, poverty, and crime. The police power belonging to the states in virtue of their general sovereignty, said Mr. Justice Story, delivering the judgment of this court, 'extends over all subjects within the territorial limits of the states, and has never been conceded to the United States.' Prigg v. Pennsylvania, 16 Pet. 559, 625. This is well illustrated by the recent adjudications that a statute prohibiting the sale of illuminating oils below a certain fire test is beyond the constitutional power of congress to enact, except so far as it has effect within the United States (as, for instance, in the District of Columbia) and without the limits of any state; but that it is within the constitutional power of a state to pass such a statute, even as to oils manufactured under letters patent from the United States. U.S. v. Dewitt, 9 Wall. 41; Patterson v. Kentucky, 97 U.S. 501, 135 U.S. 100, 128."

power includes all measures for the protection of the life, the health, the property, and the welfare of the inhabitants, and for the promotion of good order and the public morals. It covers the suppression of nuisances, whether injurious to the public health, like unwholesome trades, or to the public morals, like gambling-houses and lottery tickets. Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall, 36, 62, 87; Fertilizing Co. v. Hyde Park, 97 U.S. 659; Phalen v. Virginia, 8 How. 163, 168; Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U.S. 814. This power, being essential to the maintenance of the authority of local government, and to the safety and welfare of the people, is inalienable. As was said by Chief Justice WAITE, referring to earlier decisions to the same effect: "No legislature can bargain away the public health or the public morals. The people themselves cannot do it, much less their servants. The supervision of both these subjects of governmental power is continuing in its nature, and they are to be dealt with as the special exigencies of the moment may require. Government is organized with a view to their preservation, and cannot divest itself of the power to provide for them. For this purpose the largest legislative discretion is allowed, and the discretion cannot be parted with any more than the power itself." Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U.S. 814, 819. See, also, Butchers' Union, etc., Co. v. Crescent City, etc., Co., 111 U.S. 746, 753, 4 S.Sup.Ct.Rep. 652; New Orleans Gas Co. v. Louisiana Light Co., 115 U.S. 650, 672, 6 S.Sup.Ct.Rep. 252; New Orleans v. Houston, 119 U.S. 265, 275, 7 S.Sup.Ct.Rep. 198."

8.2. Agents or fiduciaries within a sovereign must be willing and able at all times to identify the specific laws that give them the authority to act and be constantly aware of the limits of their delegated authority. If they are not, they run the risk of exceeding their delegated authority and injuring the rights of the master(s) they serve. All actions not specifically authorized by law are illegal by implication. All illegal actions by government officials that are outside their written delegated authority and positive law that result in an injury to the master(s) cause the actor to be personally liable for a tort and monetary damages because they are acting outside the authority of law.

"Unlawful. That which is contrary to, prohibited, or unauthorized by law. That which is not lawful. The acting contrary to, or in defiance of the law; disobeying or disregarding the law. Term is equivalent to "without excuse or justification." State v. Noble, 90 N.M. 360, 563 P.2d. 1153, 1157. While necessarily not implying the element of criminality, it is broad enough to include it."

8.3. A sovereignty or human being cannot delegate an authority to a subordinate that they themselves do not ALSO possess.

"Quod meum est sine me auferri non potest."

What is mine [sovereignty in this case] cannot be taken away without my consent"

"Derivativa potestas non potest esse major primitive."

The power [sovereign immunity in this case] which is derived cannot be greater than that from which it is derived"

"Nemo potest facere ob libellum quo mod potest facere per directum."

No one can do that indirectly which cannot be done directly."

"Quod me non possas, nec per alium."

What I cannot do in person, I cannot do through the agency of another."

8.4. No sovereign can delegate to its fiduciaries the authority to do something that is a crime. For instance, if the people cannot murder, rob, or steal from their fellow man, then they certainly cannot delegate that authority to government, which means they cannot delegate to the government the authority to collect direct taxes upon individuals unless the persons paying the tax voluntarily consent to it individually, otherwise it is theft.

"In Calder v. Bull, which was here in 1798, Mr. Justice Chase said, that there were acts which the Federal and State legislatures could not do without exceeding their authority, and among them he mentioned a law which punished a citizen for an innocent act; a law that destroyed or impaired the lawful private [labor] contracts [and labor compensation, e.g. earnings from employment through compelled W-4 withholding] of citizens; a law that made a man judge in his own case; and a law that took the property from A [the worker], and gave it to B [the government or another citizen, such as through social welfare programs]. ‘It is against all reason and justice,’ he added, ‘for a people to intrust a legislature with such powers, and therefore it cannot be presumed that they have it. They may command what is right and prohibit what is wrong; but they cannot change innocence [a “nontaxpayer”] into guilt [a “taxpayer”, by presumption or otherwise], or punish innocence as a crime, or..."
9. The Constitution is a trust document and creates a public trust. Public officers are the “trustees” within that trust and when they abuse their authority, they are executing a “sham trust” for their own personal gain. It is a violation of fiduciary duty for a sovereign or any agent within a sovereign to put a higher priority over its own needs than over any of the masters it serves above it. This is called a conflict of interest and it is against the law. See for instance 18 U.S.C. §208.

"Whatever these Constitutions and laws validly determine to be property, it is the duty of the Federal Government, through the domain of jurisdiction merely Federal, to recognize to be property.

"And this principle follows from the structure of the respective Governments, State and Federal, and their reciprocal relations. They are different agents and trustees of the people of the several States, appointed with different powers and with distinct purposes, but whose acts, within the scope of their respective jurisdictions, are mutually obligatory.

10. Sovereign Immunity: A government sovereign is exempt from the jurisdiction of the courts of any other government sovereign unless it consents to the jurisdiction of the other sovereign or unless the Constitution that established it makes it subject to the jurisdiction in question. This is called sovereign immunity and it is the embodiment of the separation of powers doctrine. The rules for surrendering sovereign immunity through consent are documented in 28 U.S.C. §1605. Here is an example of sovereign immunity of states from the U.S. Supreme Court:

"A State does not owe its origin to the Government of the United States, in the highest or in any of its branches. It was in existence before it. It derives its authority from the same pure and sacred source as itself: The voluntary and deliberate choice of the people. . . . A State is altogether exempt from the jurisdiction of the Courts of the United States, or from any other exterior authority, unless in the special instances when the general Government has power derived from the Constitution itself.”

11. Sovereign immunity also extends to all entities or corporations created by a government sovereign. For instance, the case of Providence Bank v. Billings, 29 U.S. 514 (1830) revealed that the states could not tax a bank corporation created by an act or law of the United States government. The reasoning in that case was that the states could not destroy the federal government because the power to tax necessarily involved the power to destroy.

"The great principle is this: because the constitution will not permit a state to destroy, it will not permit a law involving the power to destroy. In order to show that the case turned entirely on that point, let us suppose that the court had arrived to the conclusion that the bank [The Bank of the United States located in the state of Maryland] was an authorized instrument of government; but that it was not the intention of the constitution to prohibit the states from interfering with those instruments: would it not have been necessary to have decided that the Maryland act was constitutional? Of what importance was it that the bank was an authorized means of power, other than this, that it afforded a key to the meaning of the constitution? If the bank was a legitimate and proper instrument of power, then the constitution intended to protect it. If not, then no protection was intended. The question, whether it was a necessary and proper means, was auxiliary to the great question, whether the constitution intended to shelter it; and when the court arrived to the conclusion that such protection was intended, they interfered not in behalf of the bank, but in behalf of the sanctuary to which it had fled. They decided against the tax; because the subject had been placed beyond the power of the states, by the constitution. They decided, not on account of the subject, but on account of the power that protected it; they decided that a prohibition against destruction was a prohibition against a law involving the power of destruction.”

[Providence Bank v. Billings, 29 U.S. 514 (1830)]

12. A sovereignty may not tax or regulate or control its Creator or grantor, or any sovereignty or agent of that sovereignty above it or at the same level as it, without the explicit and individual and written consent of that sovereign.

12.1. For instance, because churches are agents and creations of God and not the state, then government may not tax churches, and this applies whether or not such churches have a 501(c) designation or not. See Isaiah 45:9-10:

"Woe to him who strives with his Maker! Let the potsherd strive with the potsherds of the earth! Shall the clay say to him who forms it, ‘What are you making?’ Or shall your handiwork say, ‘He has no hands?’ Woe to him who says to his father, ‘What are you begetting?’ Or to the woman, ‘What have you brought forth?’"

[Isaiah 45:9-10, Bible, NKJV]
12.2. Below is a U.S. Supreme Court cite which admits that in many cases, even the U.S. Supreme Court may not compel states:

“This court has declined to take jurisdiction of suits between states to compel the performance of obligations which, if the states had been independent nations, could not have been enforced judicially, but only through the political departments of their governments. Thus, in Kentucky v. Dennison, 24 How. 66, where the state of Kentucky, by her governor [127 U.S. 265, 289] applied to this court, in the exercise of its original jurisdiction, for a writ of mandamus to the governor of Ohio to compel him to surrender a fugitive from justice, this court, while holding that the case was a controversy between two states, decided that it had no authority to grant the writ.”

12.3. Here is an example from the Supreme Court where it is admitted that a state may not be taxed by the federal government:

“In Morcantile Bank v. City of New York, 121 U.S. 138, 162, 7 S.Sup.Ct. 826, this court said: ‘Bonds issued by the state of New York, or under its authority, by its public municipal bodies, are means for carrying on the work of the government, and are not taxable, even by the United States, and it is not a part of the policy of the government which issues them to subject them to taxation for its own purposes.’”

[Pollock v. Farmers’ Loan & Trust Co., 157 U.S. 429 (1895)]

12.4. The Supreme Court also said that states may not tax the federal government:

“While the power of taxation is one of vital importance, retained by the states, not abridged by the grant of a similar power to the government of the Union, but to be concurrently exercised by the two governments, yet even this power of a state is subordinate to, and may be controlled by, the constitution of the United States. That constitution and the laws made in pursuance thereof are supreme. They control the constitutions and laws of the respective states, and cannot be controlled by them. The people of a state give to their government a right of taxing themselves and their property at its discretion. But the means employed by the government of the Union are not given by the people of a particular state, but by the people of all the states; and being given by all, for the benefit of all, should be subjected to that government only which belongs to all. All subjects over which the sovereign power of a state extends are objects of taxation; but those over which in does not extend are, upon the soundest principles, exempt from taxation. The sovereignty of a state extends to everything which exists by its own authority, or is introduced by its permission; but does not extend to those means which are employed by congress to carry into execution powers conferred on that body by the people of the United States. The attempt to use the taxing power of a state on the means employed by the government of the Union, in pursuance of the constitution, is itself an abuse, because it is the usurpation of a power which the people of a single state cannot give. The power to tax involves the power to destroy; the power to destroy may defeat and render useless the power to create; and there is a plain repugnance in conferring on one government a power to control the constitutional measures of another, which other, with respect to those very measures, is declared to be supreme over that which exercises the control. The states have no power, by taxation [117 U.S. 151, 156] or otherwise, to retard, impede, burden, or in any manner control, the operations of the constitutional laws enacted by congress to carry into execution the powers vested in the general government. Such are the outlines, mostly in his own words, of the grounds of the judgment delivered by Chief Justice MARSHALL in the great case of McCulloch v. Maryland, in which it was decided that a statute of the state of Maryland, imposing a tax upon the issue of bills by banks, could not constitutionally be applied to a branch of the Bank of the United States within that state. 4 Wheat. 316, 425-431, 436.

“In Osborn v. Bank of U.S., 9 Wheat. 738, 859-868, that conclusion was reviewed in a very able argument of counsel, and reaffirmed by the court, and a tax laid by the state of Ohio upon a branch of the Bank of the United States was held to be unconstitutional. See, also, Providence Bank v. Billings, 4 Pet. 514, 564. Upon the same grounds, the states have been adjudged to have no power to lay a tax upon stock issued for money borrowed by the United States, or upon property of state banks invested in United States stock. Weston v. City Council of Charleston, 2 Pet. 449, 467; Bank of Commerce v. New York, 2 Black, 620; Bank Tax Case, 2 Wall. 200; Banks v. Mayor, 7 Wall. 16.”

12.5. Here is an example where the Supreme Court said that states may not tax each other’s bonds:

“The question in Bonaparte v. Tax Court, 104 U.S. 592, was whether the registered public debt of one state, exempt from taxation by that state, or actually taxed there, was taxable by another state, when owned by a citizen of the latter, and it was held that there was no provision of the constitution of the United States which prohibited such taxation. The states had not covenanted that this could not be done, whereas, under the fundamental law, as to the power to borrow money, neither the United States, on the one hand, nor the states on the other, can interfere with that power as possessed by each, and an essential element of the sovereignty of each.”

12.6. Finally, the federal government may not tax the employees of states of the union:

“As stated by Judge [157 U.S. 429, 602] Cooley in his work on the Principles of Constitutional Law: `The power to tax, whether by the United States or by the states, is to be construed in the light of and limited by the fact that the states and the Union are inseparable, and that the constitution contemplates the perpetual maintenance of each with all its constitutional powers, unembarrassed and unimpaired by any action of the other. The taxing power of the United States therefore extend to the means or agencies through which the employment of which the states perform their essential functions; since, if these were within its reach, they might be embarrassed, and perhaps wholly paralyzed, by the burdens it should impose. That the power to tax involves the power to destroy; that the power to destroy may defeat and render useless the power to create; that there is a plain repugnancy in conferring on one government a power to control the constitutional measures of another, which, in respect to those very measures, is declared to be supreme over that which exerts the control, are propositions not to be denied.' It is true that taxation does not necessarily and unavoidably destroy, and that to carry it to the idea of destruction would be an abuse not to be anticipated; but the very power would take from the states a portion of their intended liberty of independent action within the sphere of their powers, and would constitute to the state a perpetual danger of embarrassment and possible annihilation. The constitution contemplates no such shackles upon state powers, and by implication forbids them.‘”

13. A sovereignty may tax or regulate any of the entities or sovereignties below it, because it created those subordinate sovereignties. The power to create carries with it the power to destroy as well. See M‘Call v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 431 (1819). Specific examples of sovereignties taxing their fiduciaries or creations below them include:

13.3. A sovereign may only tax the entities that it creates. The U.S. Supreme Court case of U.S. v. Perkins, 163 U.S. 625 (1896) reveals, for instance, that states can only tax corporations that they create.

“Whether the United States are a corporation 'exempt by law from taxation,' within the meaning of the New York statutes, is the remaining question in the case. The court of appeals has held that this exemption was applicable only to domestic corporations declared by the laws of New York to be exempt from taxation. Thus, in Re Prime’s Estate, 136 N.Y. 547, 32 N.E. 1091, it was held that foreign religious and charitable corporations were not exempt from the payment of a legacy tax, Chief Judge Andrews observing (page 360, 136 N.Y., and page 1091, 32 N.E.): 'We are of opinion that a statute of a state granting powers and privileges to corporations must, in the absence of plain indications to the contrary, be held to apply only to corporations created by the state, and over which it has power of visitation and control....' The legislature in such cases is dealing with its own creations, whose rights and obligations it may limit, define, and control. To the same effect are Catlin v. Trustees, 113 N.Y. 133, 20 N.E. 864; White v. Howard, 46 N.Y. 144; In re Balleis’ Estate, 144 N.Y. 132, 38 N.E. 1007; Minot v. Winthrop, 162 Mass. 113, 8 N.E. 512; Dos P. Inh. Tax Law, c. 3, 34. If the ruling of the court of appeals of New York in this particular case be not absolutely binding upon us, we think that, having regard to the purpose of the law to impose a tax generally upon inheritances, the legislature intended to allow an exemption only in favor of such corporations as it had itself created, and which might reasonably be supposed to be the special objects of its solicitude and bounty.

“In addition to this, however, the United States are not one of the class of corporations intended by law to be exempt [163 U.S. 625, 631] from taxation. What the corporations are to which the exemption was intended to apply are indicated by the tax laws of New York, and are confined to those of a religious, educational, charitable, or reformatory purpose. We think it was not intended to apply it to a purely political or governmental corporation, like the United States. Catlin v. Trustees, 113 N.Y. 133, 20 N.E. 864; In re Van Kleeck, 121 N.Y. 701, 75 N.E. 50; Dos P. Inh. Tax Law, c. 3, 34. In re Hamilton, 148 N.Y. 310, 42 N.E. 717, it was held that the execution did not apply to a municipality, even though created by the state itself.” [U.S. v. Perkins, 163 U.S. 625 (1896)]

14. The jurisdiction of each government sovereignty is divided into territorial and subject matter jurisdiction:

14.1. Government sovereignties have exclusive and absolute jurisdiction, sometimes called “plenary power” or “general jurisdiction”, over their own territory and property, and no other sovereignty can exercise jurisdiction over this territory or property without the consent of the sovereign manifested in some form, and usually by an act of the legislature:

“The jurisdiction of the nation within its own territory is [169 U.S. 649, 684] necessarily exclusive and absolute. It is susceptible of no limitation not imposed by itself. Any restriction upon it, deriving validity from an external source, would imply a diminution of its sovereignty to the extent of the restriction, and an investment of that sovereignty to the same extent in that power which could impose such restriction. All exceptions, therefore, to the full and complete power of a nation within its own territories, must be traced up to the consent of the nation itself. They can flow from no other legitimate source. This consent may be either express or implied. In the latter case, it is less determinate, exposed more to the uncertainties of construction; but, if understood, not less obligatory.”
[The Exchange, 7 Cranch 116 (1812)]

'Territory: A part of a country separated from the rest, and subject to a particular jurisdiction. Geographical area under the jurisdiction of another country or sovereign power.

"A portion of the United States not within the limits of any state, which has not yet been admitted as a state of the Union, but is organized with a separate legislature, and with executive and judicial powers appointed by the President."

The requirement for explicit consent is called “comity” in the legal field:

"comity. Courtesy; complaisance; respect; a willingness to grant a privilege, not as a matter of right, but out of deferece and good will. Recognition that one sovereignty allows within its territory to the legislative, executive, or judicial act of another sovereignty, having due regard to rights of its own citizens. Nowell v. Nowell, Tex.Civ.App., 408 S.W.2d 550, 553. In general, principle of "comity" is that courts of one state or jurisdiction will give effect to laws and judicial decisions of another state or jurisdiction, not as a matter of obligation, but out of deference and mutual respect. Brown v. Babbit Ford, Inc., 117 Ariz. 192, 571 P.2d 689, 695. See also Full faith and credit clause."

14.2. States of the union have exclusive territorial jurisdiction within their respective borders over all land and state property not ceded by an act of the legislature of the state to the federal government. They have no jurisdiction outside of their borders except for service of process and discovery, such as subpoenas and summons.

14.3. The federal government has legislative territorial jurisdiction only over: 1. The federal zone; 2. All areas or enclaves within the union states that have been ceded to it by an act of the state legislature under Article 1, Section 8, Clause 17 of the Constitution; 3. Its own territories, possessions, and property, wherever situated; 4. Its own domiciliaries, which includes citizens and residents. Under most circumstances, the federal government has no legislative jurisdiction within states of the Union because the federal constitution reserves “police powers” to the states under the Tenth Amendment.

"It is no longer open to question that the general government, unlike the states, Hammer v. Dagenhart, 247 U.S.
251, 275, 38 S.Ct. 529, 3 A.L.R. 649, Ann.Cas.1918E 724, possesses no inherent power in respect of the internal affairs of the states; and emphatically not with regard to legislation.
[Cartier v. Carter Coal Co., 208 U.S. 238, 56 S.Ct. 855 (1936)]

14.4. Within states of the union, the only type of jurisdiction the federal government can have over areas that are not its territory is subject matter jurisdiction and that jurisdiction must be explicitly identified in the federal Constitution in order to exist at all. There are very few issues over which the federal government has subject matter jurisdiction within FOREIGN states of the Union and income taxes under Subtitles A through C of the Internal Revenue Code is an example of an area where such jurisdiction does not exist. Covetous public dis-servants have systematically tried to hide this fact over the years by obfuscating the Internal Revenue Code and by using illegal IRS extortion to coerce federal judges into violating the Constitutional rights of Americans in the states. Subject matter jurisdiction within states of the Union is limited to the following subjects and no others:

14.4.1. Foreign and interstate commerce. See Constitution, Article 1, Section 8, Clause 3. This includes the following subjects:
14.4.1.1. Taxes on importation, but not exportation. See 26 U.S.C. §7001 and U.S. Constitution, Article 1, Section 9, Clause 3.
Co., 64 CA.4th 597 (1998), 602, 75 C.R.2d. 334, 337--state courts lack jurisdiction in action for malicious prosecution based on defendant’s having filed adversary proceeding in bankruptcy court: “it is for Congress and the federal courts, not state courts, to decide what incentives and penalties shall be utilized in the bankruptcy process”.
§78aa
14.4.1.5. Claims involving activities regulated by federal labor laws. E.g., the Labor Management Reporting and Disclosure Act (19 U.S.C. §401 et seq.) preempts state power to adjudicate claims based on union contracts or union activities, unless of “merely peripheral concern” to the Act. See San Diego Attebery, 180 CA.3d. 288 (1986), 294-295, 224 CR 399, 402—NLRB (rather than federal court) has exclusive jurisdiction over wrongful discharge claim alleging violation of federal labor laws]

14.4.1.6. Certain ERISA actions: Suits for injunctive or other equitable relief against an employer or insurer under the Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA) (But federal and state courts have concurrent jurisdiction of claims for benefits due.). See 29 U.S.C. §1132(e)(1) 14.4.2. Federal property and “employees”. See Constitution Article 4, Section 3, Clause 2.

14.4.3. Frauds involving the mail. See Constitution, Article 1, Section 8, Clause 7.

14.4.4. Treason. See Constitution, Article 4, Section 2, Clause 2.

14.4.5. Patent and copyright claims. See 28 U.S.C. §1338(a) and Constitution, Article 1, Section 8, Clause 8.

14.4.7. Jurisdiction over aliens everywhere in the Union, including in states of the Union. See Chae Chan Ping v.
U.S., 130 U.S. 581 (1889), Kleindienst v. Mandel, 408 U.S. 753 (1972). This source of jurisdiction is the reason that all “taxpayers” are aliens and not “citizens”. See 26 C.F.R. §1.1441-1(c)(3).

14.5. The formation of a state within territory under the exclusive control of the federal government does not affect the legal status of property not within the territory of the new state:

“... This provision authorizes the United States to be and become a land-owner, and prescribes the mode in which the lands may be disposed of, and the title conveyed to the purchaser. Congress is to make the needful rules and regulations upon this subject. The title of the United States can be divested by no other power, by no other means, in no other mode, than that which congress shall sanction and prescribe. It cannot be done by the action of the people or legislature of a territory or state. And he supported this conclusion by a review of all the acts of congress under which states had theretofore been admitted. Mr. Webster said that those precedents demonstrated that ‘the general idea has been, in the creation of a state, that its admission as a state has no effect at all on the property of the United States lying within its limits;’ and that it was settled by the judgment of this court in Pollard v. Hogan, 3 How. 212, 224, ‘that the authority of the United States does so far extend as, by force of its own, Proprio vigore, to exempt the public lands from taxation when new states are created in the territory in which the lands lie.’ 21 Cong. Globe, 31st Cong. 1st Sess. p. 1314; 22 Cong. Globe, pp. 848 et seq., 960, 986, 1004; 5 Webst. Works, 395, 396, 405.”

[Van Brocklin v. State of Tennessee, 117 U.S. 151 (1886)]

15. Jurisdiction of each government sovereignty over subjects or sovereignties underneath it is created by oath of allegiance, which we will discuss later in section 5.2.1.

15.1. In order to preserve their sovereignty, the people at the top of this hierarchy should not swear an oath of allegiance to any government, because by doing so, they come under the jurisdiction of the laws that control mainly government employees and thereby to surrender their sovereignty. See section 5.2.1 for further details and also see Matt. 5:33-37, which says that Christians should not swear an oath to anything.

15.2. Each officer of both the state and federal governments takes an oath of allegiance to support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic. Failure to live up to that oath amounts to perjury of one’s oath, which can result in removal from office.

15.3. If is a violation of the separation of powers doctrine and a conflict of interest to take oaths to TWO masters or to occupy a public office that requires an oath to two different masters or sovereignties. Hence, it is a violation of the Constitutions of most states to simultaneously serve in a public office in the state government as well as the federal government.

CALIFORNIA CONSTITUTION
ARTICLE 7 PUBLIC OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

SEC. 7. A person holding a lucrative office under the United States or other power may not hold a civil office of profit [within the state government]. A local officer or postmaster whose compensation does not exceed 500 dollars per year or an officer in the militia or a member of a reserve component of the armed forces of the United States except where on active federal duty for more than 30 days in any year is not a holder of a lucrative office, nor is the holding of a civil office of profit affected by this military service.

16. Any legislation or ruling by the judicial branch of either a state government or the federal government that breaks down the distinct separation of the powers above is unconstitutional and violates Article 4, Section 4 of the federal constitution, which requires that:
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

“The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a Republican Form of Government, and shall protect each of them against Invasion; and on Application of the Legislature, or of the Executive (when the Legislature cannot be convened) against domestic Violence.”

[U.S. Constitution, Article 4, Section 4]

A republican form of government is based on individual, not collective rights, and those rights cannot be defended or protected from federal “invasion” or encroachment without separation of powers to the maximum extent possible. This concept is called the “Separation of Powers Doctrine”. The implications of this requirement include:

16.1. Federal government may not offer franchises to states of the Union. Only federal “States” defined in 4 U.S.C. §110(d) can be party to federal franchises.

16.2. Federal government may not offer franchises, licenses, or privileges to anyone domiciled in a sovereign state of the Union and protected by the Constitution. Another way of saying this is that those who took an oath to support and defend your rights cannot make a business out of enticing you into surrendering them in exchange for anything, whether real or perceived.

16.3. State governments may not offer franchises, licenses, or privileges to domiciled within the state whose domicile is not on federal territory. Another way of saying this is that those who took an oath to support and defend your rights cannot make a business out of enticing you into surrendering them in exchange for anything, whether real or perceived.

If you would like to know more about the abuse of franchises by malicious public servants to destroy the separation of powers and enslave the people, read:

http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

17. A sovereignty that wants to influence or control a subordinate sovereignty that is not immediately underneath it must do so by using the sovereignty below it as its conduit or agent.

18. In the realm of commerce, both state and federal sovereignties are treated just like any human being and recovery of debts is accomplished within courts of equity.

“...when the United States enters into commercial business it abandons its sovereign capacity and is treated like any other corporation...”

[91 Corpus Juris Secundum (C.J.S.), United States, §4 (2003)]

19. Human beings domiciled inside the federal zone above do not fall into the category of “The People” because the federal zone is not a constitutional republic, but a totalitarian socialist democracy. They ARE NOT parties to the Constitution and therefore are not protected by it. See section 4.8 earlier for further clarification on this subject. “The People” referred to in the diagram instead are those natural persons residing in and born within the 50 union states who claim their correct status as either “state nationals” or “nationals” as described in 8 U.S.C. §1101(a)(21). Persons who claim to be statutory “U.S. citizens” or who are in receipt of government privileges as elected or appointed officers of the government have also forfeited their sovereignty and their position in the above diagram to fall at the same level as corporations and federal “States”.

“Indeed, the practical interpretation put by Congress upon the Constitution has been long continued and uniform to the effect [182 U.S. 244, 279] that the Constitution is applicable to territories acquired by purchase or conquest, only when and so far as Congress shall so direct. Notwithstanding its duty to ‘guarantee to every state in this Union a republican form of government’ (art. 4, 4), by which we understand, according to the definition of Webster, ‘a government in which the supreme power resides in the whole body of the people, and is exercised by representatives elected by them;’ Congress did not hesitate, in the original organization of the territories of Louisiana, Florida, the Northwest Territory, and its subdivisions of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, and Wisconsin and still more recently in the case of Alaska, to establish a form of government bearing a much greater analogy to a British Crown colony than a republican state of America, and to vest the legislative power either in a governor and council, or a governor and judges, to be appointed by the President. It was not until they had attained a certain population that power was given them to organize a legislature by vote of the people. In all these cases, as well as in territories subsequently organized west of the Mississippi, Congress thought it necessary either to extend to Constitution and laws of the United States over them, or to declare that the inhabitants should be entitled to enjoy the right of trial by jury, of bail, and of the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus, as well as other privileges of the bill of rights.’

20. A “national” or a “state national” or a “foreign national” may not sue any state government in a federal court. He can only do so in a court of the state that he is suing or in the Court of Claims. This is because the servant, which is the Federal Government, cannot be greater than its master and creator, the states of the Union. See the Eleventh Amendment, which says:
21. A state sovereignty cannot lawfully consent to the enlargement of the powers of Congress or of any other subordinate sovereignty beyond those clearly enumerated in the Constitution.

"State officials thus cannot consent to the enlargement of the powers of Congress beyond those enumerated in the Constitution."

By implication, officials of states of the Union mentioned in the Constitution, either through the Buck Act or through an Agreement on Coordination of Tax Administration (A.C.T.A.), cannot lawfully extend or consent to extend federal taxing powers into the states upon individuals and bypass the constitutional limits on federal taxing powers found in Article 1, Section 9, Clause 4 and Article, 1, Section 2, Clause 3. Only officials of federal “States” described in 4 U.S.C. §110(d) may do it, and these “States” are not sovereign, but simply subdivisions of the national domain who are called "territories and possessions of the United States”. States of the Union are neither territories nor possessions of the United States.

22. A sovereignty may, under the rules of comity, voluntarily relinquish a portion of its sovereignty to a sovereignty below it but not above it. For example, under the Buck Act, 4 U.S.C. §§105-111, the U.S. government gave jurisdiction to federal “States”, which in fact are only territories of the federal United States (within the U.S. Code), to enforce [federal] State tax statutes within federal enclaves or enclaves located within their exterior boundaries. Many people mistakenly believe that this act gave the same type of authority to states of the Union, but the definition of “State” found in 4 U.S.C. §110(d) confirms that such a “State” is either a territory or possession of the United States, as defined in Title 48 of the U.S. Code. The reason that the federal government cannot consent to the enlargement of powers of states of the Union within its borders is that this would violate the separation of powers doctrine and undermine the obligation of Article 4, Section 4 of the Constitution, which requires Congress to guarantee a “Republican form of government”. Below is the statute that authorizes territories and possessions of the United States to enforce their tax statutes within federal enclaves:

(a) No person shall be relieved from liability for any income tax levied by any State, or by any duly constituted taxing authority therein, having jurisdiction to levy such a tax, by reason of his residing within a Federal area or receiving income from transactions occurring or services performed in such area; and such State or taxing authority shall have full jurisdiction and power to levy and collect such tax in any Federal area within such State to the same extent and with the same effect as though such area was not a Federal area.

(b) The provisions of subsection (a) shall be applicable only with respect to income or receipts received after December 31, 1940.

23. A sovereignty or human being cannot delegate an authority to a subordinate that they themselves do not ALSO possess.

"Quod meum est sine me auferri non potest."
What is mine [sovereignty in this case] cannot be taken away without my consent"

"Derivativa potestas non potest esse major primitive."
The power [sovereign immunity in this case] which is derived cannot be greater than that from which it is derived."

"Nemo potest facere per obliquum quod non potest facere per directum."
No one can do that indirectly which cannot be done directly."

"Quod per me non possum, nec per alium."
What I cannot do in person, I cannot do through the agency of another.”

Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

24. The CREATOR of a thing is the ONLY one who has the power to DEFINE exactly what it means. You should NEVER give the power to define ANYTHING you put on a government form in the hands of a government worker, because they will ALWAYS define it to place you under their jurisdiction and benefit themselves personally. That means you should NEVER submit any government form without defining ANY and EVERY possible “word of art” on the form so that you will not waive any rights or benefit them.

“But when Congress creates a statutory right [a “privilege” in this case, such as a “trade or business”], it clearly has the discretion, in defining that right, to create presumptions, or assign burdens of proof, or prescribe remedies; it may also provide that persons seeking to vindicate that right must do so before particularized tribunals created to perform the specialized adjudicative tasks related to that right.” [Northern Pipeline Const. Co. v. Marathon Pipe Line Co., 458 U.S. 50, 102 S.Ct. 2858 (1983)]

This is VERY important to know, because although Congress CREATES franchises and OFFERS you opportunities to sign up and thereby waive your Constitutional rights, YOU and ONLY YOU have the right to DEFINE all terms on the application to join the franchise. Most such applications are signed under penalty of perjury and constitute testimony of a witness, and therefore it is a criminal offense to threaten or tamper with or advise the submitter to fill out the form in a certain way or else criminal witness tampering has occurred. That means that if you are compelled to sign up for the franchise against your will, you can define all terms on the form so as to:

24.1. Withhold consent.
24.2. Reserve all your constitutional rights and waive none.
24.3. Document the duress and the source of the duress that caused you to apply. Contracts or consent procured under duress are unenforceable.
24.4. Change your status to foreign and alien in relation to the offeror and therefore beyond their civil jurisdiction.
24.5. Turn the application from an acceptance into a COUNTER-OFFER of YOUR OWN franchise. This causes THEIR response to constitute an acceptance of what we call an ANTI-FRANCHISE FRANCHISE. That way, THEY and not YOU become the party waiving rights. The following videos show how this works:

If you would like to learn more about these rules for sovereignty, many of them are described in the wonderful free book on government available on our website below:

Treatise on Government, Joel Tiffany, 1867

Corporations were created by state and federal governments as a matter of public and social policy in order to encourage commerce and prosper everyone in society economically. Any Creator may place any demand on his creation that he wants to, including the requirement to pay a tax. He may even destroy his creation should he choose to do so by excessive taxation or other means. The supreme Court said of this subject the following:

Since “the power to tax is the power to destroy,” then it follows that “the power to create is the power to tax”. This is a logical consequence of the fact that the power to create and the power to destroy must proceed from the same hand. Here is how the U.S. Supreme Court described it:

“What is a Constitution? It is the form of government, delineated by the mighty hand of the people, in which certain first principles of fundamental laws are established. The Constitution is certain and fixed; it contains the permanent will of the people, and is the supreme law of the land; it is paramount to the power of the Legislature, and can be revoked or altered only by the authority that made it. The life-giving principle and the death-doing stroke must proceed from the same hand.”

[VanHorne’s Lessee v. Dorrance, 2 U.S. 304 (1795)]

The power to create and the power to destroy can therefore only be allowed to proceed from the same source. This means that the creation cannot and should not be allowed to destroy or burden its Creator. Therefore, the federal government cannot be allowed to directly tax or embarrass or burden the states of the Union without their consent and through apportionment.

Likewise, the states of the Union cannot be allowed to directly tax or embarrass or burden the sovereign People who created them. Government may therefore tax only what government has created, and the only thing it created were corporations and paper fiat currency. A legal fiction called a government can only destroy those other legal fictions that it creates, but it cannot destroy a flesh and blood man that it did not create:

“Mr. Baily (Texas)...Or suppose I had concurred with him, and had levied a tax on the individual and exempted all corporations and to lay the burden of the government upon the man of flesh and blood, made in the image of his God.”

[44 Cong.Rec. 2447 (1909)]

The definition of the term “person” found throughout the Internal Revenue Code, such as in I.R.C. Sections 6671(b) and 7343 confirms that the only type of “persons” included as the target of most types of enforcement actions are federal corporations incorporated in the District of Columbia, and “public officials” of the United States government who are in receipt of excise taxable privileges of public office. Here are a few examples demonstrating this amazing fact from the I.R.C.:

1. Definition of “person” for the purposes of “assessable penalties” within the Internal Revenue Code means an officer or employee of a corporation:

   TITLE 26 > Subtitle F > CHAPTER 68 > Subchapter B > PART I > Sec. 6671.
   Sec. 6671. - Rules for application of assessable penalties

   (b) Person defined

   The term “person”, as used in this subchapter, includes an officer or employee of a corporation, or a member or employee of a partnership, who as such officer, employee, or member is under a duty to perform the act in respect of which the violation occurs

2. Definition of “person” for the purposes of “miscellaneous forfeiture and penalty provisions” of the Internal Revenue Code means an officer or employer of a corporation or partnership within the federal United States:

   TITLE 26 > Subtitle F > CHAPTER 75 > Subchapter D > Sec. 7343.
   Sec. 7343. - Definition of term “person”

   The term “person” as used in this chapter [Chapter 75] includes an officer or employee of a corporation, or a member or employee of a partnership, who as such officer, employee, or member is under a duty to perform the act in respect of which the violation occurs

3. Definition of “person” or “individual” for the purposes of levy within the Internal Revenue Code means an elected or appointed officer of the United States government or a federal instrumentality:

   26 U.S.C., Subchapter D - Seizure of Property for Collection of Taxes
   Sec. 6331. Levy and distrain

   (a) Authority of Secretary

   If any person liable to pay any tax neglects or refuses to pay the same within 10 days after notice and demand, it shall be lawful for the Secretary to collect such tax (and such further sum as shall be sufficient to cover the expenses of the levy) by levy upon all property and rights to property (except such property as is exempt under section 6224) belonging to such person or on which there is a lien provided in this chapter for the payment of such tax. Levy may be made upon the accrued salary or wages of any officer, employee, or elected official of the United States, the District of Columbia, or any agency or instrumentality of the United States or the District of Columbia, by serving a notice of levy on the employer (as defined in section 3401(d) of such officer, employee, or elected official, if the Secretary makes a finding that the collection of such tax is in jeopardy, notice and demand for immediate payment of such tax may be made by the Secretary and, upon failure or refusal to pay such tax, collection thereof by levy shall be lawful without regard to the 10-day period provided in this section.

Government didn’t create people so it can’t tax people, unless they explicitly and individually consent voluntarily to it by undertaking employment with the federal government as privileged public officials of that government who are voluntarily engaged in a taxable activity called a “trade or business”. In a free country, all just power of government derives from the explicit consent of the people. Any civil action undertaken absent explicit, informed, and voluntary consent is unjust.

“There is a clear distinction in this particular case between an individual and a corporation, and that the latter has no right to refuse to submit its books and papers for an examination at the suit of the State. The individual it imports, as used here, the intent of the Congress in its most natural and usual sense, and that Only God in His sovereignty can create people. That is why the Constitution recognizes in two different places, including Article 1, Section 9, Clause 4 (1:9:4) and Article 1, Clause 2, Section 3 (1:2:3) that direct taxes must be apportioned to the states of the Union and may not be directly levied on the people within states of the Union by the federal government. The federal government servant simply cannot be greater than the sovereign People that it serves in the states of the Union. Violating this requirement is the equivalent of instituting slavery in states of the Union in violation of the Thirteenth Amendment. This is also why:

1. There is no liability statute anywhere in Subtitle A making anyone responsible to pay income taxes.
2. The IRS is not an enforcement agency and does not fall under the Undersecretary for Enforcement within the Dept. of Treasury. See: http://famguardian.org/Subjects/Taxes/Research/TreasOrgHist/Torg1999.pdf
3. I.R.C., Subtitles A and C can only be voluntary and can never be enforced against “nontaxpayers”. Every person who participates must individually consent or the code becomes unenforceable. Note that AFTER they consent, it is no longer voluntary, but BEFORE they do it, it is.
4. All payroll tax withholding is entirely consensual and voluntary and cannot be coerced. See 26 U.S.C. §3402(p) and 26 C.F.R. §31.3401(p)-1.
5. The Supreme Court said that the definition for “income” has always meant corporate profit. This means that natural persons cannot earn “income” as defined by the Constitution unless they are privileged officers of the United States government who voluntarily consent to it by pursuing employment with that government:

“In order, therefore, that the [apportionment] clauses cited from article 1 [§2, cl. 3 and §9, cl. 4] of the Constitution may have proper force and effect …[I]t becomes essential to distinguish between what is an what is not ‘income,’ …according to truth and substance, without regard to form. Congress cannot by any definition it may adopt conclude the matter, since it cannot by legislation alter the Constitution, from which alone, it derives its power to legislate, and within those limitations alone that power can be lawfully exercised … [pg. 207]…After examining dictionaries in common use we find little to add to the succinct definition adopted in two cases arising under the Corporation Tax Act of 1909, Stratton’s Independence v. Howbert, 231 U.S. 399, 415, 34 S.Sup.Ct. 136, 140 [38 L.Ed. 285] and Doyle v. Mitchell Bros. Co., 247 U.S. 179, 185, 38 S.Sup.Ct. 467, 469, 62 L.Ed. 1054…”

“…Whatever difficulty there may be about a precise scientific definition of ‘income,’ it imports, as used here, something entirely distinct from principal or capital either as a subject of taxation or as a measure of the tax; conveying rather the idea of gain or increase arising from corporate activities.

[Doyle v. Mitchell Brothers Co., 247 U.S. 179, 185, 38 S.Ct. 467 (1918)]

“Income has been taken to mean the same thing as used in the Corporation Excise Tax Act of 1909 (36 Stat. 112) in the 16th Amendment, and in the various revenue acts subsequently passed.”

“Our system of taxation is based upon voluntary assessment and payment, not distraint.”

The debates held in Congress in 1909 over the ratification of the Sixteenth Amendment abundantly confirm the above conclusions. They also abundantly confirm the fact that the legislative intent of the Sixteenth Amendment revealed during Congressional debates never included the intent to tax “wages” (in the common understanding, not in the legal sense defined in the Internal Revenue Code) on the labor of human beings. Below is just one cite out the hundreds of pages of Congressional Debates on the Sixteenth Amendment posted on our website at:

Congressional Debates on the Sixteenth Amendment, Family Guardian Fellowship
Senator Daniel of Virginia is debating the Sixteenth Amendment and he offers an excellent analysis of the legal criteria of taxing a corporation:

“There are many things—settled personal views—about this excise tax which we ought to remember, and I propose to state, just as I have stated the difference between corporations and partnerships, what are some of the marked and settled opinions which have had judicial exposition and indorsement as to the power to tax corporations. I will state some of them. I think it will be found settled in the judicial reports of this country, and so well settled that no lawyer familiar with the decisions could hope to disturb the decisions, as follows:

“(1) That a corporate franchise is a distinct subject of taxation, and not as property, but as the exercise of a privilege.

“(2) That it may be taxed by a State or Country which creates it.

“(3) It may be taxed by a State or Territory in which it is exercised, although created by a foreign country.

“(4) It may be taxed by the United States, whether created by the United States or a foreign country or by a State, Territory, or district of the United States.

“(5) The franchise of the corporation may also be taxed by a State, although created by the United States, unless created as part of the governmental machinery of the United States.

“The same or rather the like limitation applies upon corporations created by the States. You may tax any private corporation of a State, but a corporation of the State, that is chartered by the State to perform some function of its government, partakes of a governmental nature, just as one so formed by the United States; and as the one cannot be taxed by the Federal Government, so the other cannot be taxed by the State.”

Below is another Congressional interchange on the legislative intent of the Sixteenth Amendment that clearly shows it was never intended to apply to the wages derived from labor of a flesh and blood human being:

“Mr. Brandegee. Mr. President, what I said was that the amendment exempts absolutely everything that a man makes for himself. Of course it would not exempt a legacy which somebody else made for him and gave to him. If a man’s occupation or vocation—from vocation means nothing but a calling—if his calling or occupation were that of a financier it would exempt everything he made by underwriting and by financial operations in the course of a year that would be the product of his effort. Nothing can be imagined that a man can busy himself with a view of profit which the amendment as drawn would not utterly exempt.”

[50 Cong.Rec. p. 3859, 1913]

Even the U.S. Supreme Court agrees with this conclusion that earnings from labor are not taxable to the person who did the work:

“Every man has a natural right to the fruits of his own labor, is generally admitted; and no other person can rightfully deprive him of those fruits, and appropriate them against his will…”

[The Antelope, 23 U.S. 66, 10 Wheat 66, 6 L.Ed. 268 (1825)]

5.1.2 Nature of the Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A Income Tax

The income tax described in Subtitle A of the Internal Revenue Code is an excise tax upon a “trade or business”, which is defined as “the functions of a public office” within the United States government:

26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(26)

"The term 'trade or business' includes the performance of the functions of a public office.”

A “trade or business” is what the legal profession calls a “franchise”. Participation in all franchises is voluntary, which is why there is no liability statute anywhere in the Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A that makes the average American “liable” to pay the income tax. For details on franchises, see:

Government Instituted Slavery Using Franchises, Form #05.030
A “public office” is a type of employment or agency within the federal government that is created by contract or agreement that you must implicitly or explicitly consent to.

Public office

“Essential characteristics of a ‘public office’: are:
1. Authority conferred by law,
2. Fixed tenure of office, and
3. Power to exercise some of the sovereign functions of government.
4. Key element of such test is that “officer is carrying out a sovereign function.”
5. Essential elements to establish public position as ‘public office’ are:
   a. Position must be created by Constitution, legislature, or through authority conferred by legislature.
   b. Duties and powers must be defined, directly or implied, by legislature or through legislative authority.
   c. Duties must be performed independently without control of superior power other than law, and
   d. Position must have some permanency.”

A person holding a “public office” has a fiduciary duty to the public as a “trustee” of the “public trust”:

“As expressed otherwise, the powers delegated to a public officer are held in trust for the people and are to be exercised in behalf of the government or of all citizens who may need the intervention of the officer. Furthermore, the view has been expressed that all public officers, within whatever branch and whatever level of government, and whatever be their private vocations, are trustees of the people, and accordingly labor under every disability and prohibition imposed by law upon trustees relative to the making of personal financial gain from a discharge of their trusts. That is, a public officer occupies a fiduciary relationship to the political entity on whose behalf he or she serves and owes a fiduciary duty to the public. It has been said that the fiduciary responsibilities of a public officer cannot be less than those of a private individual. Furthermore, it has been stated that any enterprise undertaken by the public official which tends to weaken public confidence and undermine the sense of security for individual rights is against public policy.”

[63C American Jurisprudence 2d, Public Officers and Employees, §247 (1999)]

If you aren’t engaged in a “public office”, then you can’t be the proper subject of the income tax or truthfully or lawfully be described as THE “person”, “individual”, “employee”, “employer”, “citizen”, “resident”, or “taxpayer” described anywhere in the Internal Revenue Code UNLESS you volunteer by signing an agreement. Yes, you could be described by these terms in their ordinary English usage, but you would not fit the legal meanings of these terms as they are defined in the Internal Revenue Code unless you in fact and in deed engage in a “public office” within the United States government through private contract or agreement that you consent to. Within this publication, we put quotes around words like those above when we wish to refer to the legally defined meaning of a term and exclude the common or ordinary definition. In that sense, the Internal Revenue Code constitutes:

1. Private law:

   “Private law. That portion of the law which defines, regulates, enforces, and administers relationships among individuals, associations, and corporations. As used in contradistinction to public law, the term means all that part of the law which is administered between citizen and citizen, or which is concerned with the definition, regulation, and enforcement of rights in cases where both the person in whom the right inheres and the person upon whom the obligation is incident are private individuals. See also Private bill; Special law. Compare Public Law.”

2. Special law:

“Special law. One relating to particular persons or things; one made for individual cases or for particular places or districts; one operating upon a selected class, rather than upon the public generally. A private law. A law is "special" when it is different from others of the same general kind or designed for a particular purpose, or limited in range or confined to a prescribed field of action or operation. A "special law" relates to either particular persons, places, or things or to persons, places, or things which, though not particularized, are separated by any method of selection from the whole class to which the law might, but not such legislation, be applied. Utah Farm Bureau Ins. Co. v. Utah Ins. Guaranty Ass'n, Utah, 564 P.2d. 731, 754. A special law applies only to an individual or a number of individuals out of a single class similarly situated and affected, or to a special locality. Board of County Com'rs of Lemhi County v. Swensen, Idaho, 80 Idaho 198, 327 P.2d. 361, 362. See also Private bill; Public law. Compare General law; Public law.”

3. What the courts call a “franchise”, which is a “privilege” or benefit offered only to those who volunteer:

FRANCHISE. A special privilege conferred by government on individual or corporation, and which does not belong to citizens of country generally of common right. Elliott v. City of Eugene, 135 Or. 108, 294 P. 358, 360.

In England it is defined to be a royal privilege in the hands of a subject.

A "franchise," as used by Blackstone in defining quo warranto, (3 Com. 262 [4th Am. Ed.] 322), had reference to a royal privilege or branch of the king's prerogative subsisting in the hands of the subject, and must arise from the king's grant, or be held by prescription, but today we understand a franchise to be some special privilege conferred by government on an individual, natural or artificial, which is not enjoyed by its citizens in general. State v. Fernandez, 106 Fla. 779, 143 So. 635, 639, 86 A.L.R. 240.

In this country a franchise is a privilege or immunity of a public nature, which cannot be legally exercised without legislative grant. To be a corporation is a franchise. The various powers conferred on corporations are franchises. The execution of a policy of insurance by an insurance company [e.g. Social Insurance/Social Security], and the issuing of a bank note by an incorporated bank [such as a Federal Reserve NOTE], are franchises. People v. Utica Ins. Co., 15 Johns., N.Y., 387, 8 Am.Dec. 243. But it does not embrace the property acquired by the exercise of the franchise. Bridgeport v. New York & N. H. R. Co., 36 Conn. 255, 4 Arrn.Rep. 63.

Not involve interest in land acquired by grantees. Whitbeck v. Funk, 140 Or. 70, 12 P.2d. 1019, 1020 In a popular sense, the political rights of subjects and citizens are franchises, such as the right of suffrage, etc. Pierce v. Emery, 32 N.H. 484; State v. Black Diamond Co., 97 Ohio.St. 24, 119 N.E. 195, 199, L.R.A. 1918E, 352.

Elected Franchise. The right of suffrage: the right or privilege of voting in public elections.

Exclusive Franchise. See Exclusive Privilege or Franchise.

General and Special. The charter of a corporation is its "general" franchise, while a "special" franchise consists in any rights granted by the public to use property for a public use but-with private profit. Lord v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., 194 N.Y. 212, 81 N.E. 443, 22 L.R.A.,N.S., 420.

Personal Franchise. A franchise of corporate existence, or one which authorizes the formation and existence of a corporation, is sometimes called a "personal" franchise, as distinguished from a "property" franchise, which authorizes a corporation so formed to apply its property to some particular enterprise or exercise some special privilege in its employment, as, for example, to construct and operate a railroad. See Sandham v. Nye, 9 Misc.Rep. 541, 30 N.Y.S. 552.

Secondary Franchises. The franchise of corporate existence being sometimes called the "primary" franchise of a corporation, its "secondary" franchises are the special and peculiar rights, privileges, or grants which it may, receive under its charter or from a municipal corporation, such as the right to use the public streets, exact tolls, collect fares, etc. State v. Topeka Water Co., 61 Kan. 547, 60 P. 337; Virginia Canon Toll Road Co. v. People, 22 Colo. 429, 45 P. 398 37 L.R.A. 711. The franchises of a corporation are divisible into (1) corporate or general franchises; and (2) "special or secondary franchises. The former is the franchise to exist as a corporation, while the latter are certain rights and privileges conferred upon existing corporations. Gulf Refining Co. v. Cleveland Trust Co., 166 Miss. 759, 108 So. 138, 160.

Special Franchise. See Secondary Franchises, supra.

4. An “excise tax” or “privilege tax” upon privileges incident to federal contracts, employment, or agency.

"Excises are taxes laid upon the manufacture, sale or consumption of commodities within the country, upon licenses to pursue certain occupations and upon corporate privileges. the requirement to pay such taxes involves the exercise of [220 U.S. 107, 152] privileges, and the element of absolute and unavoidable demand is lacking."

...It is therefore well settled by the decisions of this court that when the sovereign authority has exercised the right to tax a legitimate subject of taxation as an exercise of a franchise or privilege, it is no objection that the measure of taxation is found in the income produced in part from property which of itself considered is nontaxable...

Conceding the power of Congress to tax the business activities of private corporations. the tax must be measured by some standard..."

[Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., 220 U.S. 107 (1911)]

The IRS itself admitted some of the above in a letter documented below:

Hoverdale Letter, SEDM Exhibit #09.023
http://sedm.org/Exhibits/ExhibitIndex.htm

The rules for administering the “trade or business” franchise followed universally by the IRS and the courts are as follows:

1. The method of conveying consent to participate in the “trade or business” franchise is any one or more of the following:

1.1. Signing and submitting SSA Form SS-5, the Application for Social Security. See:

   Resignation of Compelled Social Security Trustee, Form #06.002
   http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

1.2. Signing and submitting IRS Form W-4, which is the WRONG form for persons NOT engaging in the franchise. See:

   Federal and State Tax Withholding Options for Private Employers, Family Guardian Fellowship

1.3. Signing and submitting IRS Form 1040 and assessing yourself with a liability:

   "... the government can collect the tax from a district court suitor by exercising its power of distraint... but we cannot believe that compelling resort to this extraordinary procedure is either wise or in accord with congressional intent. Our system of taxation is based upon VOLUNTARY ASSESSMENT AND PAYMENT, NOT UPON DISTRAINT" [Footnote 43] If the government is forced to use these remedies(distraint) on a large scale, it will affect adversely the taxpayers willingness to perform under our VOLUNTARY assessment system.

1.4. Failing or refusing to rebut false information returns that connect you to the franchise. 26 U.S.C. §6041(a) says that information returns, such as IRS Forms W-2, 1042-S, 1098, and 1099 may ONLY lawfully be filed against those engaged in the “trade or business” franchise. If you don’t rebut these when they are mailed to you, then your failure to rebut is an admission that they are truthful. See:

   1.4.1. Correcting Erroneous Information Returns, Form #04.001
   http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

   1.4.2. Correcting Erroneous IRS Form 1042’s, Form #04.003
   http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

   1.4.3. Correcting Erroneous IRS Form 1098’s, Form #04.004
   http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

   1.4.4. Correcting Erroneous IRS Form 1099’s, Form #04.005
   http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

   1.4.5. Correcting Erroneous IRS Form W-2’s, Form #04.006
   http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

1.5. Failing to rebut the use of federal identifying numbers on government correspondence sent to you, which constitute a “prima facie” license number to participate in “public rights” and franchises. See:

   Wrong Party Notice, Form #07.105
   http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

2. Those who do NOT participate in the “trade or business” franchise:

2.1. Cannot legally withhold on their earnings. Anyone who withholds upon them against their will is committing THEFT for which they are personally liable.

The Great IRS Hoax: Why We Don’t Owe Income Tax, version 4.54

TOP SECRET: For Official Treasury/IRS Use Only (FOUO) Copyright Family Guardian Fellowship http://famguardian.org/
2.2. Do not earn “wages” as legally defined in 26 U.S.C. §3401, 26 C.F.R. §31.3401(a)-3, or 26 C.F.R. §31.3402(p)-1. Therefore, any amount reported on an IRS Form W-2 MUST be ZERO, because it only reports “wages” as legally defined and not as commonly understood or used.

2.3. Have their private rights protected by the Constitution but not by most federal law. Most federal law is “foreign” in relation to them:

“The revenue laws are a code or system in regulation of tax assessment and collection. They relate to taxpayers, and not to nontaxpayers. The latter are without their scope. No procedure is prescribed for nontaxpayers, and no attempt is made to annul any of their rights and remedies in due course of law. With them Congress does not assume to deal, and they are neither of the subject nor of the object of the revenue laws...”

[Long v. Rasmussen, 281 F. 236 (1922)]

“Revenue Laws relate to taxpayers [instrumentalities, officers, employees, and elected officials of the Federal Government] and not to nontaxpayers [American Citizens/American Nationals not subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of the Federal Government]. The latter are without their scope. No procedures are prescribed for nontaxpayers and no attempt is made to annul any of their Rights or Remedies in due course of law.”

[Economy Plumbing & Heating v. U.S., 470 F.2d 585 (1972)]

2.4. May not cite any provision of the franchise agreements codified in the I.R.C. and the Social Security Act because they are “foreign law” in relation to them and their estate is a “foreign estate” pursuant to 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(31)

2.5. If they cite any provision of the franchise agreements, imply their voluntary consent to be bound by them, which is all that is needed to enforce these provisions of “private law”/“contract law” against them.

2.6. Are called the following in the context of federal law:

2.6.1. “nontaxpayers”. See:

Who are “Taxpayers” and Who Needs a “Taxpayer Identification Number”? Form #05.013

http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

2.6.2. “non-resident non-persons”.

2.6.3. “nonresident alien non-persons engaged in a ‘trade or business’” as defined in 26 C.F.R. §1.871-1(b)(1)(i).

See:

Non-Resident Non-Person Position, Form #05.020

http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

2.6.4. “transient foreigners”

2.6.5. “stateless persons” in relation to the federal courts.

2.6.6. “non-citizen nationals”

2.6.7. American Citizens or “citizens of the United States OF AMERICA”. See 1 Stat. 477, in which the U.S. Congress identifies those domiciled in states of the Union as both “American Citizens” and “citizens of the United States OF AMERICA”

3. Those who participate in the “trade or business” franchise:

3.1. Earn “wages” as legally defined in 26 U.S.C. §3401 because they signed a voluntary W-4 “agreement” consenting to call such earnings “wages” pursuant to 26 C.F.R. §31.3401(a)-3, or 26 C.F.R. §31.3402(p)-1. Therefore, any amount reported on an IRS Form W-2 MUST include all earnings subject to the W-4 “agreement”.

3.2. If they are individuals, are called the following in the context of federal law:

3.2.1. “taxpayers”

3.2.2. “public officers”

3.2.3. “employees”

3.2.4. “employers”

3.2.5. “citizens” or “citizens of the United States” as defined in 8 U.S.C. §1401 and 26 C.F.R. §1.1-1(c)-1, where “United States” means either the federal zone or the U.S. government.

3.2.6. “residents of the United States” as defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(b)(1)(A), where “United States” means either the federal zone or the U.S. government.

3.3. If they are federal territories and possessions:

3.3.1. Must enter an Agreement on Coordination of Tax Administration (A.C.T.A.) agreement with the Secretary of the Treasury pursuant to:

3.3.1.1. 26 U.S.C. §6361 through 6365

3.3.1.2. 26 C.F.R. §301.6361-1 through 301.6361-5

3.3.2. Are called “States” within federal law, which are territories and possessions of the United States pursuant to 4 U.S.C. §110(d). See also the following for further examples in state law:
3.4. If they are states of the Union, may not lawfully participate in the federal tax system because they do not fit the definition of “State” found in 4 U.S.C. §110(d). See: [State Income Taxes, Form #05.031]
http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

3.5. May have any provision of the franchise agreements codified in the Internal Revenue Code or the Social Security Act cited against them in court. See: [Why You Shouldn’t Cite Federal Statutes as Authority for Protecting Your Rights] http://famguardian.org/Subjects/Discrimination/CivilRights/DontCiteFederalLaw.htm

3.7. Are acting in a representative capacity on behalf of the federal government pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 17(b) as “officers of a federal corporation”.

4. All franchises and “public rights” RECOGNIZE AND EXTEND but cannot lawfully CREATE NEW federal agency and “public office” to one extent or another, and it is this agency that is the subject of most federal legislation. Nearly all laws passed by Congress pertain only to their own territory, possessions, offices, employees, and franchises. You must therefore become part of the government for them to lawfully regulate the exercise of the franchise.

“The restrictions that the Constitution places upon the government in its capacity as lawmaker, i.e., as the regulator of private conduct, are not the same as the restrictions that it places upon the government in its capacity as employer. We have recognized this in many contexts, with respect to many different constitutional guarantees. Private citizens perhaps cannot be prevented from wearing long hair, but policemen can. Kelley v. Johnson, 425 U.S. 238, 247 (1976). Private citizens cannot have their property searched without probable cause, but in many circumstances government employees can. O’Connor v. Ortega, 480 U.S. 709, 723 (1987) (plurality opinion); id., at 732 (SCALIA, J., concurring in judgment). Private citizens cannot be punished for refusing to provide the government information that may incriminate them, but government employees can be dismissed when the incriminating information that they refuse to provide relates to the performance of their job. Gardner v. Broderick, 392 U.S. 273, 277–278 (1968). With regard to freedom of speech in particular: Private citizens cannot be punished for speech of merely private concern, but government employees can be fired for that reason. Connick v. Myers, 461 U.S. 138, 147 (1983). Private citizens cannot be punished for partisan political activity, but federal and state employees can be dismissed and otherwise punished for that reason. Public Workers v. Mitchell, 530 U.S. 73, 101 (1997); Civil Service Comm’n v. Letter Carriers, 413 U.S. 548, 556 (1973); Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601, 614–617 (1973).” [Rutan v. Republican Party of Illinois, 497 U.S. 62 (1990)]

5. All privileged activities and franchises are usually licensed by the government and cause a surrender of constitutional rights:

5.1. The application of the license causes a surrender of constitutional rights.

“And here a thought suggests itself. As the Meadors, subsequently to the passage of this act of July 20, 1868, applied for and obtained from the government a license or permit to deal in manufactured tobacco, snuff and cigars, I am inclined to be of the opinion that they are, by this their own voluntary act, precluded from assailing the constitutionality of this law, or otherwise controverting it. For the granting of a license or permit-the yielding of a particular privilege-and its acceptance by the Meadors, was a contract, in which it was implied that the provisions of the statute which governed, or in any way affected their business, and all other statutes previously passed, which were in pari materia with those provisions, should be recognized and obeyed by them. When the Meadors sought and accepted the privilege, the law was before them. And can they now impugn its constitutionality or refuse to obey its provisions and stipulations, and so exempt themselves from the consequences of their own acts?” [In re Meador, 1 Abb.U.S. 317, 16 F.Cas. 1294, D.C.Ga. (1869)]
5.2. Those participating in the “benefits” of the franchise have implicitly surrendered the right to challenge any encroachments against their “private rights” or “constitutional rights” that result from said participation:

The Court developed, for its own governance in the cases confessedly within its jurisdiction, a series of rules under which it has avoided passing upon a large part of all the constitutional questions pressed upon it for decision. They are:

[Ashwander v. Tennessee Valley Authority, 297 U.S. 288, 56 S.Ct. 466 (1936)]

6. The Social Security Number is the “de facto” license number which is used to track and control all those who voluntarily engage in public franchises and “public rights”.

6.1. The number is “de facto” rather than “de jure” because Congress cannot lawfully license any trade or business, including a “public office” in a state of the Union, by the admission of no less than the U.S. Supreme Court:

"Thus, Congress having power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes, may, without doubt, provide for granting coasting licenses, to pilots, licenses to trade with the Indians, and any other licenses necessary or proper for the exercise of that great and extensive power; and the same observation is applicable to every other power of Congress, to the exercise of which the granting of licenses may be incident. All such licenses confer authority, and give rights to the licensee.

But very different considerations apply to the internal commerce or domestic trade of the States. Over this commerce and trade Congress has no power of regulation nor any direct control. This power belongs exclusively to the States. No interference by Congress with the business of citizens transacted within a State is warranted by the Constitution, except such as is strictly incidental to the exercise of powers clearly granted to the legislature. The power to authorize a business within a State is plainly repugnant to the exclusive power of the State over the same subject. It is true that the power of Congress to tax is a very extensive power. It is given in the Constitution, with only one exception and only two qualifications. Congress cannot tax exports, and it must impose direct taxes by the rule of apportionment, and indirect taxes by the rule of uniformity. Thus limited, and thus only, it reaches every subject, and may be exercised at discretion. But, it reaches only existing subjects.

Congress cannot authorize a trade or business within a State in order to tax it.

[License Tax Cases, 73 U.S. 402, 18 L.Ed. 497, 5 Wall. 462, 2 A.F.T.R. 2224 (1866)]

6.2. If you don’t want to be in a “privileged” state and suffer the legal disabilities of accepting the privilege, then you CANNOT have or use Social Security Numbers.

7. Use of a Social Security Number constitutes prima facie consent to engage in the franchise. Use of this number constitutes prima facie evidence of implied consent because:

7.1. It is a crime to compel use or disclosure of Social Security Numbers. 42 U.S.C. §408.

7.2. You can withdraw from the franchise lawfully at any time if you don’t want to participate. See SSA Form 521. See:

Resignation of Compelled Social Security Trustee, Form #06.002
http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

7.3. If the government uses the SSN trustee licenses number to communicate with you and you don’t object or correct then, you once again consented to their jurisdiction to administer the program. See:

Wrong Party Notice, Form #07.105
http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

8. The Social Security Number is property of the government and NOT the person using it. 20 C.F.R. §422.103(d).

8.1. The Social Security card confirms this, which says: “Property of the Social Security Administration and must be returned upon request.

8.2. Anything the Social Security Number is attached to becomes “private property” voluntarily donated to a “public use” to procure the benefits of the “public right” or franchise. Only “public officers” on official business may have public property in their possession such as the Social Security Number.

5.1.3 Overview of the Income Taxation Process

This section provides basic background on how the income tax described in Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A functions. This will help you fit the explanation contained in this memorandum into the overall taxation process. Below is a summary of the taxation process:

1. The purpose for establishing governments is mainly to protect private property. The Declaration of Independence affirms this:

2. Government protects private rights by keeping “public [government] property” and “private property” separate and never allowing them to be joined together. This is the heart of the separation of powers doctrine: separation of what is private from what is public with the goal of protecting mainly what is private. See:

Government Conspiracy to Destroy the Separation of Powers, Form #05.023
http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

3. All property BEGINS as private property. The only way to lawfully change it to public property is through the exercise of your unalienable constitutional right to contract. All franchises qualify as a type of contract, and therefore, franchises are one of many methods to lawfully convert PRIVATE property to PUBLIC property. The exercise of the right to contract, in turn, is an act of consent that eliminates any possibility of a legal remedy of the donor against the donee:

Consensus tollit errorem. Consent removes or obviates a mistake. Co. Litt. 126.

Melius est omnia mala pati quam malo concentire. It is better to suffer every wrong or ill, than to consent to it. 3 Co. Inst. 23.

Nemo videtur fraudare eos qui sciant, et consentiunt. One cannot complain of having been deceived when he knew the fact and gave his consent. Dig. 50, 17, 145."

[Bouvier’s Maxims of Law, 1856;
http://famguardian.org/Publications/BouvierMaximsOfLaw/BouviersMaxims.htm]

4. In law, all rights are “property”.

Property. That which is peculiar or proper to any person; that which belongs exclusively to one. In the strict legal sense, an aggregate of rights which are guaranteed and protected by the government. Fulton Light, Heat & Power Co. v. State, 65 Misc.Rep. 263, 121 N.Y.S. 536. The term is said to extend to every species of valuable right and interest. More specifically, ownership; the unrestricted and exclusive right to a thing; the right to dispose of a thing in every legal way, to possess it, to use it, and to exclude every one else from interfering with it. That dominion or indefinite right of use or disposition which one may lawfully exercise over particular things or subjects. The exclusive right of possessing, enjoying, and disposing of a thing. The highest right a man can have to anything; being used to refer to that right which one has to lands or tenements, goods or chattels, which no way depends on another man’s courtesy.
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

The word is also commonly used to denote everything which is the subject of ownership, corporeal or incorporeal, tangible or intangible, visible or invisible, real or personal, everything that has an exchangeable value or which goes to make up wealth or estate. It extends to every species of valuable right and interest, and includes real and personal property, easements, franchises, and incorporeal hereditaments, and includes every invasion of one’s property rights by actionable wrong. Labberton v. General Cas. Co. of America, 53 Wash.2d. 180, 332 P.2d. 250, 252, 254.

Property embraces everything which is or may be the subject of ownership, whether a legal ownership, or whether beneficial, or a private ownership. Davis v. Davis. Tex.Civ.App., 495 S.W.2d. 607, 611. Term includes not only ownership and possession but also the right of use and enjoyment for lawful purposes. Hoffmann v. Kinealy, Mo., 389 S.W.2d. 745, 752.

Property, within constitutional protection, denotes group of rights inhering in citizen’s relation to physical thing, as right to possess, use and dispose of it. Cereghino v. State By and Through State Highway Commission, 230 Or. 439, 370 P.2d. 694, 697.

By protecting your constitutional rights, the government is protecting your PRIVATE property. Your rights are private property because they came from God, not from the government. Only what the government creates can become public property. An example is corporations, which are a public franchise that makes officers of the corporation into public officers.

5. The process of taxation is the process of converting “private property” into a “public use” and a “public purpose”. Below are definitions of these terms for your enlightenment.

Public use. Eminent domain. The constitutional and statutory basis for taking property by eminent domain. For condemnation purposes, “public use” is one which confers some benefit or advantage to the public; it is not confined to actual use by public. It is measured in terms of right of public to use proposed facilities for which condemnation is sought and, as long as public has right of use, whether exercised by one or many members of public, a “public advantage” or “public benefit” accrues sufficient to constitute a public use. Montana Power Co. v. Bokma, Mont., 457 P.2d. 769, 772, 773.

Public use, in constitutional provisions restricting the exercise of the right to take property in virtue of eminent domain, means a use concerning the whole community distinguished from particular individuals. But each and every member of society need not be equally interested in such use, or be personally and directly affected by it; if the object is to satisfy a great public want or exigency, that is sufficient. Ringe Co. v. Los Angeles County, 262 U.S. 700, 43 S.Ct. 689, 692, 67 L.Ed. 1186. The term may be said to mean public usefulness, utility, or advantage, or what is productive of general benefit. It may be limited to the inhabitants of a small or restricted locality, but must be in common, and not for a particular individual. The use must be a needful one for the public, which cannot be surrendered without obvious general loss and inconvenience. A “public use” for which land may be taken defines absolute definition for it changes with varying conditions of society, new appliances in the sciences, changing conceptions of scope and functions of government, and other differing circumstances brought about by an increase in population and new modes of communication and transportation. Katz v. Brandon, 156 Conn. 521, 245 A.2d. 579, 586.

See also Condemnation; Eminent domain.

“Public purpose. In the law of taxation, eminent domain, etc., this is a term of classification to distinguish the objects for which, according to settled usage, the government is to provide, from those which, by the like usage, are left to private interest, inclination, or liberality. The constitutional requirement that the purpose of any tax, police regulation, or particular exertion of the power of eminent domain shall be the convenience, safety, or welfare of the entire community and not the welfare of a specific individual or class of persons [such as, for instance, federal benefit recipients as individuals]. “Public purpose” that will justify expenditure of public money generally means such an activity as will serve as benefit to community as a body and which at same time is directly related function of government. Puck v. Southwestern Bell Tel. & Tel. Co., 215 Tenn. 303, 387 S.W.2d. 789, 794.

The term is synonymous with governmental purpose. As employed to denote the objects for which taxes may be levied, it has no relation to the urgency of the public need or to the extent of the public benefit which is to follow; the essential requisite being that a public service or use shall affect the inhabitants as a community, and not merely as individuals. A public purpose or public business has for its objective the promotion of the public health, safety, morals, general welfare, security, prosperity, and contentment of all the inhabitants or residents within a given political division, as, for example, a state, the sovereign powers of which are exercised to promote such public purpose or public business.” [Black’s Law Dictionary, Sixth Edition, p. 1231, Emphasis added]
6. The federal government has no power of eminent domain within states of the Union. This means that they cannot lawfully convert private property to a public use or a public purpose within the exclusive jurisdiction of states of the Union:

“The United States have no constitutional capacity to exercise municipal jurisdiction, sovereignty, or eminent domain, within the limits of a State or elsewhere, except in cases where it is delegated, and the court denies the faculty of the Federal Government to add to its powers by treaty or compact.”

[Dred Scott v. Sandford, 60 U.S. 393, 508-509 (1856)]

7. The Fifth Amendment prohibits converting private property to a public use or a public purpose without just compensation if the owner does not consent, and this prohibition applies to the Federal government as well as states of the Union. It was made applicable to states of the Union by the Fourteenth Amendment in 1868.

Fifth Amendment - Rights of Persons

No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the Militia, when in actual service in time of War or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offence to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation.

[United States Constitution, Fifth Amendment]

If the conversion of private property to public property is done without the express consent of the party affected by the conversion and without compensation, then the following violations have occurred:

7.1. Violation of the Fifth Amendment “takings clause” above.

8. Because taxation involves converting private property to a public use, public purpose, and public office, then it involves eminent domain if the owner of the property did not expressly consent to the taking:

Eminent domain. The power to take private property for public use by the state, municipalities, and private persons or corporations authorized to exercise functions of public character. Housing Authority of Cherokee National of Oklahoma v. Langley, Okl., 555 P.2d. 1025, 1028. Fifth Amendment, U.S. Constitution.

In the United States, the power of eminent domain is founded in both the federal (Fifth Amend.) and state constitutions. However, the Constitution limits the power to taking for a public purpose and prohibits the exercise of the power of eminent domain without just compensation to the owners of the property which is taken. The process of exercising the power of eminent domain is commonly referred to as “condemnation”, or, “expropriation”:

The right of eminent domain is the right of the state, through its regular organization, to reassert, either temporarily or permanently, its dominion over any portion of the soil of the state on account of public exigency and for the public good. Thus, in time of war or insurrection, the proper authorities may possess and hold any part of the territory of the state for the common safety; and in time of peace the legislature may authorize the appropriation of the same to public purposes, such as the opening of roads, construction of defenses, or providing channels for trade or travel. Eminent domain is the highest and most exact idea of property remaining in the government, or in the aggregate body of the people in their sovereign capacity. It gives a right to resume the possession of the property in the manner directed by the constitution and the laws of the state, whenever the public interest requires it.

See also Adequate compensation; Condemnation; Constructive taking; Damages; Expropriation; Fair market value; Just compensation; Larger parcel; Public use; Take.

9. The Fifth Amendment requires that any taking of private property without the consent of the owner must involve compensation. The Constitution must be consistent with itself. The taxation clauses found in Article 1, Section 8, Clauses 1 and 3 cannot conflict with the Fifth Amendment. The Fifth Amendment contains no exception to the requirement for just compensation upon conversion of private property to a public use, even in the case of taxation. This is why all taxes must be indirect excise taxes against people who provide their consent by applying for a license to engage in the taxed activity: The application for the license constitutes constructive consent to donate the fruits of the activity to a public use, public purpose, and public office.

'Supreme Court's decision in Armstrong v. U.S., in which Court ruled that government could not assert sovereign immunity as defense to suit for recovery under takings clause, did not provide basis for district court to exercise subject matter jurisdiction over embezzlement victim's claim to recover taxes paid by corporation on embezzled funds; decision did not question right of Congress to limit its waiver of immunity to suit to particular court, and Court of Federal Claims had exclusive jurisdiction over victim's claim.'

[Pershing Division of Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette Securities Corp. v. United States, 22 F.3d. 741 (7th Cir. 1994)]

10. There is only ONE condition in which the conversion of private property to public property does NOT require compensation, which is when the owner donates the private property to a public use, public purpose, or public office.

To wit:

"Men are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, 'life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness;' and to 'secure,' not grant or create, these rights, governments are instituted. That property [or income] which a man has honestly acquired he retains full control of, subject to these limitations: First, that he shall not use it to his neighbor's injury, and that does not mean that he must use it for his neighbor's benefit [e.g. SOCIAL SECURITY, Medicare, and every other public "benefit"]; second, that if he devotes it to a public use, he gives to the public a right to control that use; and third, that whenever the public needs require, the public may take it upon payment of due compensation."

11. The following two methods are the ONLY methods involving consent of the owner that may be LAWFULLY employed to convert PRIVATE property into PUBLIC property. Anything else is unlawful and THEFT:

11.1. DIRECT CONVERSION: Owner donates the property by conveying title or possession to the government. 8

11.2. INDIRECT CONVERSION: Owner assumes a PUBLIC status as a PUBLIC officer in the HOLDING of title to the property. 9 All such statuses and the rights that attach to it are creations and property of the government, the use

8 An example of direct conversion would be the process of "registering" a vehicle with the Department of Motor Vehicles in your state. The act of registration constitutes consent by original ABSOLUTE owner to change the ownership of the property from ABSOLUTE to QUALIFIED and to convey legal title to the state and qualified title to himself.

9 An example of a PUBLIC status is statutory "taxpayer" (public office called "trade or business"), statutory "citizen", statutory "driver" (vehicle), statutory voter (registered voters are public officers).
of which is a privilege. The status and all PUBLIC RIGHTS that attach to it conveys a “benefit” for which the status user must pay an excise tax. The tax acts as a rental or use fee for the status, which is government property.

12. You and ONLY you can authorize your private property to be donated to a public use, public purpose, and public office. No third party can lawfully convert or donate your private property to a public use, public purpose, or public office without your knowledge and express consent. If they do, they are guilty of theft and conversion, and especially if they are acting in a quasi-governmental capacity as a “withholding agent” as defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(16).

12.1. A withholding agent cannot file an information return connecting your earnings to a “trade or business” without you actually occupying a “public office” in the government BEFORE you filled out any tax form.

12.2. A withholding agent cannot file IRS Form W-2 against your earnings if you didn’t sign an IRS Form W-4 contract and thereby consent to donate your private property to a public office in the U.S. government and therefore a “public use”.

12.3. That donation process is accomplished by your own voluntary self-assessment and ONLY by that method. Before such a self-assessment, you are a "nontaxpayer" and a private person. After the assessment, you become a "taxpayer" and a public officer in the government engaged in the "trade or business" franchise.

12.4. In order to have an income tax liability, you must complete, sign, and "file" an income tax return and thereby assess yourself:

By assessing yourself, you implicitly give your consent to allow the public the right to control that use of the formerly PRIVATE property donated to a public use.

12.5. IRS Forms W-2 and W-4 are identified as Tax Class 5: Estate and Gift Taxes. Payroll withholdings are GIFTS, not “taxes” in a common law sense.

TITLE 31 > SUBTITLE I > CHAPTER 3 > SUBCHAPTER II > § 321

(1) The Secretary of the Treasury may accept, hold, administer, and use gifts and bequests of property, both real and personal, for the purpose of aiding or facilitating the work of the Department of the Treasury. Gifts and bequests of money and the proceeds from sales of other property received as gifts or bequests shall be deposited in the Treasury in a separate fund and shall be disbursed on order of the Secretary of the Treasury. Property accepted under this paragraph, and the proceeds thereof, shall be used as nearly as possible in accordance with the terms of the gift or bequest.

(2) For purposes of the Federal income, estate, and gift taxes, property accepted under paragraph (1) shall be considered as a gift or bequest to or for the use of the United States.

They don't become “taxes” and assessments until you attach the Form W-2 "gift statement" to an assessment called a IRS Form 1040 and create a liability with your own self-assessment signature. IRS has no delegated authority to convert a “gift” into a “tax”. That is why when you file the IRS Form 1040, you must attach the W-2 gift statement. See section 5.6.16 of this book for details.

12.6. The IRS cannot execute a lawful assessment without your knowledge and express consent because if they didn't have your consent, then it would be criminal conversion and theft. That is why every time they do an assessment, they have to call you into their office and present it to you to procure your consent in what is called an "examination". If you make it clear that you don’t consent and hand them the following, they have to delete the assessment because it's only a proposal. See:

Form #05.011
http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

There is no way other than the above to lawfully create an income tax liability without violating the Fifth Amendment takings clause. If you assess yourself, you consent to become a “public officer” and thereby donate the fruits of your labor as such officer to a public use and a public purpose.

13. The IRS won't admit this, but this in fact is how the de facto unlawful system currently functions:

13.1. You can’t unilaterally “elect” yourself into a “public office”, even if you do consent.

13.2. No IRS form nor any provision in the Internal Revenue Code CREATES any new public offices in the government.

13.3. The I.R.C. only taxes EXISTING public offices lawfully exercised ONLY in the District of Columbia and in all places expressly authorized pursuant to 4 U.S.C. §72.
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

14. Information returns are being abused in effect as “federal election” forms.
14.1. Third parties in effect are nominating private persons into public offices in the government without their knowledge, without their consent, and without compensation. Thus, information returns are being used to impose the obligations of a public office upon people without compensation and thereby impose slavery in violation of the Thirteenth Amendment.

14.2. Anyone who files a false information return connecting a person to the “trade or business”/“public office” franchise who in fact does not ALREADY lawfully occupy a public office in the U.S. government is guilty of impersonating a public officer in criminal violation of 18 U.S.C. §912.

15. The IRS Form W-4 cannot and does not create an office in the U.S. government, but allows EXISTING public officers to elect to connect their private earnings to a public use, a public office, and a public purpose. The IRS abuses this form to unlawfully create public offices, and this abuse of the I.R.C. is the heart of the tax fraud: They are making a system that only applies to EXISTING public offices lawfully exercised in order to:

15.1. Unlawfully create new public offices in places where they are not authorized to exist.

15.2. Destroy the separation of powers between what is public and what is private.

15.4. Destroy the separation of powers between the federal and state governments. Any state employee who participates in the federal income tax is serving in TWO offices, which is a violation of most state constitutions.

15.5. Enslave innocent people to go to work for them without compensation, without recourse, and in violation of the thirteenth amendment prohibition against involuntary servitude. That prohibition, incidentally, applies EVERYWHERE, including on federal territory.

16. The right to control the use of private property donated to a public use to procure the benefits of a franchise is enforced through the Internal Revenue Code, which is the equivalent of the employment agreement for franchisees called “taxpayers”.

The above criteria explains why:

1. You cannot be subject to either employment tax withholding or employment tax reporting without voluntarily signing an IRS Form W-4.

Title 26: Internal Revenue
PART 31—EMPLOYMENT TAXES AND COLLECTION OF INCOME TAX AT SOURCE
Subpart E—Collection of Income Tax at Source
Sec. 31.3402(p)-1 Voluntary withholding agreements.

An employee and his employer may enter into an agreement under section 3402(b) to provide for the withholding of income tax upon payments of amounts described in paragraph (b)(1) of §31.3401(a)—3, made after December 31, 1970. An agreement may be entered into under this section only with respect to amounts which are includible in the gross income of the employee under section 61, and must be applicable to all such amounts paid by the employer to the employee. The amount to be withheld pursuant to an agreement under section 3402(p) shall be determined under the rules contained in section 3402 and the regulations thereunder. See §31.3405(c)—1, Q&A—3 concerning agreements to have more than 20-percent Federal income tax withheld from eligible rollover distributions within the meaning of section 402.

(b) Form and duration of agreement

(2) An agreement under section 3402 (p) shall be effective for such period as the employer and employee mutually agree upon. However, either the employer or the employee may terminate the agreement prior to the end of such period by furnishing a signed written notice to the other. Unless the employer and employee agree to an earlier termination date, the notice shall be effective with respect to the first payment of an amount in respect of which the agreement is in effect which is made on or after the first “status determination date” (January 1, May 1, July 1, and October 1 of each year) that occurs at least 30 days after the date on which the notice is furnished.

If the employee executes a new Form W-4, the request upon which an agreement under section 3402 (p) is based shall be attached to, and constitute a part of, such new Form W-4.
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

(a) In general.

Notwithstanding the exceptions to the definition of wages specified in section 3401(a) and the regulations thereunder, the term “wages” includes the amounts described in paragraph (b)(1) of this section with respect to which there is a voluntary withholding agreement in effect under section 3402(p). References in this chapter to the definition of wages contained in section 3401(a) shall be deemed to refer also to this section (§31.3401(a)–3).

(b) Remuneration for services.

(1) Except as provided in subparagraph (2) of this paragraph, the amounts referred to in paragraph (a) of this section include any remuneration for services performed by an employee for an employer which, without regard to this section, does not constitute wages under section 3401(a). For example, remuneration for services performed by an agricultural worker or a domestic worker in a private home (amounts which are specifically excluded from the definition of wages by section 3401(a) (2) and (3), respectively) are amounts with respect to which a voluntary withholding agreement may be entered into under section 3402(p). See §§31.3401(c)–1 and 31.3401(d)–1 for the definitions of “employee” and “employer”.

2. The courts have no authority under the Declaratory Judgments Act, 28 U.S.C. §2201(a) to declare you a franchisee called a “taxpayer”. You own yourself.

Specifically, Rowen seeks a declaratory judgment against the United States of America with respect to “whether or not the plaintiff is a taxpayer pursuant to, and/or under 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(14).” (See Compl. at 2.) This Court lacks jurisdiction to issue a declaratory judgment “with respect to Federal taxes other than actions brought under section 7428 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986,” a code section that is not at issue in the instant action. See 28 U.S.C. §2201; see also Hughes v. United States, 953 F.2d. 531, 536-537 (9th Cir. 1991) (affirming dismissal of claim for declaratory relief under § 2201 where claim concerned question of tax liability). Accordingly, defendant’s motion to dismiss is hereby GRANTED, and the instant action is hereby DISMISSED. [Rowen v. U.S., 05-3766MMC. (N.D.Cal. 11/02/2005)]

3. The revenue laws may not be cited or enforced against a person who is not a “taxpayer”:

“The revenue laws are a code or system in regulation of tax assessment and collection. They relate to taxpayers, and not to nontaxpayers. The latter are without their scope. No procedure is prescribed for nontaxpayers, and no attempt is made to annul any of their rights and remedies in due course of law. With them Congress does not assume to deal, and they are neither of the subject nor of the object of the revenue laws...”

[Long v. Rasmussen, 281 F. 236 (1922)]

“Revenue Laws relate to taxpayers [officers, employees, instrumentalities, and elected officials of the Federal Government] and not to non-taxpayers [American Citizens/American Nationals not subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of the Federal Government and who did not volunteer to participate in the federal “trade or business” franchise]. The latter are without their scope. No procedures are prescribed for non-taxpayers and no attempt is made to annul any of their Rights or Remedies in due course of law.”

[Economy Plumbing & Heating v. U.S., 470 F.2d. 585 (1972)]

“And by statutory definition, ‘taxpayer’ includes any person, trust or estate subject to a tax imposed by the revenue act. ...Since the statutory definition of ‘taxpayer’ is exclusive, the federal courts do not have the power to create nonstatutory taxpayers for the purpose of applying the provisions of the Revenue Acts...”

[C.I.R v. Trustees of L. Inv. Ass’n., 100 F.2d. 18 (1939)]

All of the above requirements have in common that violating them would result in the equivalent of exercising eminent domain over the private property of the private person without their consent and without just compensation, which the U.S. Supreme Court said violates the Fifth Amendment takings clause:

“To lay, with one hand, the power of the government on the property of the citizen, and with the other to bestow it upon favored individuals to aid private enterprises and build up private fortunes, is none less a robbery because it is done under the forms of law and is called taxation. This is not legislation. It is a decree under legislative forms.

Nor is it taxation. ‘A tax,’ says Webster’s Dictionary, ‘is a rate or sum of money assessed on the person or property of a citizen by government for the use of the nation or State.’ ‘Taxes are burdens or charges imposed by the Legislature upon persons or property to raise money for public purposes.’ Cooley, Const. Lim., 479.

Coulter, J., in Northern Liberties v. St. John’s Church, 13 Pa.St., 104 says, very forcibly, ‘I think the common mind has everywhere taken in the understanding that taxes are a public imposition, levied by authority of the government for the purposes of carrying on the government in all its machinery and operations—that they are

As a consequence of the above considerations, any government officer or employee who does any of the following is unlawfully converting private property to a public use without the consent of the owner and without consideration:

1. Assuming or “presuming” you are a “taxpayer” without producing evidence that you consented to become one. In our system of jurisprudence, a person must be presumed innocent until proven guilty with court admissible evidence. Presumptions are NOT evidence. That means they must be presumed to be a “nontaxpayer” until they are proven with admissible evidence to be a “taxpayer”. See: Presumption: Chief Weapon for Unlawfully Enlarging Federal Jurisdiction, Form #05.017 http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

2. Performing a tax assessment or re-assessment if you haven’t first voluntarily assessed yourself by filing a tax return. See: Why the Government Can’t Lawfully Assess Human Beings With an Income Tax Liability Without Their Consent, Form #05.011 http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

3. Citing provisions of the franchise agreement against those who never consented to participate. This is an abuse of law for political purposes and an attempt to exploit the innocent and the ignorant. The legislature cannot delegate authority to the Executive Branch to convert innocent persons called “nontaxpayers” into franchisees called “taxpayers” without producing evidence of consent to become “taxpayers”.

"In Calder v. Bull, which was here in 1798, Mr. Justice Chase said, that there were acts which the Federal and State legislatures could not do without exceeding their authority, and among them he mentioned a law which punished a citizen for an innocent act; a law that destroyed or impaired the lawful private labor contracts [and labor compensation, e.g. earnings from employment through compelled W-4 withholding] of citizens; a law that made a man judge in his own case; and a law that took the property from A [the worker], and gave it to B [the government or another citizen, such as through social welfare programs]. ‘It is against all reason and justice,’ he added, ‘for a people to intrust a legislature with such powers, and therefore it cannot be presumed that they have done it. They may command what is right and prohibit what is wrong; but they cannot change innocence into guilt, or punish innocence as a crime, or violate the right of an antecedent lawful private employment contract [by compelling W-4 withholding, for instance], or the right of private property. To maintain that a Federal or State legislature possesses such powers [of THEFT!] if they had not been expressly restrained, would, in my opinion, be a political heresy altogether inadmissible in all free republican governments.’ 3 Dall. 388."
[Slaking Fund Cases, 99 U.S. 700 (1878)]

4. Relying on third party information returns that are unsigned as evidence supporting the conclusion that you are a “taxpayer”. These forms include IRS Forms W-2, 1042-S, 1098, and 1099 and they are NOT signed and are inadmissible as evidence under Federal Rule of Evidence 802 because not signed under penalty of perjury. Furthermore, the submitters of these forms seldom have personal knowledge that you are in fact and in deed engaged in a “trade or business” as required by 26 U.S.C. §6041(a). Most people don’t know, for instance, that a “trade or business” includes ONLY “the functions of a public office”.

5.1.4 Citizenship, Domicile, and Tax Status Options

"Dolus versatur generalibus. A deceiver deals in generals. 2 Co. 34."

"Fraus latet in generalibus. Fraud lies hid in general expressions."

Generale nihil certum implicat. A general expression implies nothing certain, 2 Co. 34.

Utbi quid generaliter conceiderit, in est haec exceptio, si non aliquid sit contra jus fasque. Where a thing is concealed generally, this exception arises, that there shall be nothing contrary to law and right. 10 Co. 78.
[Boivier’s Maxims of Law, 1856]

“General expressions”, and especially those relating to geographical terms, franchise statuses, or citizenship, are the biggest source of FRAUD in courtrooms across the country. By “general expressions”, we mean those which:
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

1. The speaker is either not accountable or REFUSES to be accountable for the accuracy or truthfulness or definition of the word or expression.

2. Fail to recognize that there are multiple contexts in which the word could be used.
   2.1. CONSTITUTIONAL (States of the Union).
   2.2. STATUTORY (federal territory).

3. Are susceptible to two or more CONTEXTS or interpretations, one of which the government representative interpreting the context stands to benefit from handsomely. Thus, “equivocation” is undertaken, in which they TELL you they mean the CONSTITUTIONAL interpretation but after receiving your form or pleading, interpret it to mean the STATUTORY context.

   equivocation

   EQUIVOCATION, n. Ambiguity of speech; the use of words or expressions that are susceptible of a double signification. Hypocrites are often guilty of equivocation, and by this means lose the confidence of their fellow men. Equivocation is incompatible with the Christian character and profession.

   Equivocation ("to call by the same name") is an informal logical fallacy. It is the misleading use of a term with more than one meaning or sense (by glossing over which meaning is intended at a particular time). It generally occurs with polysemic words (words with multiple meanings).

   Albeit in common parlance it is used in a variety of contexts, when discussed as a fallacy, equivocation only occurs when the arguer makes a word or phrase employed in two (or more) different senses in an argument appear to have the same meaning throughout.

   It is therefore distinct from (semantic) ambiguity, which means that the context doesn’t make the meaning of the word or phrase clear, and amphiboly (or syntactical ambiguity), which refers to ambiguous sentence structure due to punctuation or syntax.

4. PRESUME that all contexts are equivalent, meaning that CONSTITUTIONAL and STATUTORY are equivalent.

5. Fail to identify the specific context implied on the form.

6. Fail to provide an actionable definition for the term that is useful as evidence in court.

7. Government representatives actively interfere with or even penalize efforts by the applicant to define the context of the terms so that they can protect their right to make injurious presumptions about their meaning.

8. The Bible calls people who engage in equivocation or who try to create confusion “double minded”. They are also equated with “hypocrites”. Here is what God says about double minded people:

   “I hate the double-minded, But I love Your law.”
   [Psalm 119:113, Bible, NKJV]

   “Cleanse your hands, you sinners; and purify your hearts, you double-minded.”
   [James 4:8, Bible, NKJV]

Pictures really are worth a THOUSAND words. There is no better place we know of to use a picture to describe relationship than in the context of citizenship, domicile, and residency. Below is a table summarizing citizenship status v. Tax status. After that, we show a graphical diagram that makes the relationships perfectly clear. Finally, after the graphical diagram, we present a text summary for all the legal rules that govern transitioning between the various citizenship and domicile conditions described. The content of this entire section is available in a single convenient form that you can use at depositions, as attachments to government forms, and in legal proceedings. You can find this form at:

5.1.4.1 The Four “United States”

It is very important to understand that there are THREE separate and distinct CONTEXTS in which the term "United States" can be used, and each has a mutually exclusive and different meaning. These three definitions of “United States” were described by the U.S. Supreme Court in Hooven and Allison v. Evatt, 324 U.S. 652 (1945):

In addition to the above GEOGRAPHICAL context, there is also a legal, non-geographical context in which the term "United States" can be used, which is the GOVERNMENT as a legal entity. Throughout this page and this website, we identify THIS context as "United States*" or "United StatesIV". The only types of "persons" within THIS context are public offices within the national and not state government. It is THIS context in which "sources within the United States" is used for the purposes of "income" and "gross income" within the Internal Revenue Code, as proven by:

FORMS PAGE: http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

The reason these contexts are not expressly distinguished in the statutes by the Legislative Branch or on government forms crafted by the Executive Branch is that they are the KEY mechanism by which:

1. Federal jurisdiction is unlawfully enlarged by abusing presumption, which is a violation of due process of law. See:

Presumption: Chief Weapon for Unlawfully Enlarging Federal Jurisdiction, Form #05.017

DIRECT LINK: http://sedm.org/Forms/05-MemLaw/Presumption.pdf

2. The separation of powers between the states and the national government is destroyed, in violation of the legislative intent of the Constitution. See:

3. A "society of law" is transformed into a "society of men" in violation of Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137 (1803):

"The government of the United States has been emphatically termed a government of laws, and not of men. It will certainly cease to deserve this high appellation, if the laws furnish no remedy for the violation of a vested legal right."

Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137, 163 (1803)

4. Exclusively PRIVATE rights are transformed into public rights in a process we call "invisible eminent domain using presumption and words of art".

5. Judges are unconstitutionally delegated undue discretion and "arbitrary power" to unlawfully enlarge federal jurisdiction. See:

DIRECT LINK: http://sedm.org/Forms/05-MemLaw/FederalJurisdiction.pdf

1. PRESUME that ALL of the four contexts for "United States" are equivalent.
2. PRESUME that CONSTITUTIONAL citizens and STATUTORY citizens are EQUIVALENT under federal law. They are NOT. A CONSTITUTIONAL citizen is a "non-resident " under federal civil law and NOT a STATUTORY "national and citizen of the United States at birth" per 8 U.S.C. §1401. See the document below:

| 4. Use the word “citizenship” in place of "nationality" OR "domicile", and refuse to disclose WHICH of the two they mean in EVERY context. |
| 5. Confuse the POLITICAL/CONSTITUTIONAL meaning of words with the civil STATUTORY context. For instance, asking on government forms whether you are a POLITICAL/CONSTITUTIONAL citizen and then FALSELY PRESUMING that you are a STATUTORY citizen under 8 U.S.C. §1401. |
| 6. Confuse the words “domicile” and "residence" or impute either to you without satisfying the burden of proving that you EXPRESSLY CONSENTED to it and thereby illegally kidnap your civil legal identity against your will. One can have only one "domicile" but many "residences" and BOTH require your consent. See: |
| Why Domicile and Becoming a “Taxpayer” Require Your Consent, Form #05.002 |

| 8. PRESUME that STATUTORY diversity of citizenship under 28 U.S.C. §1332 and CONSTITUTIONAL diversity of citizenship under Article III, Section 2 of the United States Constitution are equivalent. |
| 8.1. STATUTORY and CONSTITUTIONAL diversity are NOT equal and in fact are mutually exclusive. |
| 8.2. The STATUTORY definition of “State” in 28 U.S.C. §1332(e) is a federal territory. The definition of “State” in the CONSTITUTION is a State of the Union and NOT federal territory. |
| 8.3. They try to increase this confusion by dismissing diversity cases where only diversity of RESIDENCE (domicile) is implied, instead insisting on “diversity of CITIZENSHIP” and yet REFUSING to define whether they mean DOMICILE or NATIONALITY when the term “CITIZENSHIP” is invoked. See Lamm v. Bekins Van Lines, Co, 139 F.Supp.2d. 1300, 1314 (M.D. Ala. 2001) (“To invoke removal jurisdiction on the basis of diversity, a notice of removal must distinctly and affirmatively allege each party’s citizenship.”, “[a]lthough ‘citizenship’ and ‘residence’ may be interchangeable terms in common parlance, the existence of citizenship cannot be inferred from allegations of residence alone.”). |
| 9. Refuse to allow the jury to read the definitions in the law and then give them a definition that is in conflict with the statutory definition. This substitutes the JUDGES will for what the law expressly says and thereby substitutes PUBLIC POLICY for the written law. |
| 10. Publish deceptive government publications that are in deliberate conflict with what the statutes define "United States" as and then tell the public that they CANNOT rely on the publication. The IRS does this with ALL of their publications and it is FRAUD. See: |

This kind of arbitrary discretion is PROHIBITED by the Constitution, as held by the U.S. Supreme Court:

> "When we consider the nature and the theory of our institutions of government, the principles upon which they are supposed to rest, and review the history of their development, we are constrained to conclude that they do not mean to leave room for the play and action of purely personal and arbitrary power."
> [Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356, 369, 6 S. Sup.Ct. 1064, 1071]

Thomas Jefferson, our most revered founding father, precisely predicted the above abuses when he said:

> "It has long been my opinion, and I have never shrunk from its expression,.... that the germ of dissolution of our Federal Government is in the constitution of the Federal Judiciary--an irresponsible body (for impeachment is scarcely a scare-crow), working like gravity by night and by day, gaining a little today and a little tomorrow, and advancing its noiseless step like a thief over the field of jurisdiction until all shall be usurped from the States and the government be consolidated into one. To this I am opposed."

"Contrary to all correct example, [the Federal judiciary] are in the habit of going out of the question before them, to throw an anchor ahead and grapple further hold for future advances of power. They are then in fact the corps of sappers and miners, steadily working to undermine the independent rights of the States and to consolidate all power in the hands of that government in which they have so important a freehold estate."

[Thomas Jefferson: Autobiography, 1821. ME 1:121]

"The judiciary of the United States is the subtle corps of sappers and miners constantly working under ground to undermine the foundations of our confederated fabric. They are construing our Constitution from a coordination of a general and special government to a general and supreme one alone. This will lay all things at their feet, and they are too well versed in English law to forget the maxim, 'boni judicis est ampliare jurisdictionem.'"

5.1.4.2 Statutory v. Constitutional contexts

It is very important to understand that there are TWO separate, distinct, and mutually exclusive contexts in which geographical "words of art" can be used at the federal or national level:

1. Constitutional.
2. Statutory.

The purpose of providing a statutory definition of a legal "term" is to supersede and not enlarge the ordinary, common law, constitutional, or common meaning of a term. Geographical words of art include:

1. "State"
2. "United States"
3. "alien"
4. "citizen"
5. "resident"
6. "U.S. person"
The terms "State" and "United States" within the Constitution implies the constitutional states of the Union and excludes federal territory, statutory "States" (federal territories), or the statutory "United States" (the collection of all federal territory). This is an outcome of the separation of powers doctrine. See:

\[ Government Conspiracy to Destroy the Separation of Powers, Form #05.023 \]
http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

The U.S. Constitution creates a public trust which is the delegation of authority order that the U.S. Government uses to manage federal territory and property. That property includes franchises, such as the "trade or business" franchise. All statutory civil law it creates can and does regulate only THAT property and not the constitutional States, which are foreign, sovereign, and statutory "non-resident non-persons" ([Form #05.020] for the purposes of federal legislative jurisdiction.

It is very important to realize the consequences of this constitutional separation of powers between the states and national government. Some of these consequences include the following:

1. Statutory "States" as indicated in 4 U.S.C. §110(d) and "States" in nearly all federal statutes are in fact federal territories and the definition does NOT include constitutional states of the Union.
2. The statutory "United States" defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) and (a)(10) and 4 U.S.C. §110(d) includes federal territory and excludes any land within the exclusive jurisdiction of a constitutional state of the Union.
3. Terms on government forms assume the statutory context and NOT the constitutional context.
4. Domicile is the origin of civil legislative jurisdiction over human beings. This jurisdiction is called "in personam jurisdiction".
5. Since the separation of powers doctrine creates two separate jurisdictions that are legislatively "foreign" in relation to each other, there are TWO types of political communities, two types of "citizens", and two types of jurisdictions exercised by the national government.

"It is clear that Congress, as a legislative body, exercise two species of legislative power; the one, limited as to its objects, but extending all over the Union; the other, an absolute, exclusive legislative power over the District of Columbia. The preliminary inquiry in the case now before the Court, is, by virtue of which of these authorities was the law in question passed?"

6. A human being domiciled in a Constitutional state and born or naturalized anywhere in the Union. These are:
   6.2. A statutory "non-resident non-person" if exclusively PRIVATE and not engaged in a public office.
7. You can be a statutory "nonresident alien" pursuant to 26 U.S.C. §7701(b)(1)(B) and a constitutional or Fourteenth Amendment "Citizen" AT THE SAME TIME. Why? Because the Supreme Court ruled in Hooven and Allison v. Evatt, 324 U.S. 652 (1945), that there are THREE different and mutually exclusive "United States", and therefore THREE types of "citizens of the United States". Here is an example:

"The 1st section of the 14th article [Fourteenth Amendment], to which our attention is more specifically invited, opens with a definition of citizenship—not only citizenship of the United States[* * ], but citizenship of the states. No such definition was previously found in the Constitution, nor had any attempt been made to define it by act of Congress. It had been the occasion of much discussion in the courts, by the executive departments and in the public journals. It had been said by eminent judges that no man was a citizen of the United States[ * ] except as he was a citizen of one of the states composing the Union. Those therefore, who had been born and resided always in the District of Columbia or in the territories [STATUTORY citizens], though within the United States[], were not [CONSTITUTIONAL] citizens."

The Court today holds that the Citizenship Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment has no application to Bellei [an 8 U.S.C. §1401 STATUTORY citizen]. The Court first notes that Afroyim was essentially a case construing the Citizenship Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Since the Citizenship Clause declares that: 'All persons born or naturalized in the United States * * * are citizens of the United States * * *', the Court reasons that the protections against involuntary expatriation declared in Afroyim do not protect all American citizens, but only those 'born or naturalized in the United States.' Afroyim, the argument runs, was naturalized in this country so he was protected by the Citizenship Clause, but Bellei, since he acquired his American citizenship at birth in Italy.
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

The “citizen of the United States” mentioned in the Fourteenth Amendment is a constitutional "citizen" of the United States, and the term "United States" in that context includes states of the Union and excludes federal territory. Hence, you would NOT be a "citizen of the United States" within any federal statute, because all such statutes define "United States" to mean federal territory and EXCLUDE states of the Union. For more details, see:

Why You are a "national", "state national", and Constitutional but not Statutory Citizen, Form #05.006
http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

Your job, if you say you are a "citizen of the United States" or "U.S. citizen" on a government form (a VERY DANGEROUS undertaking!) is to understand that all government forms presume the statutory and not constitutional context, and to ensure that you define precisely WHICH one of the three "United States" you are a "citizen" of, and do so in a way that excludes you from the civil jurisdiction of the national government because domiciled in a "foreign state". Both foreign countries and states of the Union are legislatively "foreign" and therefore "foreign states" in relation to the national government of the United States. The following form does that very carefully:

Affidavit of Citizenship, Domicile, and Tax Status, Form #02.001
http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

Even the IRS says you CANNOT trust or rely on ANYTHING on any of their forms and publications. This is covered in Reasonable Belief About Income Tax Liability, Form #05.007. Hence, if you are compelled to fill out a government form, you have an OBLIGATION to ensure that you define all “words of art” used on the form in such a way that there is no room for presumption, no judicial or government discretion to “interpret” the form to their benefit, and no injury to your rights or status by filling out the government form. This includes attaching the following forms to all tax forms you submit:

9.1. Affidavit of Citizenship, Domicile, and Tax Status, Form #02.001
http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

9.2. Tax Form Attachment, Form #04.201
http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

We started off this document with maxims of law proving that "a deceiver deals in generals". Anyone who refuses to identify the precise context, statutory or constitutional, for EVERY "term of art" they are using in the legal field ABSOLUTELY IS A DECEIVER.

For further details on the TWO separate and distinct contexts for geographical terms, being CONSTITUTIONAL, and STATUTORY, see:

Statutory citizenship is a legal status that designates a person’s domicile while constitutional citizenship is a political status that designates a person’s nationality. Understanding the distinction between nationality and domicile is absolutely critical.

1. Nationality:
   1.1. Is not necessarily consensual or discretionary. For instance, acquiring nationality by birth in a specific place was not a matter of choice whereas acquiring it by naturalization is.
   1.2. Is a political status.
   1.3. Is defined by the Constitution, which is a political document.
   1.4. Is synonymous with being a “national” within statutory law.
   1.5. Is associated with a specific COUNTRY.
   1.6. Is called a “political citizen” or a “citizen of the United States in a political sense” by the courts to distinguish it from a STATUTORY citizen. See Powe v. United States, 109 F.2d. 147 (1940).

2. Domicile:
   2.1. Always requires your consent and therefore is discretionary. See:

   Why Domicile and Becoming a “Taxpayer” Require Your Consent, Form #05.002

   http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

   2.2. Is a civil status.
   2.3. Is not even addressed in the constitution.
   2.4. Is defined by civil statutory law RATHER than the constitution.
   2.5. Is in NO WAY connected with one’s nationality.
   2.6. Is usually connected with the word “person”, “citizen”, “resident”, or “inhabitant” in statutory law.
   2.7. Is associated with a specific COUNTRY and a STATE rather than a COUNTRY.
   2.8. Implies one is a “SUBJECT” of a SPECIFIC MUNICIPAL but not NATIONAL government.

Nationality and domicile, TOGETHER determine the political/CONSTITUTIONAL AND civil/STATUTORY status of a human being respectively. These important distinctions are recognized in Black’s Law Dictionary:

> “nationality – That quality or character which arises from the fact of a person’s belonging to a nation or state.
> Nationality determines the political status of the individual, especially with reference to allegiance; while domicile determines his civil [statutory] status. Nationality arises either by birth or by naturalization.”

The U.S. Supreme Court also confirmed the above when they held the following. Note the key phrase “political jurisdiction”, which is NOT the same as legislative/statutory jurisdiction. One can have a political status of “citizen” under the constitution while NOT being a “citizen” under federal statutory law because not domiciled on federal territory. To have the status of “citizen” under federal statutory law, one must have a domicile on federal territory:

> “This section contemplates two sources of citizenship, and two sources only, birth and naturalization. The persons declared to be citizens are ‘all persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof.’ The evident meaning of these last words is, not merely subject in some respect or degree to the jurisdiction of the United States, but completely subject to their [plural, not singular, meaning states of the Union] political jurisdiction, and owing them [the state of the Union] direct and immediate allegiance. The words relate to the time of birth in the one case, as they do [169 U.S. 649, 725] to the time of naturalization in the other. Persons not thus subject to the jurisdiction of the United States at the time of birth cannot become so afterwards, except by being naturalized, either individually, as by proceedings under the naturalization acts, or collectively, as by the force of a treaty by which foreign territory is acquired."

Notice in the last quote above that they referred to a foreign national born in another country as a “citizen”. THIS is the REAL “citizen” (a domiciled foreign national) that judges and even tax withholding documents are really talking about, rather than the “national” described in the constitution.

CONSTITUTIONAL “Citizens” or “citizens of the United States” in the Fourteenth Amendment rely on the CONSTITUTIONAL context for the geographical term “United States”, which means states of the Union and EXCLUDES federal territory.

“... the Supreme Court in the Insular Cases provides authoritative guidance on the territorial scope of the term "the United States" in the Fourteenth Amendment. The Insular Cases were a series of Supreme Court decisions that addressed challenges to duties on goods transported from Puerto Rico to the continental United States. Puerto Rico, like the Philippines, had been recently ceded to the United States. The Court considered the territorial scope of the term "the United States" in the Constitution and held that this term as used in the uniformity clause of the Constitution was territorially limited to the states of the Union. U.S. Const. art. I, § 8 ("[A]ll Duties, Imposts and Excises shall be uniform throughout the United States." (emphasis added)); see Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U.S. 244, 251, 21 S.Ct. 770, 773, 45 L.Ed. 1088 (1901) ("[I]t can nowhere be inferred that the territories were considered a part of the United States. The Constitution was created by the people of the United States, as a union of States, to be governed solely by representatives of the States; ... In short, the Constitution deals with States, their people, and their representatives."). Rabong, 35 F.3d at 1452. Puerto Rico was merely a territory “appurtenant and belonging to the United States, but not a part of the United States within the revenue clauses of the Constitution." Downes, 182 U.S. at 287, 21 S.Ct. at 787.

The Court’s conclusion in Downes was derived in part by analyzing the territorial scope of the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Amendments. The Thirteenth Amendment prohibits slavery and involuntary servitude “within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction.” U.S. Const. amend. XIII, § 1 (emphasis added). The Fourteenth Amendment states that persons "born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside." U.S. Const. amend XIV, § 1 (emphasis added). The disjunctive "or" in the Thirteenth Amendment demonstrates that "there may be places within the jurisdiction of the United States that are not[ ] part of the United States" to which the Thirteenth Amendment would apply, Downes, 182 U.S. at 251, 21 S.Ct. at 773. Citizenship under the Fourteenth Amendment, however, “is not extended to persons born in any place “subject to [the United States’] jurisdiction,” but is limited to persons born or naturalized in the state of the Union. Downes, 182 U.S. at 251, 21 S.Ct. at 773 (emphasis added); see also id. at 263, 21 S.Ct. at 777 ("[U]n dealing with foreign sovereignties, the term 'United States' has a broader meaning than when used in the Constitution, and includes all territories subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal government, wherever located."). 10

Valmonte v. I.N.S., 136 F.3d. 914 (C.A.2, 1998)]

STATUTORY citizens under 8 U.S.C. §1401, on the other hand, rely on the STATUTORY context for the geographical term “United States”, which means federal territory and EXCLUDES states of the Union:

TITLE 26 > Subtitle F > CHAPTER 79 > Sec. 7701. [Internal Revenue Code]

Sec. 7701, – Definitions

(a) When used in this title, where not otherwise distinctly expressed or manifestly incompatible with the intent thereof—

(9) United States

The term “United States” when used in a geographical sense includes only the States and the District of Columbia.

(10) State

The term “State” shall be construed to include the District of Columbia, where such construction is necessary to carry out provisions of this title.

11 Congress, under the Act of February 21, 1871, ch. 62, § 34, 16 Stat. 419, 426, expressly extended the Constitution and federal laws to the District of Columbia. See Downes, 182 U.S. at 261, 21 S.Ct. at 777 (stating that the “mere cession of the District of Columbia” from portions of Virginia and Maryland did not “take [the District of Columbia] out of the United States or from under the aegis of the Constitution.”).
One CANNOT simultaneously be BOTH a CONSTITUTIONAL citizen AND a STATUTORY citizen at the same time, because the term “United States” has a different, mutually exclusive meaning in each specific context.

“The 1st section of the 14th article [Fourteenth Amendment], to which our attention is more specifically invited, opens with a definition of citizenship—not only citizenship of the United States[][], but citizenship of the states. No such definition was previously found in the Constitution, nor had any attempt been made to define it by act of Congress. It had been the occasion of much discussion in the courts, by the executive departments and in the public journals. It had been said by eminent judges that no man was a citizen of the United States[] except as he was a citizen of one of the states composing the Union. Those therefore, who had been born and resided always in the District of Columbia or in the territories, though within the United States[], were not citizens.

Whether this proposition was sound or not had never been judicially decided.”

The Court today holds that the Citizenship Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment has no application to Bellei ([an 8 U.S.C. §1401 STATUTORY citizen]. The Court first notes that Afroyim was essentially a case construing the Citizenship Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Since the Citizenship Clause declares that: ‘All persons born or naturalized in the United States * * * are citizens of the United States * * *;’ the Court reasons that the protections against involuntary expatriation declared in Afroyim do not protect all American citizens, but only those 'born or naturalized in the United States.' Afroyim, the argument runs, was naturalized in this country so he was protected by the Citizenship Clause, but Bellei, since he acquired his American citizenship at birth in Italy as a foreignborn child of an American citizen, was neither born nor naturalized in the United States and, hence, falls outside the scope of the Fourteenth Amendment guarantees declared in Afroyim. One could hardly call this a generous reading of the great purposes the Fourteenth Amendment was adopted to bring about. While conceding that Bellei is an American citizen, the majority states: ‘He simply is not a Fourteenth-Amendment-first-sentence citizen.’ Therefore, the majority reasons, the congressional revocation of his citizenship is not barred by the Constitution. I cannot accept the Court’s conclusion that the Fourteenth Amendment protects the citizenship of some Americans and not others. [. . .]

The Court today puts aside the Fourteenth Amendment as a standard by which to measure congressional action with respect to citizenship, and substitutes in its place the majority’s own vague notions of ‘fairness.’ The majority takes a new step with the recurring theme that the test of constitutionality is the Court’s own view of what is ‘fair, reasonable, and right.’ Despite the concession that Bellei was admittedly an American citizen, and despite the holding in Afroyim that the Fourteenth Amendment has put citizenship, once conferred, beyond the power of Congress to revoke, the majority today upholds the revocation of Bellei’s citizenship on the ground that the congressional action was not ‘irrational or arbitrary or unfair.’ The majority applies the ‘shock-the-consciousness’ test to uphold, rather than strike, a federal statute. It is a dangerous concept of constitutional law that allows the majority to conclude that, because it cannot say the statute is ‘irrational or arbitrary or unfair,’ the statute must be constitutional.

Since the Court this Term has already downgraded citizens receiving public welfare, Wyman v. James, 400 U.S. 309. 91 S.Ct. 381, 27 L.Ed.2d. 408 (1971), and citizens having the misfortune to be illegitimate, Labine v. Vincent, 401 U.S. 532, 91 S.Ct. 1917, 28 L.Ed.2d 288, I suppose today’s decision downgrading citizens born outside the United States should have been expected. Once again, as in James and Labine, the Court’s opinion makes evident that its holding is contrary to earlier decisions. Concededly, petitioner was a citizen at birth, not by constitutional right, but only through operation of a federal statute.

[Rogers v. Bellei, 401 U.S. 815 (1971)]

STATUTORY citizens are the ONLY type of “citizens” mentioned in the entire Internal Revenue Code, and therefore, the income tax under Subtitles A and C does not apply to the states of the Union.

Title 26: Internal Revenue

PART I—INCOME TAXES

Normal Taxes and Surtaxes

§ 1.1-1 Income tax on individuals.

(c) Who is a citizen.
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

Every person (“person” as used in 26 U.S.C. §6671(b) and 26 U.S.C. §7343, which both collectively are officers or employees of a corporation or a partnership with the United States government) born or naturalized in the United States and subject to its jurisdiction is a citizen. For other rules governing the acquisition of citizenship, see chapters 1 and 2 of title III of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1401–1459). For rules governing loss of citizenship, see sections 349 to 357, inclusive, of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1481–1489). Schneider v. Rusk, (1964) 377 U.S. 163, and Rev.Rul. 70–506, C.B. 1970–2, 1. For rules pertaining to persons who are nationals but not citizens at birth, e.g., a person born in American Samoa, see section 308 of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1408). For special rules applicable to certain expatriates who have lost citizenship with a principal purpose of avoiding certain taxes, see section 877. A foreigner who has filed his declaration of intention of becoming a citizen but who has not yet been admitted to citizenship by a final order of a naturalization court is an alien.

If you look in 8 U.S.C. §§1401–1459, the ONLY type of “citizen” is the one mentioned in 8 U.S.C. §1401, which is a human born in a federal territory not part of a state of the Union. Anyone who claims a state citizen or CONSTITUTIONAL citizen is also a STATUTORY “U.S. citizen” subject to the income tax is engaging in criminal identity theft as documented in the following. They are also criminally impersonating a “U.S. citizen” in violation of 18 U.S.C. §911:

Government Identity Theft, Form #05.046
http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

Domicile and NOT nationality is what imputes a status under the tax code and a liability for tax. Tax liability is a civil liability that attaches to civil statutory law, which in turn attaches to the person through their choice of domicile. When you CHOOSE a domicile, you elect or nominate a protector, which in turn gives rise to an obligation to pay for the civil protection demanded. The method of providing that protection is the civil laws of the municipal (as in COUNTY) jurisdiction that you chose a domicile within.

Later versions of Black’s Law Dictionary attempt to cloud this important distinction between nationality and domicile in order to unlawfully and unconstitutionally expand federal power into the states of the Union and to give federal judges unnecessary and unwarranted discretion to kidnap people into their jurisdiction using false presumptions. They do this by trying to make you believe that domicile and nationality are equivalent, when they are EMPHATICALLY NOT. Here is an example:

“nationality – The relationship between a citizen of a nation and the nation itself, customarily involving allegiance by the citizen and protection by the state; membership in a nation. This term is often used synonymously with citizenship.”

[Black’s Law Dictionary (8th ed. 2004)]

Federal courts regard the term “citizenship” as equivalent to domicile, meaning domicile on federal territory.

“The words “citizen” and citizenship,” however, usually include the idea of domicile, Delaware, L. & W.R. Co. v. Petrowsky, C.C.A.N.Y., 250 F. 354, 357.”

Hence:

1. The term “citizenship” is being stealthily used by government officials as a magic word that allows them to hide their presumptions about your status. Sometimes they use it to mean NATIONALITY, and sometimes they use it to mean DOMICILE.
2. The use of the word “citizenship” should therefore be AVOIDED when dealing with the government because its meaning is unclear and leaves too much discretion to judges and prosecutors.
3. When someone from any government uses the word “citizenship”, you should:
3.1. Tell them NOT to use the word, and instead to use “nationality” or “domicile”.
3.2. Ask them whether they mean “nationality” or “domicile”.
3.3. Ask them WHICH political subdivision they imply a domicile within: federal territory or a constitutional state of the Union.

A failure to either understand or apply the above concepts can literally mean the difference between being a government pet in a legal cage called a franchise, and being a free and sovereign man or woman.

Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

NOTES:
1. Domicile is a prerequisite to having any civil status per Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 17. One therefore cannot be a statutory “alien” under 8 U.S.C. §1101(a)(3) without a domicile on federal territory. Without such a domicile, you are a transient foreigner and neither an “alien” nor a “nonresident alien”.
2. “United States” is described in 8 U.S.C. §1101(a)(38), (a)(36) and 8 C.F.R. §215.1(f) and includes only federal territory and possessions and excludes all Constitutional Union states. This is a product of the separation of powers doctrine that is the heart of the United States Constitution.
3. A “nonresident alien individual” who has made an election under 26 U.S.C. §6013(g) and (h) to be treated as a “resident alien” is treated as a “nonresident alien” for the purposes of withholding under I.R.C. Subtitle C but retains their status as a “resident alien” under I.R.C. Subtitle A. See 26 C.F.R. §1.1441-1(c)(3) for the definition of “individual”, which means “alien”.
4. A “non-person” is really just a transient foreigner who is not “purposefully availing themselves” of commerce within the legislative jurisdiction of the United States on federal territory under the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act, 28 U.S.C. Chapter 97. The real transition from a “NON-person” to an “individual” occurs when one:
   4.1. “Purposefully avails themselves” of commerce on federal territory and thus waives sovereign immunity. Examples of such purposeful availing are the next three items.
   4.2. Lawfully and consensually occupying a public office in the U.S. government and thereby being an “officer and individual” as identified in 5 U.S.C. §2105(a). Otherwise, you are PRIVATE and therefore beyond the civil legislative jurisdiction of the national government.
   4.3. Voluntarily files an IRS Form 1040 as a citizen or resident abroad and takes the foreign tax deduction under 26 U.S.C. §911. This too is essentially an act of “purposeful availing”. Nonresidents are not mentioned in section 911. The upper left corner of the form identifies the filer as a “U.S. individual”. You cannot be an “U.S. individual” without ALSO being an “individual”. All the “trade or business” deductions on the form presume the applicant is a public officer, and therefore the “individual” on the form is REALLY a public officer in the government and would be committing FRAUD if he or she was NOT.
   4.4. VOLUNTARILY fills out an IRS Form W-7 ITIN Application (IRS identifies the applicant as an “individual”) AND only uses the assigned number in connection with their compensation as an elected or appointed public officer. Using it in connection with PRIVATE earnings is FRAUD.
5. What turns a “non-resident” NON-person “into a “nonresident alien individual” is meeting one or more of the following two criteria:
   5.1. Residence/domicile in a foreign country under the residence article of an income tax treaty and 26 C.F.R. §301.7701(b)-(7)(a)(1).
   5.2. Residence/domicile as an alien in Puerto Rico, Guam, the Commonwealth of Northern Mariana Islands, the U.S. Virgin Islands, or American Samoa as determined under 26 C.F.R. §301.7701(b)-(1)(d).
6. All “taxpayers” are STATUTORY “aliens”. The definition of “individual” found in 26 C.F.R. §1.1441-1(c)(3) does NOT include “citizens”. The only occasion where a “citizen” can also be an “individual” is when they are abroad under 26 U.S.C. §911 and interface to the I.R.C. under a tax treaty with a foreign country as an alien pursuant to 26 C.F.R. §301.7701(b)-(7)(a)(1)

   And when he had come into the house, Jesus anticipated him, saying, “What do you think, Simon? From whom do the kings [governments] of the earth [lawfully] take customs or taxes, from their sons [citizens and subjects] or from strangers [“aliens”, which are synonymous with “residents” in the tax code, and exclude “citizens”?]

   Peter said to Him, “From strangers [“aliens”]/residents” ONLY. See 26 C.F.R. §1.1-1(a)(2)(ii).”

NOTES:
1. “United States” is defined as federal territory within 26 U.S.C. §§7701(a)(9) and (a)(10), 7701(a)(39), and 7408(d), and 4 U.S.C. §110(d). It does not include any portion of a Constitutional state of the Union.
2. The “District of Columbia” is defined as a federal corporation but not a physical place, a “body politic”, or a de jure “government” within the District of Columbia Act of 1871, 16 Stat. 419, 426, Sec. 34. See: Corporatization and Privatization of the Government, Form #05-024; http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm.
3. “nationals” of the United States of America who are domiciled outside of federal jurisdiction, either in a state of the Union or a foreign country, are “nationals” but not “citizens” under federal law. They also qualify as “nonresident aliens” under 26 U.S.C. §7701(b)(1)(B) if and only if they are engaged in a public office. See sections 4.12.3 of the Great IRS Hoax. Form #11.302 for details.

4. Temporary domicile in the middle column on the right must meet the requirements of the “Presence test” documented in IRS publications.

5. “FEDERAL ZONE”=District of Columbia and territories of the United States in the above table

6. The term “individual” as used on the IRS Form 1040 means an “alien” engaged in a “trade or business”. All “taxpayers” are “aliens” engaged in a “trade or business”. This is confirmed by 26 C.F.R. §1.1441-1(c)(3), 26 C.F.R. §1.1-1(a)(2)(ii), and 5 U.S.C. §552a(a)(2). Statutory “U.S. citizens” as defined in 8 U.S.C. §1401 are not “individuals” unless temporarily abroad pursuant to 26 U.S.C. §911 and subject to an income tax treaty with a foreign country. In that capacity, statutory “U.S. citizens” interface to the I.R.C. as “aliens” rather than “U.S. citizens” through the tax treaty.
5.1.4.6 Meaning of Geographical “Words of Art”

Because the states of the Union and the federal government are “foreign” to each other for the purposes of legislative jurisdiction, then it also follows that the definitions of terms in the context of all state and federal statutes must be consistent with this fact. The table below was extracted from section 4.9 if you would like to investigate further, and it clearly shows the restrictions placed upon definitions of terms within the various contexts that they are used within state and federal law:

NOTES:

1. The term “Federal state” or “Federal ‘States’” as used above means a federal territory as defined in 4 U.S.C. §110(d) and EXCLUDES states of the Union.
2. The term “Union state” means a “State” mentioned in the United States Constitution and this term EXCLUDES and is mutually exclusive to a federal “State”.

1. Changing domicile from “foreign” on the left to “domestic” on the right can occur EITHER by:
   1.1. Physically moving to the federal zone.
   1.2. Being lawfully elected or appointed to political office, in which case the OFFICE/STATUS has a domicile on federal territory but the OFFICER does not.

2. Statuses on the right are civil franchises granted by Congress. As such, they are public offices within the national government. Those not seeking office should not claim any of these statuses.
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

5.1.4.8 Statutory Rules for Converting Between Various Domicile and Citizenship Options Within Federal Law

The rules depicted above are also described in text form using the list below, if you would like to investigate the above diagram further:

1. “non-resident non-person”: Those with no domicile on federal territory and who are born either in a foreign country, a state of the Union, or within the federal zone. Also called a “nonresident”, “stateless person”, or “transient foreigner”. They are exclusively PRIVATE and beyond the reach of the civil statutory law because:

   1.1. They are not a “person” or “individual” because not engaged in an elected or appointed office.
   1.2. They have not waived sovereign immunity under the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act, 28 U.S.C. Chapter 97.
   1.3. They have not “purposefully” or “consensually” availed themselves of commerce within the exclusive or general jurisdiction of the national government within federal territory.
   1.4. They waived the “benefit” of any and all licenses or permits in the context of a specific transaction or agreement.
   1.5. In the context of a specific business dealing, they have not invoked any statutory status under federal civil law that might connect them with a government franchise, such as “U.S. citizen”, “U.S. resident”, “person”, “individual”, “taxpayer”, etc.
   1.6. If they are demanded to produce an identifying number, they say they don’t consent and attach the following form to every application or withholding document:

   Why It is Illegal for Me to Request or Use a “Taxpayer Identification Number.” Form #04.205
   http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

2. “Aliens” or “alien individuals”: Those born in a foreign country and not within any state of the Union or within any federal territory.

   2.1. “Alien” is defined in 8 U.S.C. §1101(a)(3) as a person who is neither a citizen nor a national.
   2.2. “Alien individual” is defined in 26 C.F.R. §1.1441-1(c)(3)(i).
   2.4. An alien with no domicile in the “United States” is presumed to be a “nonresident alien” pursuant to 26 C.F.R. §1.871-4(b).

3. “Residents” or “resident aliens”: An “alien” or “alien individual” with a legal domicile on federal territory.

   3.2. A “resident alien” is an alien as defined in 8 U.S.C. §1101(a)(3) who has a legal domicile on federal territory that is not part of the exclusive jurisdiction of any state of the Union.
   3.3. An “alien” becomes a “resident alien” by filing IRS Form 1078 pursuant to 26 C.F.R. §1.871-4(c)(ii) and thereby electing to have a domicile on federal territory.

4. “Nonresident aliens”: Those with no domicile on federal territory and who are born either in a foreign country, a state of the Union, or within the federal zone. They serve in a public office in the national but not state government.

   4.2. A “nonresident alien” is defined as a person who is neither a statutory “citizen” pursuant to 26 C.F.R. §1.1-1(c) nor a statutory “resident” pursuant to 26 U.S.C. §7701(b)(1)(A).
   4.3. A person who is a “non-citizen national” pursuant to 8 U.S.C. §1452 and 8 U.S.C. §1101(a)(22)(B) is a “nonresident alien”, but only if they are lawfully engaged in a public office of the national government.

5. “Nonresident alien individuals”: Those who are aliens and who do not have a domicile on federal territory.

   5.1. Status is indicated in block 3 of the IRS Form W-8BEN under the term “Individual”.
   5.2. Includes only nonresidents not domiciled on federal territory but serving in public offices of the national government. “person” and “individual” are synonymous with said office in 26 U.S.C. §6671(b) and 26 U.S.C. §7343.

6. Convertibility between “aliens”, “resident aliens”, and “nonresident aliens”, and “nonresident alien individuals”:

   6.1. A “nonresident alien” is not the legal equivalent of an “alien” in law nor is it a subset of “alien”.
   6.2. IRS Form W-8BEN, Block 3 has no block to check for those who are “non-resident non-persons” but not “nonresident aliens” or “nonresident alien individuals”. Thus, the submitter of this form who is a statutory “nonresident non-person” but not a “nonresident alien” or “nonresident alien individual” is effectively compelled to make an illegal and fraudulent election to become an alien and an “individual” if they do not add a block for “transient foreigner” or “United State Citizen” to the form. See section 5.3 of the following:

   About IRS Form W-8BEN, Form #04.202
   http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

   6.3. 26 U.S.C. §6013(g) and (h) and 26 U.S.C. §7701(b)(4)(B) authorize a “nonresident alien” who is married to a statutory “U.S. citizen” as defined in 26 C.F.R. §1.1-1(c) to make an “election” to become a “resident alien”.

The Great IRS Hoax: Why We Don’t Owe Income Tax, version 4.54

6.4. It is unlawful for an unmarried “state national” pursuant to either 8 U.S.C. §1101(a)(21) to become a “resident alien”. This can only happen by either fraud or mistake.

6.5. An alien may overcome the presumption that he is a “nonresident alien” and change his status to that of a “resident alien” by filing IRS Form 1078 pursuant to 26 C.F.R. §1.871-4(c)(ii) while he is in the “United States”.

6.6. The term “residence” can only lawfully be used to describe the domicile of an “alien”. Nowhere is this term used to describe the domicile of a “state national” or a “nonresident alien”. See 26 C.F.R. §1.871-2.

6.7. The only way a statutory “alien” under 8 U.S.C. §1101(a)(3) can become both a “state national” and a “nonresident alien” at the same time is to be naturalized pursuant to 8 U.S.C. §1421 to have a domicile in either a U.S. possession or a state of the Union.

7. Sources of confusion on these issues:

7.1. One can be a “non-resident non-person” without being an “individual” or a “nonresident alien individual” under the Internal Revenue Code. An example would be a human being born within the exclusive jurisdiction of a state of the Union who is therefore a “state national” pursuant to 8 U.S.C. §1101(a)(21) who does not participate in Social Security or use a Taxpayer Identification Number.

7.2. The term “United States” is defined in the Internal Revenue Code at 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) and (a)(10).

7.3. The term “United States” for the purposes of citizenship is defined in 8 U.S.C. §1101(a)(38).

7.4. Any “U.S. Person” as defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(30) who is not found in the “United States” (District of Columbia pursuant to 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) and (a)(10)) shall be treated as having an effective domicile within the District of Columbia pursuant to 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(39) and 26 U.S.C. §7408(d).

7.5. The term “United States” is equivalent for the purposes of statutory “citizens” pursuant to 26 C.F.R. §1.1-1(c) and “citizens” as used in the Internal Revenue Code. See 26 C.F.R. §1.1-1(c).

7.6. The term “United States” as used in the Constitution of the United States is NOT equivalent to the statutory definition of the term used in:

7.6.1. 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) and (a)(10).

The “United States” as used in the Constitution means the states of the Union and excludes federal territory, while the term “United States” as used in federal statutory law means federal territory and excludes states of the Union.

7.7. A constitutional “citizen of the United States” as mentioned in the Fourteenth Amendment is NOT equivalent to a statutory “national and citizen of the United States” as used in 8 U.S.C. §1401. See:

[Why You are a “national”, “state national”, and Constitutional but not Statutory Citizen, Form #05.006 http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm]

7.8. In the case of jurisdiction over CONSTITUTIONAL aliens only (meaning foreign NATIONALS), the term “United States” implies all 50 states and the federal zone, and is not restricted only to the federal zone. See:

7.8.1. Non-Resident Non-Person Position, Form #05.020 http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

In accord with ancient principles of the international law of nation-states, the Court in The Chinese Exclusion Case, 130 U.S. 581, 609 (1889), and in Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U.S. 698 (1893), held broadly, as the Government describes it, Brief for Appellants 20, that the power to exclude aliens is “inherent in sovereignty, necessary for maintaining normal international relations and defending the country against foreign encroachments and dangers - a power to be exercised exclusively by the political branches of government . . . .” Since that time, the Court’s general reaffirmations of this principle have [408 U.S. 753, 766] been legion.

6. The Court without exception has sustained Congress’ “plenary power to make rules for the admission of aliens and to exclude those who possess those characteristics which Congress has forbidden,” Boutilier v. Immigration and Naturalization Service, 387 U.S. 118, 123 (1967); “[O]ver no conceivable subject is the legislative power of Congress more complete than it is over” the admission of aliens. Oceanic Navigation Co. v. Stranahan, 214 U.S. 320, 339 (1909).

While under our constitution and form of government the great mass of local matters is controlled by local authorities, the United States, in their relation to foreign countries and their subjects or citizens, are one nation, invested with powers which belong to independent nations, the exercise of which can be invoked for the maintenance of its absolute independence and security throughout its entire territory. The powers to declare war, make treaties, suppress insurrection, repel invasion, regulate foreign commerce, secure republican governments to the states, and admit subjects of other nations to citizenship, are all sovereign powers, restricted in their exercise only by the constitution itself and considerations of public policy and justice which control, more or less, the conduct of all civilized nations. As said by this court in the case of Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 264, 413, speaking by the same great chief justice: That the United States form, for many, and for most important purposes, a single nation, has not yet been denied. In war, we are one people. In making peace, we are one. people. In all commercial regulations, we are one and the same people. In many other respects, the American people are one; and the government which is alone capable of controlling and managing their interests in all these respects is the government of the Union. It is their government, and in that character they have no other. America has chosen to [130 U.S. 581, 605] be in many respects, and to many purposes, a nation; and for all these purposes her government is complete; to all these objects, it is competent. The people have declared that in the exercise of all powers given for these objects it is supreme. It can, then, in effecting these objects, legitimately control all individuals or governments within the American territory."

"The power of exclusion of foreigners being an incident of sovereignty belonging to the government of the United States as a part of those sovereign powers delegated by the constitution, the right to its exercise at any time when, in the judgment of the government, the interests of the country require it, cannot be granted away or restrained on behalf of any one. The powers of government are delegated in trust to the United States, and are incapable of transfer to any other parties. They cannot be abandoned or surrendered. Nor can their exercise be hampered, when needed for the public good, by any considerations of private interest. The exercise of these public trusts is not the subject of barter or contract."

[Chae Chan Ping v. U.S., 130 U.S. 581 (1889)]

5.1.4.9 Effect of Federal Franchises and Offices Upon Your Citizenship and Standing in Court

Another important element of citizenship is that artificial entities like corporations are statutory but not Constitutional citizens in the context of civil litigation.

"A corporation is a citizen, resident, or inhabitant of the state or country by or under the laws of which it was created, and of that state or country only."

[19 Corpus Juris Secundum (C.J.S.), Corporations, §886 (2003)]

"A corporation is not a citizen within the meaning of that provision of the Constitution, which declares that the citizens of each State shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens of the several States."

[Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall (U.S.) 168, 19 L.Ed. 357 (1868)]

Likewise, all governments are "corporations" as well.

"Corporations are also of all grades, and made for varied objects: all governments are corporations, created by usage and common consent, or grants and charters which create a body politic for prescribed purposes; but whether they are private, local or general, in their objects, for the enjoyment of property, or the exercise of power, they are all governed by the same rules of law, as to the construction and the obligation of the instrument by which the incorporation is made. One universal rule of law protects persons and property. It is a fundamental principle of the common law of England, that the term freemen of the kingdom, includes 'all persons;' ecclesiastical and temporal, incorporate, politique or natural; it is a part of their magna charta (2 Inst. 4), and is incorporated into our institutions. The persons of the members of corporations are on the same footing of protection as other persons, and their corporate property secured by the same laws which protect that of individuals. 2 Inst. 46-7. 'No man shall be taken,' 'no man shall be diseised,' without due process of law, is a principle taken from magna charta, infused into all our state constitutions, and is made inviolable by the federal government, by the amendments to the constitution."

[Proprietors of Charles River Bridge v. Proprietors of Warren Bridge, 36 U.S. 420 (1837)]

TITLE 28 - JUDICIARY AND JUDICIAL PROCEDURE
PART VI - PARTICULAR PROCEEDINGS
CHAPTER 176 - FEDERAL DEBT COLLECTION PROCEDURE
SUBCHAPTER A - DEFINITIONS AND GENERAL PROVISIONS
Sec. 3002, Definitions

(15) "United States" means -
(A) a Federal corporation;
(B) an agency, department, commission, board, or other entity of the United States; or
(C) an instrumentality of the United States.

"A federal corporation operating within a state is considered a domestic corporation rather than a foreign corporation. The United States government is a foreign corporation with respect to a state."

[19 Corpus Juris Secundum (C.J.S.), Corporations, §883 (2003)]
Those who are acting in a representative capacity on behalf of the national government as “public officers” therefore assume the same status as their employer pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 17(b). To wit:

IV. PARTIES > Rule 17.
Rule 17. Parties Plaintiff and Defendant; Capacity

(b) Capacity to Sue or be Sued.

Capacity to sue or be sued is determined as follows:
(1) for an individual who is not acting in a representative capacity, by the law of the individual’s domicile;
(2) for a corporation/the “United States”, in this case, or its officers on official duty representing the corporation], by the law under which it was organized; and
(3) for all other parties, by the law of the state where the court is located, except that:
(A) a partnership or other unincorporated association with no such capacity under that state’s law may sue or be sued in its common name to enforce a substantive right existing under the United States Constitution or laws; and
(B) 28 U.S.C. §§754 and 959(a) govern the capacity of a receiver appointed by a United States court to sue or be sued in a United States court.

Persons acting in the capacity as “public officers” of the national government are therefore acting as “officers of a corporation” as described in 26 U.S.C. §6671(b) and 26 U.S.C. §7343 and become “persons” within the meaning of federal statutory law.

Because all corporations are “citizens”, then “public officers” also take on the character of “U.S. citizens” in the capacity of their official duties, regardless of what they are as private individuals. It is also interesting to note that IRS correspondence very conspicuously warns the recipient right underneath the return address the following, confirming that they are corresponding with a “public officer” and not a private individual:

Note that all “taxpayers” are “public officers” of the national government, and they are referred to in the Internal Revenue Code as “effectively connected with a trade or business”. The term “trade or business” is defined as “the functions of a public office”:

26 U.S.C. Sec. 7701(a)(26)

“The term ‘trade or business’ includes the performance of the functions of a public office.”

For details on this scam, see:

1. Proof That There Is a “Straw Man”, Form #05.042
   http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm
2. Why Your Government is Either a Thief or You are a “Public Officer” for Income Tax Purposes, Form #05.008
   http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm
The U.S. Supreme Court has also said it is “repugnant to the constitution” for the government to regulate private conduct. The only way you can lawfully become subject to the government’s jurisdiction or the tax laws is to engage in “public conduct” as a “public officer” of the national government.

“...The power to "legislature generally upon" life, liberty, and property, as opposed to the "power to provide modes of redress" against offensive state action, was "repugnant" to the Constitution. Id., at 15. See also United States v. Reese, 92 U.S. 214, 218 (1876); United States v. Harris, 106 U.S. 629, 639 (1883); James v. Bowman, 190 U.S. 127, 139 (1903). Although the specific holdings of these early cases might have been superseded or modified, see, e.g., Heart of Atlanta Motel, Inc. v. United States, 379 U.S. 241 (1964); United States v. Guest, 383 U.S. 745 (1966), their treatment of Congress' §5 power as corrective or preventive, not definitional, has not been questioned.”

Note also that ordinary “employees” are NOT “public officers”:

Treatise on the Law of Public Offices and Officers Book I: Of the Office and the Officer: How Officer Chosen and Qualified Chapter I: Definitions and Divisions
§2 How Office Differs from Employment. A public office differs in material particulars from a public employment, for, as was said by Chief Justice MARSHALL, "although an office is an employment, it does not follow that every employment is an office. A man may certainly be employed under a contract, express or implied, to perform a service without becoming an officer."

"...We apprehend that the term 'office,'" said the judges of the supreme court of Maine, "implies a delegation of a portion of the sovereign power to, and the possession of it by, the person filling the office; and the exercise of such power within legal limits constitutes the correct discharge of the duties of such office. The power thus delegated and possessed may be a portion belonging sometimes to one of the three great departments and sometimes to another; still it is a legal power which may be rightfully exercised, and in its effects it will bind the rights of others and be subject to revision and correction only according to the standing laws of the state. An employment merely has none of these distinguishing features. A public agent acts only on behalf of his principal, the public, whose sanction is generally considered as necessary to give the acts performed the authority and power of a public act or law. And if the act be such as not to require subsequent sanction, still it is only a species of service performed under the public authority and for the public good, but not in the exercise of any standing laws which are considered as roles of action and guardians of rights."

"...The officer is distinguished from the employee," says Judge COOLEY, "in the greater importance, dignity and independence of his position; in being required to take an official oath, and perhaps to give an official bond; in the liability to be called to account as a public offender for misfeasance or non-feasance in office, and usually, though not necessarily, in the tenure of his position. In particular cases, other distinctions will appear which are not general."

The ruse described in this section of making corporations into “citizens” and those who work for them into “public officers” of the government and “taxpayers” started just after the Civil War. Congress has always been limited to taxing things that it creates, which means it has never been able to tax anything but federal and not state corporations. The Supreme Court has confirmed, for instance, that the income tax is and always has been a franchise or privilege tax upon profit of federal corporations.

"Excises are taxes laid upon the manufacture, sale or consumption of commodities within the country, upon licenses to pursue certain occupations and upon corporate privileges, the requirement to pay such taxes involves the exercise of [220 U.S. 107, 152] privileges, and the element of absolute and unavoidable demand is lacking."

...It is therefore well settled by the decisions of this court that when the sovereign authority has exercised the right to tax a legitimate subject of taxation as an exercise of a franchise or privilege, it is no objection that the measure of taxation is found in the income produced in part from property which of itself considered is not taxable...
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

Conceding the power of Congress to tax the business activities of private corporations, the tax must be measured by some standard...”

“The Sixteenth Amendment declares that Congress shall have power to levy and collect taxes on income, “from [273 U.S. 174] whatever source derived,” without apportionment among the several states and without regard to any census or enumeration. It was not the purpose or effect of that amendment to bring any new subject within the taxing power. Congress already had power to tax all incomes. But taxes on incomes from some sources had been held to be “direct taxes” within the meaning of the constitutional requirement as to apportionment. Art. I, § 2, cl. 3, § 9, cl. 4; Pollock v. Farmers’ Loan & Trust Co., 158 U.S. 601. The Amendment relieved from that requirement, and obliterated the distinction in that respect between taxes on income that are direct taxes and those that are not, and so put on the same basis all incomes “from whatever source derived.” Brushaber v. Union P. R. Co., 240 U.S. 1, 17. “Income” has been taken to mean the same thing as used in the Corporation Excise Tax Act of 1909, in the Sixteenth Amendment, and in the various revenue acts subsequently passed. Southern Pacific Co. v. Lowe, 247 U.S. 330, 335; Merchants’ L. & T. Co. v. Smietanka, 255 U.S. 599, 219. After full consideration, this Court declared that income may be defined as gain derived from capital, from labor, or from both combined, including profit gained through sale or conversion of capital. Stratton’s Independence v. Howbert, 231 U.S. 399, 415; Doyle v. Mitchell Brothers Co., 247 U.S. 179, 185; Eisner v. Macomber, 252 U.S. 189, 207. And that definition has been adhered to and applied repeatedly. See, e.g., Merchants’ L. & T. Co. v. Smietanka, supra; 518; Goodrich v. Edwards, 255 U.S. 527, 535; United States v. Phellis, 257 U.S. 156, 169; Miles v. Safe Deposit Co., 259 U.S. 247, 252-253; United States v. Supplee-Biddle Co., 265 U.S. 189, 194; Irwin v. Gavit, 268 U.S. 161, 167; Edwards v. Cuba Railroad, 268 U.S. 628, 633. In determining what constitutes income, substance rather than form is to be given controlling weight. Eisner v. Macomber, supra, 206, [271 U.S. 175]”

To create and expand a national income tax, the federal government therefore had to make the municipal government of the District of Columbia into a federal corporation in 1871 and then impose an income tax upon the officers of the corporation ("public officers") by making all of their earnings from the office into "profit" and "gross income" subject to excise and income taxes. The incorporation of the District of Columbia was done to District of Columbia in 1871. The incorporation of the District of Columbia was done to

2. The License Tax Cases was heard in 1866 by the Supreme Court, in which the Supreme Court said that Congress could not license a trade or business in a state in order to tax it, referring to the civil war tax enacted in 1862. See:
   License Tax Cases, 72 U.S. 462 (1866)

3. The Fourteenth Amendment was ratified in 1868. This Amendment uses the phrase “citizens of the United States” in order to confuse it with statutory “citizens of the United States” domiciled on federal territory in the exclusive jurisdiction of Congress.

4. The civil war income tax was repealed in 1871. See:
   4.1. 17 Stat. 401
   4.2. Great IRS Hoax, Form #11.302, Section 6.5.20.

5. Congress incorporated the District of Columbia in 1871. The incorporation of the District of Columbia was done to expand the income tax by taxing the government’s own “public officers” as a federal corporation. See the following:

NOTES:

1. "United States" is described in 8 U.S.C. §1101(a)(38), (a)(36) and 8 C.F.R. §215.1(f) and includes only federal territory and possessions and excludes all Constitutional Union states. This is a product of the separation of powers doctrine that is the heart of the United States Constitution.

2. E-Verify CANNOT be used by those who are NOT lawfully engaged in a public office in the U.S. government at the time of making application. Its use is VOLUNTARY and cannot be compelled. Those who use it MUST have a Social Security Number or Taxpayer Identification Number and it is ILLEGAL to apply for, use, or disclose said number for those not lawfully engaged in a public office in the U.S. government at the time of application. 5.1.4.11.2 How to describe your citizenship on government forms

This section provides some pointers on how to describe your citizenship status on government forms in order to avoid being confused with a someone who has a domicile on federal territory and therefore no Constitutional rights. Below is a summary of how we recommend protecting yourself from the prejudicial presumptions of others about your citizenship status:

1. Keep in mind the following facts about all government forms:
   1.1. Government forms ALWAYS imply the LEGAL/STATUTORY rather than POLITICAL/CONSTITUTIONAL status of the party in the context of all franchises, including income taxes and social security.
   1.2. "Alien" on government forms always means a person born or naturalized in a foreign country.
   1.3. The Internal Revenue Code does NOT define the term “nonresident alien”. The closest thing to a definition is that found in 26 U.S.C. §7701(b)(1)(B), which defines what it ISN’T, but NOT what it IS. If you look on IRS Form W-8BEN, Block 3, you can see that there are many different types of entities that can be nonresident aliens, none of which are EXPRESSLY included in the definition at 26 U.S.C. §7701(b)(1)(B). It is therefore IMPOSSIBLE to conclude based on any vague definition in the Internal Revenue Code that a specific person IS or IS NOT a "nonresident alien.”
   1.4. On tax forms, the term “nonresident alien” is NOT a subset of the term “alien”, but rather a SUPERSET. It includes both FOREIGN nationals domiciled in a foreign country and also persons in Constitutional states of the Union, both of whom must be engaged in a public office. A “national of the United States*”, for instance, although NOT an “alien” under Title 8 of the U.S. Code, is a “non-resident non-person” under Title 26 of the U.S. Code if not engaged in a public office and a “nonresident alien” if engaged in a public office. Therefore, a nonresident alien” is a “word of art” designed to confuse people, and the fact that uses the word “alien” doesn’t mean it IS an “alien”. This is covered in:
   Flawed Tax Arguments to Avoid, Form #08.004, Section 8.7
   http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

2. Anyone who PRESUMES any of the following should promptly be DEMANDED to prove the presumption with legally admissible evidence from the law. ALL of these presumptions are FALSE and cannot be proven:

15 Adapted from Why You are a “national”, “state national”, and Constitutional but not Statutory Citizen, Form #05.006, Section 14.1; http://sedm.org.
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

2.1. That you can trust ANYTHING that either a government form OR a government employee says. The courts say not only that you CANNOT, but that you can be PENALIZED for doing so. See:

Reasonable Belief About Income Tax Liability, Form #05.007
http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

2.2. That nationality and domicile are synonymous.

2.3. That “nonresident aliens” are a SUBSET of “aliens” within the Internal Revenue Code.

2.4. That the term “United States” has the SAME meaning in Title 8 of the U.S. Code as it has is Title 26.

2.5. That a Fourteenth Amendment “citizen of the United States” is equivalent to any of the following:

- 26 C.F.R. §1.1-1 “citizen”.
- 26 U.S.C. §3121(e) “citizen of the United States”.

All of the above statuses have similar sounding names, but they rely on a DIFFERENT definition of “United States” from that found in the USA Constitution.

2.6. That you can be a statutory “taxpayer” or statutory “citizen” of any kind WITHOUT your consent. See:

Why Domicile and Becoming a “Taxpayer” Require Your Consent, Form #05.002
http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

3. The safest way to describe oneself is to check “Other” for citizenship or add an “Other” box if the form doesn’t have one and then do one of the following:

3.1. Write in the “Other” box

“See attached mandatory Affidavit of Citizenship, Domicile, and Tax Status, Form #02.001” and then attach the following completed form:

Affidavit of Citizenship, Domicile, and Tax Status, Form #02.001
http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

3.2. If you don’t want to include an attachment, add the following mandatory language to the form that you are a:

3.2.1. A “Citizen and national of ____ (statename)”

3.2.2. NOT a statutory “national and citizen of the United States” or “U.S. citizen” per 8 U.S.C. §1401

3.2.3. A constitutional or Fourteenth Amendment Citizen.

3.2.4. A statutory alien per 26 U.S.C. §7701(b)(1)(A) for the purposes of the federal income tax.

4. If the recipient of the form says they won’t accept attachments or won’t allow you to write explanatory information on the form needed to prevent perjuring the form, then send them an update via certified mail AFTER they accept your submission so that you have legal evidence that they tried to tamper with a federal witness and conspired to commit perjury on the form.

5. For detailed instructions on how to fill out the Department of State Form I-9, See:

I-9 Form Amended, Form #06.028
http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

6. For detailed instructions on how to participate in E-Verify for the purposes of PRIVATE employment, see:

About E-Verify, Form #04.107
http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

7. To undo the damage you have done over the years to your status by incorrectly describing your status, send in the following form and submit according to the instructions provided. This form says that all future government forms submitted shall have this form included or attached by reference.

http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

8. Quit using Taxpayer Identifying Numbers (TINs). 20 C.F.R. §422.104 says that only statutory “U.S. citizens” and “permanent residents” can lawfully apply for Social Security Numbers, both of which share in common a domicile on federal territory such as statutory “U.S. citizens” and “residents” (aliens), can lawfully use such a number. 26 C.F.R. §301.6109-1(b) also indicates that “U.S. persons”, meaning persons with a domicile on federal territory, are required to furnish such a number if they file tax forms. “Foreign persons” are also mentioned in 26 C.F.R. §301.6109-1(b), but these parties also elect to have an effective domicile on federal territory and thereby become “persons” by engaging in federal franchises. 11. If you are submitting a voter registration, attach the following form and prepare according to the instructions provided:

12. If you are applying for a USA passport, attach the following form and prepare according to the instructions provided:

13. If you are submitting a complaint, response, pleading, or motion to a federal court, you should attach the following form:

Federal Pleading/Motion/Petition Attachment, Litigation Tool #01.002
http://sedm.org/Litigation/LitIndex.htm

14. Use as many of the free forms as you can from the page below. They are very well thought out to avoid traps set by the predators who run the American government:

SEDM Forms Page
http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

15. When engaging in correspondence with anyone in the government, legal, or financial profession about your status that occurs on other than a standard government form, use the following guidelines:

15.1. In the return address for the correspondence, place the phrase “(NOT A DOMICILE OR RESIDENCE)”.

15.2. Entirely avoid the use of the words “citizen”, “citizenship”, “resident”, “inhabitant”. Instead, prefer the term “non-resident”, and “transient foreigner”.

15.3. Never describe yourself as an “individual” or “person”. 5 U.S.C. §552a(a)(2) says that this entity is a government employee who is a statutory “U.S. citizen” or “resident” (alien). Instead, refer to yourself as a “transient foreigner” and a “nonresident”. Some forms such as IRS form W-8BEN Block 3 have no block for “transient foreigner” or “nonresident NON-individual”, in which case modify the form to add that option. See the following for details:

About IRS Form W-8BEN, Form #04.202
http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

15.4. Entirely avoid the use of the phrase “United States”, because it has so many different and mutually exclusive meanings in the U.S. code and state law. Instead, replace this phrase with the name of the state you either are physically present within or with “USA” and then define that “USA” includes the states of the Union and excludes federal territory. For instance, you could say “Citizen of California Republic” and then put an asterisk next to it and at the bottom of the page explain the asterisk as follows:

* NOT a citizen of the STATE of California, which is a corporate extension of the federal government, but instead a sovereign Citizen of the California Republic

California Revenue and Taxation Code, Section 6017 defines “State of” as follows:

“6017. ‘In this State’ or ‘in the State’ means within the exterior limits of the State of California and includes all territory within these limits owned by or ceded to the United States of America.”

15.5. Never use the word “residence”, “permanent address”, or “domicile” in connection with either the term “United States”, or the name of the state you are in.

15.6. If someone else refers to you improperly, vociferously correct them so that they are prevented from making presumptions that would injure your rights.

15.7. Avoid words that are undefined in statutes that relate to citizenship. Always use words that are statutorily defined and if you can’t find the definition, define it yourself on the form or correspondence you are sending. Use of undefined words encourages false presumptions that will eventually injure your rights and give judges and administrators discretion that they undoubtedly will abuse to their benefit. There isn’t even a common definition.
of “citizen of the United States” or “U.S. citizen” in the standard dictionary, then the definition of “U.S. citizen” in all the state statutes and on all government forms is up to us! Therefore, once again, whenever you fill out any kind of form that specifies either “U.S. citizen” or “citizen of the United States”, you should be very careful to clarify that it means “national” under 8 U.S.C. §1101(a)(21) or you will be “presumed” to be a federal citizen and a “citizen of the United States” under 8 U.S.C. §1401, and this is one of the biggest injuries to your rights that you could ever inflict. Watch out folks! Here is the definition we recommend that you use on any government form that uses these terms that makes the meaning perfectly clear and unambiguous:

“U.S. citizen or “citizen of the United States”: A “National” defined in either 8 U.S.C. §1101(a)(21) who owes their permanent allegiance to the confederation of states called the “United States”. Someone who was not born in the federal “United States” as defined in 8 U.S.C. §1101(a)(38) and who is NOT a “citizen of the United States” under 8 U.S.C. §1401.

15.8. Refer them to this pamphlet if they have questions and tell them to do their homework.

16. Citizenship status in Social Security NUMIDENT record:

16.1. The NUMIDENT record derives from what was filled out on the SSA Form SS-5, Block 5. See:

http://www.ssa.gov/online/ss-5.pdf

16.2. One’s citizenship status is encoded within the NUMIDENT record using the “CSP code” within the Numident record. This code is called the “citizenship code” by the Social Security administration.

16.3. Like all government forms, the terms used on the SSA Form SS-5 use the STATUTORY context, not the CONSTITUTIONAL context for all citizenship words. Hence, block 5 of the SSA Form SS-5 should be filled out with “Other”, which means you are a non-resident. This is consistent with the definition of “individual” found in 26 C.F.R. §1.1441-1(c)(3), which defines the term to include ONLY STATUTORY “aliens”.

16.4. Those who are not STATUTORY “nationals and citizens of the United States” at birth per 8 U.S.C. §1401 or 26 U.S.C. §3121(e), and 26 C.F.R. §1.1-1(c) have a “CSP code” of B in their NUMIDENT record, which corresponds with a CSP code of “B”. The comment field of the NUMIDENT record should also be annotated with the following to ensure that it is not changed during an audit because of confusion on the part of the SSA employee:

“CSP Code B not designated in error—applicant is an American national with a domicile and residence in a foreign state for the purposes of the Social Security Act.”

16.5. The local SSA office cannot provide a copy of the NUMIDENT record. Only the central SSA headquarters can provide it by submitting a Privacy Act request rather than a FOIA using the following resource:

Guide to Freedom of Information Act, Social Security Administration

16.6. Information in the NUMIDENT record is shared with:

5.1.4.12 How Human Beings Become “Individuals” and “Persons” Under the Revenue Statutes

It might surprise most people to learn that human beings most often are NEITHER “individuals” nor “persons” under ordinary acts of Congress, and especially revenue acts. The reasons for this are many and include the following:

1. All civil statutes are law exclusively for government and not private humans:

Why Statutory Civil Law is Law for Government and Not Private Persons, Form #05.037
https://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

2. Civil statutes cannot impair PRIVATE property or PRIVATE rights.
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

"Under basic rules of construction, statutory laws enacted by legislative bodies cannot impair rights given under a constitution. 394 B.R. at 925."
[In re Young, 235 B.R. 666 (Bankr.M.D.Fla., 1999)]

3. Civil statutes are privileges and franchises created by the government which convert PRIVATE property to PUBLIC property. They cannot lawfully convert PRIVATE property to PUBLIC property without the express consent of the owner. See:

Separation Between Public and Private, Form #12.025
https://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

4. You have an inalienable PRIVATE right to choose your civil status, including “person”.

Your Exclusive Right to Declare or Establish Your Civil Status, Form #13.008
https://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

5. All civil statuses, including “person” or “individual” are a product of a VOLUNTARY choice of domicile protected by the First Amendment right of freedom from compelled association. If you don’t volunteer and choose to be a nonresident or transient foreigner, then you cannot be punished for that choice and cannot have a civil status. See:

Why Domicile and Becoming a “Taxpayer” Require Your Consent, Form #05.002
https://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

6. As the absolute owner of your private property, you have the absolute right of depriving any and all others, INCLUDING governments, of the use or benefit of that property, including your body and all of your property. The main method of exercising that control is to control the civil and legal status of the property, who protects it, and HOW it is protected.

"As independent sovereignty, it is State's province and duty to forbid interference by another state or foreign power with status of its own citizens. Roberts v Roberts (1947) 81 CA.2d. 871, 185 P.2d. 381

The following subsections will examine the above assertions and prove they are substantially true with evidence from a high level. If you need further evidence, we recommend reading the documents referenced above.

5.1.4.12.1 How alien nonresidents visiting the geographical United States become statutory “individuals” whether or not they consent

The U.S. Supreme Court defined how alien nonresidents visiting the United States become statutory “individuals” below:

The reasons for not allowing to other aliens exemption from the jurisdiction of the country in which they are found were stated as follows: When private individuals of one nation [states of the Unions are “nations” under the law of nations] spread themselves through another as business or caprice may direct, mingling indiscriminately with the inhabitants of that other, or when merchant vessels enter for the purposes of trade, it would be obviously inconvenient and dangerous to society, and would subject the laws to continual infractions, and the government to degradation, if such individuals or merchants did not owe temporary and local allegiance, and were not amenable to the jurisdiction of the country. Nor can the foreign sovereign have any motive for wishing such exemption. His subjects thus passing into foreign countries are not employed by him, nor are they engaged in national pursuits. Consequently, there are powerful motives for not exempting persons of this description from the jurisdiction of the country in which they are found, and no one motive for requiring it. The implied license, therefore, under which they enter, can never be construed to grant such exemption.”

Cranch, 144.

In short, the judgment in the case of The Exchange declared, as incontrovertible principles, that the jurisdiction of every nation within its own territory is exclusive and absolute, and is susceptible of no limitation not imposed by the nation itself; that all exceptions to its full and absolute territorial jurisdiction must be traced up to its own consent, express or implied; that upon its consent to cede, or to waive the exercise of, a part of its territorial jurisdiction, rest the exceptions from that jurisdiction of foreign sovereigns or their armies entering its territory with its permission, and of their foreign ministers and public ships of war; and that the implied license, under which private individuals of another nation enter the territory and mingle indiscriminately with its inhabitants, for purposes of business or pleasure, can never be construed to grant to them an exemption from the jurisdiction of the country in which they are found. See, also, Carlisle v. U.S. (1872) 16 Wall. 147, 155; Radich v. Hutchins (1877) 95 U.S. 210; Wildens' Case (1887) 120 U.S. 1, 7 Sup.Ct. 385; Chae Chan Ping v. U.S. (1889) 130 U.S. 581, 603, 604, 9 Sup.Ct. 625.

Therefore, alien nonresidents visiting or doing business within a country are presumed to be party to an “implied license” while there. All licenses are franchises, and all give rise to a public civil franchise status. In the case of nonresident aliens, that status is “individual” and it is a public office in the government, just like every other franchise status. We prove this in:

The Great IRS Hoax: Why We Don't Owe Income Tax, version 4.54

All “aliens” are presumed to be “nonresident aliens” but this may be overcome upon presentation of proof:

Title 26: Internal Revenue
PART I—INCOME TAXES
nonresident alien individuals
§ 1.871-4 Proof of residence of aliens.

(a) Rules of evidence. The following rules of evidence shall govern in determining whether or not an alien within the United States has acquired residence therein for purposes of the income tax.

(b) Nonresidence presumed. An alien by reason of his alienage, is presumed to be a nonresident alien.

(c) Presumption rebutted—

(1) Departing alien.

In the case of an alien who presents himself for determination of tax liability before departure from the United States, the presumption as to the alien's nonresidence may be overcome by proof—

Aliens, while physically in the United States, are presumed to be “resident” here, REGARDLESS OF THEIR CONSENT or INTENT. “residence” is the word used to characterize an alien as being subject to the CIVIL and/or TAXING franchise codes of the place he or she is in:

Title 26: Internal Revenue
PART I—INCOME TAXES
nonresident alien individuals
§ 1.871-2 Determining residence of alien individuals.

(a) General.

The term nonresident alien individual means an individual whose residence is not within the United States, and who is not a citizen of the United States. The term includes a nonresident alien fiduciary. For such purpose the term fiduciary shall have the meaning assigned to it by section 7701(a)(6) and the regulations in part 301 of this chapter (Regulations on Procedure and Administration). For presumption as to an alien's nonresidence, see paragraph (b) of §1.871–4.

(b) Residence defined.

An alien actually present in the United States who is not a mere transient or sojourner is a resident of the United States for purposes of the income tax. Whether he is a transient is determined by his intentions with regard to the length and nature of his stay. A mere floating intention, indefinite as to time, to return to another country is not sufficient to constitute him a transient. If he lives in the United States and has no definite intention as to his stay, he is a resident. One who comes to the United States for a definite purpose which in its nature may be promptly accomplished is a transient; but, if his purpose is of such a nature that an extended stay may be necessary for its accomplishment, and to that end the alien makes his home temporarily in the United States, he becomes a resident, though it may be his intention at all times to return to his domicile abroad when the purpose for which he came has been consummated or abandoned. An alien whose stay in the United States is limited to a definite period by the immigration laws is not a resident of the United States within the meaning of this section, in the absence of exceptional circumstances.

Once aliens seek the privilege of permanent resident status, then they cease to be nonresident aliens and become “resident aliens” under 26 U.S.C. §7701(b)(1)(A):

26 U.S.C. §7701(b)(1)(A) Resident alien

(b) Definition of resident alien and nonresident alien

(1) In general
For purposes of this title (other than subtitle B) -

(A) Resident alien
An alien individual shall be treated as a resident of the United States with respect to any calendar year if (and only if) such individual meets the requirements of clause (i), (ii), or (iii):

(i) Lawfully admitted for permanent residence
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

Such individual is a lawful permanent resident of the United States at any time during such calendar year.

(ii) Substantial presence test
Such individual meets the substantial presence test of paragraph (3).

(iii) First year election
Such individual makes the election provided in paragraph (4).

“Residents, as distinguished from citizens, are aliens who are permitted to take up a permanent abode in the country. Being bound to the society by reason of their dwelling in it, they are subject to its laws so long as they remain there, and, being protected by it, they must defend it, although they do not enjoy all the rights of citizens. They have only certain privileges which the law, or custom, gives them. Permanent residents are those who have been given the right of perpetual residence. They are a sort of citizen of a less privileged character, and are subject to the society without enjoying all its advantages. Their children succeed to their status; for the right of perpetual residence given them by the State passes to their children.”

[The Law of Nations, Vattel, Book I, Chapter 19, Section 213, p. 87]

Therefore, once aliens apply for and receive “permanent resident” status, they get the same exemption from income taxation as citizens and thereby cease to be civil “persons” under the Internal Revenue Code as described in the following sections. In that sense, their “implied license” is revoked and they thereby cease to be civil “persons”. The license returns if they abandon their “permanent resident” civil status:

Title 26: Internal Revenue
PART I—INCOME TAXES
nonresident alien individuals
§1.871-5 Loss of residence by an alien.

An alien who has acquired residence in the United States retains his status as a resident until he abandons the same and actually departs from the United States. An intention to change his residence does not change his status as a resident alien to that of a nonresident alien. Thus, an alien who has acquired a residence in the United States is taxable as a resident for the remainder of his stay in the United States.

We should also point out that:

1. There are literally BILLIONS of aliens throughout the world.
2. Unless and until an alien either physically sets foot within our country or conducts commerce or business with a foreign state such as the United States, they:
   2.1. Would NOT be classified as civil STATUTORY “persons” or “individuals”, but rather “transient foreigners” or “stateless persons”. Domicile in a place is MANDATORY in order for the civil statutes to be enforceable per Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 17, and they have a foreign domicile while temporarily here.
   2.2. Would NOT be classified as “persons” under the Constitution. The constitution attaches to and protects LAND, and not the status of people ON the land.
   2.3. Would NOT be classified as “persons” under the CRIMINAL law.
   2.4. Would NOT be classified as “persons” under the common law and equity.
3. If the alien then physically comes to the United States (federal zone or STATUTORY “United States”), then they:
   3.1. Would NOT become “persons” under the Constitution, because the constitution does not attach to federal territory.
   3.2. Would become “persons” under the CRIMINAL laws of Congress, because the criminal law attaches to physical territory.
   3.3. Would become “persons” under the common law and equity of the national government and not the states, because common law attaches to physical land.
4. If the alien then physically moves to a constitutional state, then their status would change as follows:
   4.1. Would become “persons” under the Constitution, because the constitution attaches to land within constitutional states.
   4.2. Would become “persons” under the CRIMINAL laws of states of the Union, because the criminal law attaches to physical territory.
   4.3. Would cease to be “persons” under the CRIMINAL laws of Congress, because they are not on federal territory.
   4.4. Would become “persons” under the common law and equity of the state they visited and not the national government, because common law attaches to physical land.
5. If the aliens are statutory “citizens” of their state of origin, they are “agents of the state” they came from. If they do not consent to be statutory “citizens” and do not have a domicile in the state of their birth, then they are “non-residents” in relation to their state of birth. The STATUTORY “citizen” is the agent of the state, not the human being filling the public office of “citizen”.

‘Under our own systems of polity, the term ‘citizen', implying the same or similar relations to the government and to society which appertain to the term, 'subject' in England, is familiar to all. Under either system, the term used is designed to apply to man in his individual character and to his natural capacities -- to a being or agent [PUBLIC OFFICER!] possessing social and political rights and sustaining social, political, and moral obligations. It is in this acceptation only, therefore, that the term ‘citizen', in the article of the Constitution, can be received and understood. When distributing the judicial power, that article extends it to controversies between ‘citizens' of different states. This must mean the natural physical beings composing those separate communities, and can by no violence of interpretation be made to signify artificial, incorporeal, theoretical, and invisible creations. A corporation, therefore, being not a natural person, but a mere creature of the mind, invisible and intangible, cannot be a citizen of a state, or of the United States, and cannot fall within the terms or the power of the above mentioned article, and can therefore neither plead nor be impleaded in the courts of the United States.”’

6. When aliens are STATUTORY citizens of the country of their birth and origin who are doing business in the United States as a “foreign state”, they are treated as AGENTS and OFFICERS of the country they are from, hence they are “state actors”.

The Law of Nations, Book II: Of a Nation Considered in Her Relation to Other States § 81. The property of the citizens is the property of the nation, with respect to foreign nations.

Even the property of the individuals is, in the aggregate, to be considered as the property of the nation, with respect to other states. It, in some sort, really belongs to her, from the right she has over the property of her citizens, because it constitutes a part of the sum total of her riches, and augments her power. She is interested in that property by her obligation to protect all her members. In short, it cannot be otherwise, since nations act and treat together as bodies in their quality of political societies, and are considered as so many moral persons. All those who form a society, a nation being considered by foreign nations as constituting only one whole, one single person, — all their wealth together can only be considered as the wealth of that same person. And this is to true, that each political society may, if it pleases, establish within itself a community of goods, as Campanella did in his republic of the sun. Others will not inquire what it does in this respect: its domestic regulations make no change in its rights with respect to foreigners nor in the manner in which they ought to consider the aggregate of its property, in what way soever it is possessed.

[The Law of Nations, Book II, Section 81, Vattel; SOURCE: http://famguardian.org/Publications/LawOfNations/vattel_02.htm#S 81. The property of the citizens is the property of the nation, with respect to foreign nations.]

7. As agents of the state they were born within and are domiciled within while they are here, aliens visiting the United States are part of a “foreign state” in relation to the United States.

These principles are a product of the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act, 28 U.S.C. Chapter 97:

28 U.S. Code § 1605 - General exceptions to the jurisdictional immunity of a foreign state

(a) A foreign state shall not be immune from the jurisdiction of courts of the United States or of the States in any case—

(1) in which the foreign state has waived its immunity either explicitly or by implication, notwithstanding any withdrawal of the waiver which the foreign state may purport to effect except in accordance with the terms of the waiver;

(2) in which the action is based upon a commercial activity carried on in the United States by the foreign state; or upon an act performed in the United States in connection with a commercial activity of the foreign state elsewhere; or upon an act outside the territory of the United States in connection with a commercial activity of the foreign state elsewhere and that act causes a direct effect in the United States;

(3) in which rights in property taken in violation of international law are in issue and that property or any property exchanged for such property is present in the United States in connection with a commercial activity carried on in the United States by the foreign state; or that property or any property exchanged for such property is owned or operated by an agency or instrumentality of the foreign state and that agency or instrumentality is engaged in a commercial activity in the United States;

(4) in which rights in property in the United States acquired by succession or gift or rights in immovable property situated in the United States are in issue;

(5) not otherwise encompassed in paragraph (2) above, in which money damages are sought against a foreign state for personal injury or death, or damage to or loss of property, occurring in the United States and caused by the tortious act or omission of that foreign state or of any official or employee of that foreign state while acting within the scope of his office or employment; except this paragraph shall not apply to—

(A) any claim based upon the exercise or performance or the failure to exercise or perform a discretionary function regardless of whether the discretion be abused, or

(B) any claim arising out of malicious prosecution, abuse of process, libel, slander, misrepresentation, deceit, or interference with contract rights; or

(6) in which the action is brought, either to enforce an agreement made by the foreign state with or for the benefit of a private party to submit to arbitration all or any differences which have arisen or which may arise between the parties with respect to a defined legal relationship, whether contractual or not, concerning a subject matter capable of settlement by arbitration under the laws of the United States, or to confirm an award made pursuant to such an agreement to arbitrate, if (A) the arbitration takes place or is intended to take place in the United States, (B) the agreement or award is or may be governed by a treaty or other international agreement in force for the United States calling for the recognition and enforcement of arbitral awards, (C) the underlying claim, save for the agreement to arbitrate, could have been brought in a United States court under this section or section 1607, or (D) paragraph (1) of this subsection is otherwise applicable.

Lastly, we also wish to emphasize that those who are physically in the country they were born in are NOT under any such “implied license” and therefore, unlike aliens, are not AUTOMATICALLY “individuals” or “persons” and cannot consent to become “individuals” or “persons” under any revenue statute. These people would be called “nationals of the United States OF AMERICA”. Their rights are UNALIENABLE and therefore they cannot lawfully consent to give them away by agreeing to ANY civil status, including “person” or “individual”.

5.1.4.12.2 “U.S. Persons”

The statutory definition of “U.S. person” within the Internal Revenue Code is as follows:

TITLE 26 > Subtitle F > CHAPTER 79 > Sec. 7701.

Sec. 7701. - Definitions

(a) When used in this title, where not otherwise distinctly expressed or manifestly incompatible with the intent thereof—

(30) United States

The term “United States[] person” means -

(A) a citizen or resident of the United States[],

(B) a domestic partnership,

(C) a domestic corporation,

(D) any estate (other than a foreign estate, within the meaning of paragraph (31)), and

(E) any trust if -

(i) a court within the United States[] is able to exercise primary supervision over the administration of the trust,

(ii) one or more United States[] persons have the authority to control all substantial decisions of the trust.

TITLE 26 > Subtitle F > CHAPTER 79 > Sec. 7701. [Internal Revenue Code]

Sec. 7701. - Definitions

(a) When used in this title, where not otherwise distinctly expressed or manifestly incompatible with the intent thereof—

(9) United States

The term “United States[] when used in a geographical sense includes only the States and the District of Columbia.

(10) State
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t LIABLE to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

The term “State” shall be construed to include the District of Columbia, where such construction is necessary to carry out provisions of this title.

NOTICE the following important fact: The definition of “person” in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(1) does NOT include “U.S. person”, and therefore indicating this status on a withholding form does not make you a STATUTORY “person” within the Internal Revenue Code!

The term “person” shall be construed to mean and include an individual, a trust, estate, partnership, association, company or corporation.

There is some overlap between “U.S. Persons” and “persons” in the I.R.C., but only in the case of estates and trusts, and partnerships. NOWHERE in the case of individuals is there overlap.

There is also no tax imposed directly on a U.S. Person anywhere in the internal revenue code. All taxes relating to humans are imposed upon “persons” and “individuals” rather than “U.S. Persons”. Nowhere in the definition of “U.S. person” is included “individuals”, and you must be an “individual” to be a “person” as a human being under 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(1).

Furthermore, nowhere are “citizens or residents of the United States” mentioned in the definition of “U.S. Person” defined to be “individuals”. Hence, they can only be fictions of law and NOT humans. To be more precise, they are not only “fictions of law” but public offices in the government. See:

Proof That There Is a “Straw Man”, Form #05.042
https://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

There is a natural tendency to PRESUME that a statutory “U.S. person” is a “person”, but in fact it is not. That tendency begins with the use of “person” in the NAME “U.S. person”. However, the rules for interpreting the Internal Revenue Code forbid such a presumption:

Portions of a specific section, such as 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(30) is a “grouping” as referred to above. The following case also affirms this concept:

“Factors of this type have led to the wise rule that the title of a statute and the heading of a section cannot limit the plain meaning of the text. United States v. Fisher, 2 Cranch 355, 386; Cornell v. Coyne, 192 U.S. 418, 430; Southeaster S.S. Co. v. Dillon, 252 U.S. 348, 354. For interpretative purposes, they are of use only when they shed light on some ambiguous word or phrase. They are but tools available for the resolution of a doubt. But they cannot undo or limit that which the text makes plain.”

[Railroad Trainmen v. B. & O.R. Co. 331 U.S. 519 (1947)]

Therefore, we must discern the meaning of “U.S. person” from what is included UNDER the heading, and not within the heading “U.S. Person”. The following subsections will attempt to do this.

5.1.4.12.3 The Three Types of “Persons”
The meaning of “person” depends entirely upon the context in which it is used. There are three main contexts, defined by the system of law in which they may be invoked:

1. CONSTITUTIONAL “person”: Means a human being and excludes artificial entities or corporations or even governments.

   “Citizens of the United States within the meaning of this Amendment must be natural and not artificial persons; a corporate body is not a citizen of the United States.”

2. STATUTORY “person”: Depends entirely upon the definition within the statutes and EXCLUDES CONSTITUTIONAL “persons”. This would NOT INCLUDE STATUTORY “U.S. Persons”.

3. COMMON LAW “person”: A private human who is litigating in equity under the common law in defense of his absolutely owned private property.

The above systems of law are described in:

Four Law Systems Course, Form #12.039
https://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

Which of the above statuses you have depends on the law system you voluntarily invoke when dealing with the government. That law system determines what is called the “choice of law” in your interactions with the government. For more on “choice of law” rules, see:

Federal Jurisdiction, Form #05.018, Section 3
https://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

If you invoke a specific choice of law in the action you file in court, and the judge or government changes it to one of the others, then they are engaged in CRIMINAL IDENTITY THEFT:

Government Identity Theft, Form #05.046
https://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

Identity theft can also be attempted by the government by deceiving or confusing you with legal “words of art”:

Legal Deception, Propaganda, and Fraud, Form #05.014
https://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

5.1.4.12.4 Why a “U.S. Person” who is a “citizen” is NOT a statutory “person” or “individual” in the Internal Revenue Code

The definition of person is found in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(1) as follows:

Title 26 > Subtitle E > Chapter 79 > § 7701
$7701, Definitions
The term “person” shall be construed to mean and include an individual, a trust, estate, partnership, association, company or corporation.

The term “individual” is then defined as:

26 C.F.R. §1.1441-1 Requirement for the deduction and withholding of tax on payments to foreign persons.

(c) Definitions

(3) Individual.

(i) Alien individual.

The term alien individual means an individual who is not a citizen or a national of the United States. See Sec. 1.1-1(e).

(ii) [Reserved]

Did you also notice that the definitions were not qualified to only apply to a specific chapter or section? That means that they apply generally throughout the Internal Revenue Code and implementing regulations. Therefore, we must conclude that the REAL “individual” in the phrase “U.S. Individual Income Tax Return” (IRS Form 1040) that Congress and the IRS are referring to can only mean “nonresident alien INDIVIDUALS” and “alien INDIVIDUALS”. That is why they don’t just come out and say “U.S. Citizen Tax Return” on the 1040 form. If you aren’t a STATUTORY “individual”, then obviously you are filing the WRONG form to file the 1040, which is a RESIDENT form for those DOMICILED on federal territory. This is covered in the following:

Why It’s a Crime for a State Citizen to File a 1040 Income Tax Return, Form #08.021
https://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

Therefore, all STATUTORY “individuals” are STATUTORY “aliens”. Hence, the ONLY people under Title 26 of the U.S. Code who are BOTH “persons” and “individuals” are ALIENS. Under the rules of statutory construction “citizens” of every description are EXCLUDED from being STATUTORY “persons”.

“It is apparent that a constitutional prohibition cannot be transgressed indirectly by the creation of a statutory presumption any more than it can be violated by direct enactment. The power to create presumptions is not a means of escape from constitutional restrictions.”
[Bailey v. Alabama, 219 U.S. 219 (1911)]

“Expressio unius est exclusio alterius. A maxim of statutory interpretation meaning that the expression of one thing is the exclusion of another. Burgin v. Forbes, 293 Ky. 456, 169 S.W.2d. 321, 325; Newblock v. Bowles, 170 Okl. 487, 40 P.2d. 1097, 1100. Mention of one thing implies exclusion of another. When certain persons or things are specified in a law, contract, or will, an intention to exclude all others from its operation may be inferred. Under this maxim, if a statute specifies one exception to a general rule or assumes to specify the effects of a certain provision, other exceptions or effects are excluded.”

“When a statute includes an explicit definition, we must follow that definition, even if it varies from that term’s ordinary meaning. Meese v. Keene, 481 U.S. 465, 484-485 (1987) (“It is axiomatic that the statutory definition of the term excludes unstated meanings of that term”); Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. at 392-393, n. 10 (“As a rule, ‘a definition which declares what a term “means”’ . . . excludes any meaning that is not stated”); Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Lenroot, 323 U.S. 490, 502 (1945); Fox v. Standard Oil Co. of N.J., 294 U.S. 87, 95-96 (1935) (Cardozo, J.); see also 2A N. Singer, Sutherland on Statutes and Statutory Construction § 47.07, p. 152, and n. 10 (5th ed. 1992) (collecting cases). That is to say, the statute, read “as a whole,” post at 998 [530 U.S. 943] (THOMAS, J., dissenting), leads the reader to a definition. That definition does not include the Attorney General’s restriction -- “the child up to the head.” Its words, “substantial portion,” indicate the contrary.”
[Stenberg v. Carhart, 530 U.S. 914 (2000)]
Who might these STATUTORY “persons” be who are also “individuals”? They must meet all the following conditions simultaneously to be “taxpayers” and “persons”:

1. STATUTORY “U.S. citizens” or STATUTORY “U.S. residents” domiciled in the geographical “United States” under 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) and (a)(10) and/or 4 U.S.C. §110(d).
3. Availing themselves of a tax treaty benefit (franchises) and therefore liable to PAY for said “benefit”.
4. Interface to the Internal Revenue Code as “aliens” in relation to the foreign country they are physically in but not domiciled in at the time.

Some older versions of the code call the confluence of conditions above a “nonresident citizen”. The above are confirmed by the words of Jesus Himself!

And when he had come into the house, Jesus anticipated him, saying, “What do you think, Simon? From whom do the kings [governments] of the earth [lawfully] take customs or taxes, from their sons [citizens and subjects] or from strangers [statutory "aliens"], which are synonymous with "residents" in the tax code, and exclude "citizens"?

Peter said to Him, "From strangers [statutory "aliens"]/"residents" ONLY. See 26 C.F.R. §1.1-1(a)(2)(ii) and 26 C.F.R. §1.1441-1(c)(3)."

Jesus said to him, "Then the sons [of the King, Constitutional but not statutory "citizens"] of the Republic, who are all sovereign "nationals" and "non-resident non-persons" are free [sovereign over their own person and labor, e.g. SOVEREIGN IMMUNITY]

[Matt. 17:24-27, Bible, NKJV]

Note some other very important things that distinguish STATUTORY “U.S. Persons” from STATUTORY “persons”:

1. The term “U.S.” in the phrase “U.S. Person” as used in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(30) is never defined anywhere in the Internal Revenue Code, and therefore does NOT mean the same as “United States” in its geographical sense as defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) and (a)(10). It is a violation of due process to PRESUME that the two are equivalent.
2. The definition of “person” in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(1) does not include statutory “citizens” or “residents”.
3. The definition of “U.S. person” in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(30) does not include statutory “individuals”.
4. Nowhere in the code are “individuals” ever expressly defined to include statutory “citizens” or “residents”. Hence, under the rules of statutory construction, they are purposefully excluded.
5. Based on the previous items, there is no overlap between the definitions of “person” and “U.S. Person” in the case of human beings who are ALSO “citizens” or “residents”.
6. The only occasion when a human being can ALSO be a statutory “person” is when they are neither a “citizen” nor a “resident” and are a statutory “individual”.
7. The only “person” who is neither a statutory “citizen” nor a statutory “resident” and is ALSO an “individual” is a “nonresident alien individual”:

26 U.S.C. §7701(b)(1)(B) Nonresident alien

An individual is a nonresident alien if such individual is neither a citizen of the United States nor a resident of the United States (within the meaning of subparagraph (A)).

8. The previous item explains why nonresident aliens are the ONLY type of “individual” subject to tax withholding in 26 U.S.C. Subtitle A, Chapter 3, Subchapter A and who can earn taxable income under the I.R.C.: The only “individuals” listed are “nonresident aliens”:

26 U.S. Code Subchapter A - Nonresident Aliens and Foreign Corporations

§ 1441 - Withholding of tax on nonresident aliens

§ 1442 - Withholding of tax on foreign corporations

§ 1443 - Foreign tax-exempt organizations
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

§ 1444 - Withholding on Virgin Islands source income

§ 1445 - Withholding of tax on dispositions of United States real property interests

§ 1446 - Withholding tax on foreign partners' share of effectively connected income

9. There is overlap between “U.S. Person” and “person” in the case of trusts, corporations, and estates, but NOT “individuals”. All such entities are artificial and fictions of law. Even they can in some cases be “citizens” or “residents” and therefore nontaxpayers:

“A corporation is a citizen, resident, or inhabitant of the state or country by or under the laws of which it was created, and of that state or country only.”

[19 Corpus Juris Secundum (C.J.S.), Corporations, §886 (2003)]

10. Corporations can also be individuals instead of merely and only corporations:

At common law, a “corporation” was an “artificial person[n] endowed with the legal capacity of perpetual succession” consisting either of a single individual (termed a “corporation sole”) or of a collection of several individuals (a “corporation aggregate”). 3 H. Stephen, Commentaries on the Laws of England 166, 168 (1st Am. ed. 1845). The sovereign was considered a corporation. See id., at 170; see also 1 W. Blackstone, Commentaries *467. Under the definitions supplied by contemporary law dictionaries, Territories would have been classified as corporations (and hence as “persons”) at the time that 1983 was enacted and the Dictionary Act recodified. See W. Anderson, A Dictionary of Law 261 (1893) (“All corporations were originally modeled upon a state or nation”); 1 J. Bouvier, A Law Dictionary Adapted to the Constitution and Laws of the United States of America 318-319 (11th ed. 1866) (“In this extensive sense the United States may be termed a corporation”); Van Brocklin v. Tennessee, 117 U.S. 151, 154 (1886) (“The United States is a . . . great corporation . . . ordained and established by the American people”) (quoting United [495 U.S. 182, 202] States v. Maurice, 26 F. Cas. 1211, 1216 (No. 15,747) (CC Va. 1823) (Marshall, C. J.)); Cotton v. United States, 11 How. 229, 231 (1851) (United States is “a corporation”). See generally Trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 518, 561-562 (1819) (explaining history of term “corporation”).

We have therefore come full circle in forcefully concluding that “persons” and “U.S. persons” are not equivalent and non-overlapping in the case of “citizens” and “residents”, and that the only type of entity a human being can be if they are a STATUTORY “citizen” or “resident” is a statutory “U.S. person” under 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(30) and NOT a statutory “person” under 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(1).

None of the following could therefore TRUTHFULLY be said about a STATUTORY “U.S. Person” who are human beings that are “citizens” or “residents”:

1. They are “individuals” as described in 26 C.F.R. §1.1441-1(c)(3)(i).
2. That they are a SUBSET of all “persons” in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(1).

Lastly, we wish to emphasize that it constitutes a CRIME and perjury for someone who is in fact and in deed a “citizen” to misrepresent themselves as a STATUTORY “individual” (alien) by performing any of the following acts:

1. Declaring yourself to be a “payee” by submitting an IRS form W-8 or W-9 to an alleged “withholding agent” while physically located in the statutory “United States” (federal zone) or in a state of the Union. All human being “payees” are “persons” and therefore “individuals”. “U.S. persons” who are not aliens are NOT “persons”. Statutory citizens or residents must be ABROAD to be a “payee” because only then can they be both “individuals” and “qualified individuals” under 26 U.S.C. §911(d)(1).

3. To apply for or receive an “INDIVIDUAL Taxpayer Identification Number” using an IRS Form W-7. See: Individual Taxpayer Identification Number, Internal Revenue Service https://www.irs.gov/individuals/individual-taxpayer-identification-number

The ONLY provision within the Internal Revenue Code that permits those who are STATUTORY “citizens” to claim the status of either “individual” or “alien” is found in 26 U.S.C. §911(d)(1), in which the citizen is physically abroad in a foreign country, in which case he or she is called a “qualified individual”.

U.S. Code › Title 26 › Subtitle A › Chapter 1 › Subchapter N › Part III › Subpart B › § 911

26 U.S.C § 911 - Citizens or residents of the United States living abroad

(d) DEFINITIONS AND SPECIAL RULES

For purposes of this section—

(1) QUALIFIED INDIVIDUAL

The term “qualified individual” means an individual whose tax home is in a foreign country and who is—

(A) a citizen of the United States and establishes to the satisfaction of the Secretary that he has been a bona fide resident of a foreign country or countries for an uninterrupted period which includes an entire taxable year, or

(B) a citizen or resident of the United States and who, during any period of 12 consecutive months, is present in a foreign country or countries during at least 330 full days in such period.

The above provisions SUPERSEDE the definitions within 26 U.S.C. §7701 only within section 911 for the specific case of citizens when abroad ONLY. Those who are not physically “abroad” or in a foreign country CANNOT truthfully claim to be “individuals” and would be committing perjury under penalty of perjury if they signed any tax form, INCLUDING a 1040 form, identifying themselves as either an “individual” or a “U.S. individual” as it says in the upper left corner of the 1040 form. If this limitation of the income tax ALONE were observed, then most of the fraud and crime that plagues the system would instantly cease to exist.

5.1.4.12.5 “U.S. Persons” who are ALSO “persons”

26 C.F.R. §1.1441(c)(8) identifies “U.S. Persons” who are also “persons” under the Internal Revenue Code:

(8)Person.

For purposes of the regulations under chapter 3 of the Code, the term person shall mean a person described in section 7701(a)(1) and the regulations under that section and a U.S. branch to the extent treated as a U.S. person under paragraph (b)(2)(iv) of this section. For purposes of the regulations under chapter 3 of the Code, the term person does not include a wholly-owned entity that is disregarded for federal tax purposes under § 301.7701-2(c)(2) of this chapter as an entity separate from its owner. See paragraph (b)(2)(iii) of this section for procedures applicable to payments to such entities.

The ONLY way that a human being who is a “U.S. person” physically located within the statutory “United States” (federal zone) or states of the Union can become a STATUTORY “person” is to:

1. Be treated wrongfully AS IF they are a “payee” by an ignorant “withholding agent” under 26 C.F.R. §1.1441.
2. Be falsely PRESUMED to be a statutory “individual” or statutory “person”. All such conclusive presumptions which impair constitutional rights are unconstitutional and impermissible as we prove in the following:

Presumption: Chief Weapon for Unlawfully Enlarging Federal Jurisdiction, Form #05.017

https://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

All such presumption should be FORCEFULLY CHALLENGED. Anyone making such a presumption should be DEMANDED to satisfy their burden of proof and produce a statutory definition that expressly includes those who are either STATUTORY “citizens” or statutory “residents”. In the absence of such a presumption, you as the victim of such an unconstitutional presumption must be presumed to be innocent until proven guilty, which means a “non-person” and a “non-taxpayer” unless and until proven otherwise WITH COURT ADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE SIGNED UNDER PENALTY OF PERJURY BY THE MOVING PARTY, which is the withholding agent.

3. Volunteer to fill out an unmodified or not amended IRS Form W-8 or W-9. Both forms PRESUPPOSE that the submitter is a “payee” and therefore a “person” under 26 C.F.R. §1.1441-1(b)(2)(i). A withholding agent asserting usually falsely that you have to fill out this form MUST make a false presumption that you are a “person” but he CANNOT make that determination without forcing you to contract or associate in violation of law. ONLY YOU as the submitter can lawfully do that. If you say under penalty of perjury that you are NOT a statutory “person” or “individual”, then he has to take your word for it and NOT enforce the provisions of 26 C.F.R. §1.1441-1 against you. If he refuses you this right, he is committing criminal witness tampering, since the form is signed under penalty of perjury and he compelling a specific type of testimony from you. See:

Your Exclusive Right to Declare or Establish Your Civil Status, Form #13.008

4. Fill out an IRS Form W-8. Block 1 for the name of the submitter calls the submitter an “individual”. You are NOT an “individual” since individuals are aliens as required by 26 C.F.R. §1.1441-1(c)(3). Only STATUTORY “U.S. citizens” abroad can be “individuals” and you aren’t abroad if you are either on federal territory or within a constitutional state.

The result of ALL of the above is CRIMINAL IDENTIFY THEFT at worst as described in Form #05.046, and impersonating a public officer called a “person” and “individual” at best in violation of 18 U.S.C. §912 as described in Form #05.008.

There is also much overlap between the definition of “person” and “U.S. person”. The main LACK of overlap occurs with “individuals”. The main reason for this difference in overlap is the fact that HUMAN BEINGS have constitutional rights while artificial entities DO NOT. Below is a table comparing the two, keeping in mind that the above regulation refers to the items listed that both say “Yes”, but not to “individuals”:

Table 5-7: Comparison of "person" to "U.S. Person"

We believe that the “citizen or resident of the United States” listed in item 1 above and in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(30)(A) is a territorial citizen or resident. Those domiciled in states of the Union would be NEITHER, and therefore would NOT be classified as “individuals”, even if they otherwise satisfied the definition of “individual” found in 26 C.F.R. §1.1441-1(c)(3). This results from the geographical definition of “United States” found in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) and (a)(10). Below is an example of why we believe this:

26 C.F.R. §31.3121(e)-1 State, United States, and citizen

(b) . . The term 'citizen of the United States' includes a citizen of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico or the Virgin Islands, and, effective January 1, 1961, a citizen of Guam or American Samoa.

5.1.4.13 Four Withholding and Reporting Statuses Compared Albert Einstein is famous for saying:

“The essence of genius is simplicity”.

This section tries to simplify most of what you need to know about withholding and reporting forms and statuses into the shortest possible tabular list that we can think of.

First we will start off by comparing the four different withholding and reporting statuses in tabular form. For each, we will compare the withholding, reporting, and SSN/TIN requirements and where those requirements appear in the code or regulations. For details on how the statuses described relate, refer earlier to section 5.1.4.12.1.

Jesus summarized the withholding and reporting requirements in the holy bible, and he was ABSOLUTELY RIGHT! Here is what He said they are:

> And when he had come into the house, Jesus anticipated him, saying, “What do you think, Simon? From whom do the kings [governments] of the earth [lawfully] take customs or taxes from their sons [citizens and subjects] or from strangers ["aliens", which are synonymous with "residents" in the tax code, and exclude "citizens"]?”

> Peter said to Him, “From strangers ["aliens"/"residents"] ONLY. See 26 C.F.R. §1.1-1(a)(2)(ii) and 26 C.F.R. §1.1441-1(c)(3)].”

> Jesus said to him, “Then the sons ["citizens"] of the Republic, who are all sovereign "nationals” and "non-resident non-persons” under federal law] are free [sovereign over their own person and labor. e.g. SOVEREIGN IMMUNITY].”

> [Matt. 17:24-27, Bible, NKJV]

The table in the following pages PROVES He was absolutely right. To put it simply, the only people who don’t have rights are those whose rights are “alienated” because they are privileged “aliens” or what Jesus called “strangers”. For details on why all “aliens” are privileged and subject to taxation and regulation, see section earlier.

NOTES:

1. All statutory “individuals” are aliens under 26 C.F.R. §1.1441-1(c)(3). They hid this deep in the regulations instead of the code, hoping you wouldn’t notice it. For more information on who are “persons” and “individuals” under the Internal Revenue Code, see section 5.1.4.12 earlier.

TOP SECRET: For Official Treasury/IRS Use Only (FOUO)  Copyright Family Guardian Fellowship  http://famguardian.org/
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

2. You CANNOT be a “nonresident alien” as a human being under 26 U.S.C. §7701(b)(1)(B) WITHOUT also being a statutory “individual”, meaning an ALIEN under 26 C.F.R. §1.1441-1(c)(3).

3. “Civil status” means any status under any civil statute, such as “individual”, “person”, “taxpayer”, “spouse”, “driver”, etc.

4. One CANNOT have a civil status under the civil statutes of a place without EITHER:
   4.1. A consensual physical domicile in that geographical place.
   4.2. A consensual CONTRACT with the government of that place.

For proof of the above, see: Why Domicile and Becoming a “Taxpayer” Require Your Consent, Form #05.002; https://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm. The U.S. Supreme Court has admitted as much:

[Osborn v. Bank of U.S., 22 U.S. 738 (1824); From the headnote, not the case]

5. Any attempt to associate or enforce a NON-CONSENSUAL civil status or obligation against a human being protected by the Constitution because physically situated in a Constitutional state is an act of criminal identity theft, as described in:

   Government Identity Theft, Form #05.046
   https://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

7. “Reportable payments” earned by “foreign persons” under 26 U.S.C. §3406 are those which satisfy ALL of the following requirements:
   7.2. Satisfy the requirements found in 26 U.S.C. §3406.
   7.3. Earned by a statutory “employee” under 26 C.F.R. §31.3401(c)-1, meaning an elected or appointed public officer of the United States government. Note that 26 U.S.C. §3406 is in Subtitle C, which is “employment taxes” and within 26 U.S.C. Chapter 24, which is “collection of income tax at source of wages”.

Private humans don’t earn statutory “wages”.

8. Backup withholding under 26 U.S.C. §3406 is only applicable to “foreign persons” who are ALSO statutory “employees” and earning “trade or business” or public office earnings on “reportable payments”. It is NOT applicable to those who are ANY of the following:
   8.1. Not an elected or appointed public officer.

9. Payments supplied without documentation are presumed to be made to a “U.S. person” under 26 C.F.R. §1.1441-1(b)(3)(iii).

10. You are allowed to make your own Substitute W-9 per 26 C.F.R. §31.3406(h)-3(c)(2). The form must include the payee name, address, and TIN (if they have one). The form is still valid even if they DO NOT have an identifying number. See FORM 9 in Form #09.001, Section 25.9.

11. IRS hides the exempt status on the Form W-9 identified in 26 C.F.R. §1.1441-1(d)(1) and TD8734 (62 F.R. 53391, SEDM Exhibit #09.038).

   “As a general matter, a withholding agent (whether U.S. or foreign) must ascertain whether the payee is a U.S. or a foreign person. If the payee is a U.S. person, the withholding provisions under chapter 3 of the Code do not apply; however, information reporting under chapter 61 of the Code may apply; further, if a TIN is not furnished in the manner required under section 3406, backup withholding may also apply. If the payee is a foreign person, however, the withholding provisions under chapter 3 of the Code apply instead. To the extent withholding is required under chapter 3 of the Code, or is excused based on documentation that must be provided, none of the information reporting provisions under chapter 61 of the Code apply, nor do the provisions under section 3406.”

It appeared on the Form W-9 up to year 2011 and mysteriously disappeared from the form after that. It still applies, but invoking it is more complicated. You have to check “Other” on the current Form W-9 and cite 26 C.F.R. §1.1441-1(d)(1) and TD8734 (62 F.R. 53391, SEDM Exhibit #09.038) in the write-in block next to it.
12. Those who only want to learn the “code” and who are attorneys worried about being disbarred by a judge in cases against the government prefer the “U.S. person” position, even in the case of state nationals. It’s a way of criminally bribing the judge to buy his favor and make the case easier for him, even though technically it doesn’t apply to state nationals.

13. “U.S. person” should be avoided because of the following liabilities associated with such a status:
   13.1. Must provide SSN/TIN pursuant to 26 C.F.R. §301.6109-1(b)(1).
   13.3. Subject to FATCA foreign account limitations because a “taxpayer”. See:

14. The ONLY civil status you can have that carries NO OBLIGATION of any kind is that of a “non-resident non-person”. It is the most desirable but the most difficult to explain and document to payors. The IRS is NEVER going to make it easy to document that you are “not subject” but not statutorily “exempt” and therefore not a “taxpayer”. This is explained in Form #09.001, Section 19.7.

NOTES:

1. The term “wherever resident” used in 26 U.S.C. §1 means wherever the entity referred to has the CIVIL STATUS of “resident” as defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(b)(1). It DOES NOT mean wherever the entity is physically located. The civil status “resident” and “resident alien”, in turn, are synonymous. PREASSUMING that “wherever resident” is a physical presence is an abuse of equivocation to engage in criminal identity theft of “nontaxpayers”. See: Flawed Tax Arguments to Avoid, Form #08.004, Section 8.20

2. “United States” as used in the Internal Revenue Code is defined as follows:

```plaintext
(a) When used in this title, where not otherwise distinctly expressed or manifestly incompatible with the intent thereof—

(9) United States

The term "United States" when used in a geographical sense includes only the States and the District of Columbia.

(10) State

The term "State" shall be construed to include the District of Columbia, where such construction is necessary to carry out provisions of this title.

3. Limitations on Geographical definitions:

3.1. It is a violation of the rules of statutory construction and interpretation and a violation of the separation of powers for any judge or government worker to ADD anything to the above geographical definitions.

"Expressio unius est exclusio alterius. A maxim of statutory interpretation meaning that the expression of one thing is the exclusion of another. Burgin v. Forbes, 293 Ky. 456, 169 S.W.2d. 321, 325; Newblock v. Bowles, 170 Okl. 487, 40 P.2d. 1097, 1100. Mention of one thing implies exclusion of another. When certain persons or things are specified in a law, contract, or will, an intention to exclude all others from its operation may be inferred. Under this maxim, if statute specifies one exception to a general rule or assumes to specify the effects of a certain provision, other exceptions or effects are excluded."

"When a statute includes an explicit definition, we must follow that definition, even if it varies from that term’s ordinary meaning. Meese v. Keene, 481 U.S. 465, 484-485 (1987) ("It is axiomatic that the statutory definition of the term excludes unstated meanings of that term"); Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. at 392-393, n. 10 ("As a rule, 'a definition which declares what a term 'means' . . . excludes any meaning that is not stated"); Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Lenroot, 323 U.S. 490, 502 (1945); Fox v. Standard Oil Co. of N.J., 294 U.S. 87, 95-96 (1935) (Cardozo, J.); see also 2A N. Singer, Sutherland on Statutes and Statutory Construction § 47.07, p. 152, and n. 10 (5th ed. 1992) (collecting cases). That is to say, the statute, read "as a whole," post at 998 [530 U.S. 943] (THOMAS, J., dissenting), leads the reader to a definition. That definition does not include the Attorney General's restriction -- "the child up to the head." Its words, "substantial portion," indicate the contrary."

3.2. Comity or consent of either states of the Union or people in them to consent to “include” constitutional states of the Union within the geographical definitions is NOT ALLOWED, per the Declaration of Independence, which is organic law enacted into law on the first page of the Statutes At Large.

"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness.--That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed, . . ."

[Declaration of Independence]

"Unalienable. Inalienable: incapable of being aliened, that is, sold and transferred."

3.3. Here is what the designer of our three branch system of government said about allowing judges to become legislators in the process of ADDING things not in the statutes to the meaning of any term used in the statutes:

"When the legislative and executive powers are united in the same person, or in the same body of magistrates, there can be no liberty; because apprehensions may arise, lest the same monarch or senate should enact tyrannical laws, to execute them in a tyrannical manner.

Again, there is no liberty, if the judiciary power be not separated from the legislative and executive. Were it joined with the legislative, the life and liberty of the subject would be exposed to arbitrary control; for the judge would be then the legislator. Were it joined to the executive power, the judge might behave with violence and oppression [sound familiar].

There would be an end of everything, were the same man or the same body, whether of the nobles or of the people, to exercise those three powers, that of enacting laws, that of executing the public resolutions, and of trying the causes of individuals."

In what a situation must the poor subject be in those republics! The same body of magistrates are possessed, as executors of the laws, of the whole power they have given themselves in quality of legislators. They may plunder the state by their general determinations; and as they have likewise the judiciary power in their hands, every private citizen may be ruined by their particular decisions."
4. Congress is forbidden by the U.S. Supreme Court to offer or enforce any taxable franchise within the borders of a constitutional state. This case has never been overruled.

"Thus, Congress having power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes, may, without doubt, provide for granting coasting licenses, licenses to pilots, licenses to trade with the Indians, and any other licenses necessary or proper for the exercise of that great and extensive power; and the same observation is applicable to every other power of Congress, to the exercise of which the granting of licenses may be incident. All such licenses confer authority, and give rights to the licensee.

But very different considerations apply to the internal commerce or domestic trade of the States. Over this commerce and trade Congress has no power of regulation nor any direct control. This power belongs exclusively to the States. No interference by Congress with the business of citizens transacted within a State is warranted by the Constitution, except such as is strictly incidental to the exercise of powers clearly granted to the legislature. The power to authorize a business within a State is plainly repugnant to the exclusive power of the State over the same subject. It is true that the power of Congress to tax is a very extensive power. It is given in the Constitution, with only one exception and only two qualifications. Congress cannot tax exports, and it must impose direct taxes by the rule of apportionment, and indirect taxes by the rule of uniformity. Thus limited, and thus only, it reaches every subject, and may be exercised at discretion. But, it reaches only existing subjects. Congress cannot authorize a trade or business within a State in order to tax it."

6. The Income tax described in 26 U.S.C. Subtitle A is an excise and a franchise tax upon public offices in the national government. Hence, it is only enforceable upon elected or appointed officers or public officers (contractors) of the national government. See:

The “Trade or Business” Scam, Form #05.001

https://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

7. It is a CRIME to either file or use as evidence in any tax enforcement proceeding any information return that was filed against someone who is NOT engaged in a public office. Most information returns are false and therefore the filers should be prosecuted for crime by the Department of Justice. The reason they aren’t is because they are BRIBED by the proceeds resulting from these false returns to SHUT UP about the crime. See:

Correcting Erroneous Information Returns, Form #04.001

https://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

8. The Internal Revenue Code only regulates PUBLIC conduct of PUBLIC officers on official business. The ability to regulate PRIVATE rights and PRIVATE property is prohibited by the Constitution and the Bill of Rights.

"Under basic rules of construction, statutory laws enacted by legislative bodies cannot impair rights given under a constitution. 194 B.R. at 925."

[In re Young, 235 B.R. 666 (Bankr.M.D.Fla., 1999)]

"A private person cannot make constitutions or laws, nor can he with authority construe them, nor can he administer or execute them."

[United States v. Harris, 106 U.S. 629, 1 S.Ct. 601, 27 L.Ed. 290 (1883); The word “execute” includes either obeying or being subject to]

"All the powers of the government (including ALL of its civil enforcement powers) against the public] must be carried into operation by individual agency, either through the medium of public officers, or contracts made with [private] individuals."

[Osborn v. Bank of U.S., 22 U.S. 738 (1824); From the headnote, not the case]
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

“A defendant sued as a wrong-doer, who seeks to substitute the state in his place, or to justify by the authority of the state, or to defend on the ground that the state has adopted his act and exonerated him, cannot rest on the bare assertion of his defense. He is bound to establish it. The state is a political corporate body, can act only through agents, and can command only by laws. It is necessary, therefore, for such a defendant, in order to complete his defense, to produce a law of the state which constitutes his commission as its agent, and a warrant for his act.”

[Poindexter v. Greenhow, 114 U.S. 270 (1885)]

“The power to ‘legislate generally upon’ life, liberty, and property, as opposed to the ‘power to provide modes of redress’ against offensive state action, was ‘repugnant’ to the Constitution. Id., at 15. See also United States v. Reese, 92 U.S. 214, 218 (1876); United States v. Harris, 106 U.S. 629, 639 (1883); James v. Bowman, 190 U.S. 127, 139 (1903). Although the specific holdings of these early cases might have been superseded or modified, see, e.g., Heart of Atlanta Motel, Inc. v. United States, 379 U.S. 241 (1964); United States v. Guest, 283 U.S. 745 (1966), their treatment of Congress’ §5 power as corrective or preventive, not definitional, has not been questioned.”

[City of Boerne v. Flores, Archbishop of San Antonio, 521 U.S. 507 (1997)]

9. You can’t simultaneously be a “taxpayer” who is “subject” to the Internal Revenue Code AND someone who is protected by the Constitution and especially the Bill of Rights. The two conditions are MUTUALLY EXCLUSIVE. Below are the only documented techniques by which the protections of the Constitutions can be forfeited:

9.1. Standing on a place not protected by the Constitution, such as federal territory or abroad.

9.2. Invoking the “benefits”, “privileges”, or “immunities” offered by any statute. The cite below is called the “Brandeis Rules”:

The Court developed, for its own governance in the cases confessedly within its jurisdiction, a series of rules under which it has avoided passing upon a large part of all the constitutional questions pressed upon it for decision. They are:

10. Constitutional protections such as the Bill of Rights attach to LAND, and NOT to the civil status of the people ON the land. The protections of the Bill of Rights do not attach to you because you are a statutory “person”, “individual”, or “taxpayer”, but because of the PLACE YOU ARE STANDING at the time you receive an injury from a transgressing government agent.

“It is locality that is determinative of the application of the Constitution, in such matters as judicial procedure, and not the status of the people who live in it.”

[Balzac v. Porto Rico, 258 U.S. 298 (1922)]

You can only lose the protections of the Constitutions by changing your LOCATION, not by consenting to give up constitutional protections. We prove this in:

Unalienable Rights Course, Form #12.038

5.1.4.15  Rebuttal of Those Who Fraudulently Challenge or Try to Expand the Statutory Definitions In This Document

The main purpose of law is to limit government power. The foundation of what it means to have a "society of law and not men" is law that limits government powers. We cover this in Legal Deception, Propaganda, and Fraud, Form #05.014, Section 5. Government cannot have limited powers without DEFINITIONS in the written law that are limiting and which define and declare ALL THINGS that are included and implicitly exclude all things not expressly identified. The rules of statutory construction and interpretation recognize this critical function of law with the following maxims:

"Expressio unius est exclusio alterius. A maxim of statutory interpretation meaning that the expression of one thing is the exclusion of another. Bargen v. Forbes, 293 Ky. 456, 169 S.W.2d. 321, 325; Newblock v. Bowles, 170 Okl. 487, 40 P.2d. 1097, 1100; Mention of one thing implies exclusion of another. When certain persons or things are specified in a law, contract, or will, an intention to exclude all others from its operation may be inferred. Under this maxim, if statute specifies one exception to a general rule or assumes to specify the effects of a certain provision, other exceptions or effects are excluded."

"When a statute includes an explicit definition, we must follow that definition, even if it varies from that term's ordinary meaning. Meese v. Keene, 481 U.S. 465, 484-485 (1987) ("It is axiomatic that the statutory definition of the term excludes unstated meanings of that term"), Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. at 392-393, n. 10 ("As a rule, a definition which declares what a term "means"... excludes any party the burden that "is not stated""), Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Lenroot, 323 U.S. 490, 502 (1945); Fox v. Standard Oil Co. of N.J., 294 U.S. 87, 95-96 (1935) (Cardozo, J.); see also 2A N. Singer, Sutherland on Statutes and Statutory Construction § 47.07, p. 152, and n. 10 (5th ed. 1992) (collecting cases). That is to say, the statute, read "as a whole," post at 998 [530 U.S. 943] (THOMAS, J., dissenting), leads the reader to a definition. That definition does not include the Attorney General's restriction -- "the child up to the head." Its words, "substantial portion," indicate the contrary."
[Stenberg v. Carhart, 530 U.S. 914 (2000)]

The ability to define terms or ADD to the EXISTING statutory definition of terms is a LEGISLATIVE function that can lawfully and constitutionally be exercised ONLY by the Legislative Branch of the government. The power to define or expand the definition of statutory terms:

1. CANNOT lawfully be exercised by either a judge or a government prosecutor or the Internal Revenue Service.
2. CANNOT be exercised by making PRESUMPTIONS about what a term means or by enforcing the COMMON meaning of the term that is already defined in a statute. See Presumption: Chief Weapon for Unlawfully Enlarging Federal Jurisdiction, Form #05.017:

"It is apparent,' this court said in the Bailey Case ( 219 U.S. 239, 31 S.Ct. 145, 151) 'that a constitutional prohibition cannot be transgressed indirectly by the creation of a statutory presumption any more than it can be violated by direct enactment. The power to create presumptions is not a means of escape from constitutional restrictions.'
[Heiner v. Donnan, 285 U.S. 312 (1932)]

A presumption is an assumption of fact that the law requires to be made from another fact or group of facts found or otherwise established in the action. A presumption is not evidence. A presumption is either conclusive or rebuttable. Every rebuttable presumption is either (a) a presumption affecting the burden of producing evidence or (b) a presumption affecting the burden of proof. Calif.Evid.Code, §600.

In all civil actions and proceedings not otherwise provided for by Act of Congress or by the Federal Rules of Evidence, a presumption imposes on the party against whom it is directed the burden of going forward with evidence to rebut or meet the presumption, but does not shift to such party the burden of proof in the sense of the risk of nonpersuasion, which remains throughout the trial upon the party on whom it was originally cast. Federal Evidence Rule 301.

See also Disputable presumption; inference; Juris et de jure; Presumptive evidence; Prima facie; Raise a presumption. [Black's Law Dictionary, Sixth Edition, p. 1185]

3. Unlawfully and unconstitutionally violates the separation of powers when it IS exercised by a judge or government prosecutor. See Government Conspiracy to Destroy the Separation of Powers, Form #05.023.
4. Produces the following consequences when it IS exercised by a judge or government prosecutor or administrative agency. The statement below was written by the man who DESIGNED our three branch system of government. He also described in his design how it can be subverted, and corrupt government actors have implemented his techniques for subversion to unlawfully and unconstitutionally expand their power:

“When the legislative and executive powers are united in the same person, or in the same body of magistrates, there can be no liberty; because apprehensions may arise, lest the same monarch or senate should enact tyrannical laws, to execute them in a tyrannical manner."

Again, there is no liberty, if the judiciary power be not separated from the legislative and executive. Were it joined with the legislative, the life and liberty of the subject would be exposed to arbitrary control; for the judge would be then the legislator. Were it joined to the executive power, the judge might behave with violence and oppression [sound familiar?].

There would be an end of everything, were the same man or the same body, whether of the nobles or of the people, to exercise those three powers, that of enacting laws, that of executing the public resolutions, and of trying the causes of individuals."

[...] In what a situation must the poor subject be in those republics? The same body of magistrates are possessed, as executors of the laws, of the whole power they have given themselves in quality of legislators. They may plunder the state by their general determinations; and as they have likewise the judiciary power in their hands, every private citizen may be ruined by their particular decisions.”

Any judge, prosecutor, or clerk in an administrative agency who tries to EXPAND or ADD to statutory definitions is violating all the above. Likewise, anyone who tries to QUOTE a judicial opinion that adds to a statutory definition is violating the separation of powers, usurping authority, and STEALING your property and rights. It is absolutely POINTLESS and an act of ANARCHY, lawlessness, and a usurpation to try to add to statutory definitions.

The most prevalent means to UNLAWFULLY and UNCONSTITUTIONALLY add to statutory definitions is through the abuse of the words "includes" or "including". That tactic is thoroughly described and rebutted in:

Legal Deception, Propaganda, and Fraud, Form #05.014, Section 15.2
DIRECT LINK: https://sedm.org/Forms/05-MemLaw/LegalDecPropFraud.pdf
FORMS PAGE: https://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

Government falsely accuses sovereignty advocates of practicing anarchy, but THEY, by trying to unlawfully expand statutory definitions through either the abuse of the word "includes" or through PRESUMPTION, are the REAL anarchists. That anarchy is described in Disclaimer, section 4 as follows:

SEDM Disclaimer

Section 4: Meaning of Words

The term “anarchy” implies any one or more of the following, and especially as regards so-called "governments". An important goal of this site it to eliminate all such “anarchy”:

1. Are superior in any way to the people they govern UNDER THE LAW.

2. Are not directly accountable to the people or the law. They prohibit the PEOPLE from criminally prosecuting their own crimes, reserving the right to prosecute to their own fellow criminals. Who polices the police? THE CRIMINALS.

3. Enact laws that exempt themselves. This is a violation of the Constitutional requirement for equal protection and equal treatment and constitutes an unconstitutional Title of Nobility in violation of Article 1, Section 9, Clause 8 of the United States Constitution.

4. Only enforce the law against others and NOT themselves, as a way to protect their own criminal activities by persecuting dissidents. This is called “selective enforcement”. In the legal field it is also called “professional courtesy”. Never kill the goose that lays the STOLEN golden eggs.
5. Break the laws with impunity. This happens most frequently when corrupt people in government engage in "selective enforcement", whereby they refuse to prosecute or interfere with the prosecution of anyone in government. The Department of Justice (D.O.J.) or the District Attorney are the most frequent perpetrators of this type of crime.

6. Are able to choose which laws they want to be subject to, and thus refuse to enforce laws against themselves. The most frequent method for this type of abuse is to assert sovereign, official, or judicial immunity as a defense in order to protect the wrongdoers in government when they are acting outside their delegated authority, or outside what the definitions in the statutes EXPRESSLY allow.

7. Impute to themselves more rights or methods of acquiring rights than the people themselves have. In other words, who are the object of PAGAN IDOL WORSHIP because they possess "supernatural" powers. By "supernatural", we mean that which is superior to the "natural", which is ordinary human beings.

8. Claim and protect their own sovereign immunity, but refuse to recognize the same EQUAL immunity of the people from whom that power was delegated to begin with. Hypocrites.

9. Abuse sovereign immunity to exclude either the government or anyone working in the government from being subject to the laws they pass to regulate everyone ELSE'S behavior. In other words, they can choose WHEN they want to be a statutory "person" who is subject, and when they aren't. Anyone who has this kind of choice will ALWAYS corruptly exclude themselves and include everyone else, and thereby enforce and implement an unconstitutional "Title of Nobility" towards themself. On this subject, the U.S. Supreme Court has held the following:

"No man in this country [including legislators of the government as a legal person] is so high that he is above the law. No officer of the law may set that law at defiance with impunity. All the officers of the government, from the highest to the lowest, are creatures of the law and are bound to obey it. It is the only supreme power in our system of government, and every man who by accepting office participates in its functions is only the more strongly bound to submit to that supremacy, and to observe the limitations which it imposes upon the exercise of the authority which it gives," 106 U.S., at 220. "Shall it be said... that the courts cannot give remedy when the Citizen has been deprived of his property by force, his estate seized and converted to the use of the government without any lawful authority, without any process of law, and without any compensation, because the president has ordered it and his officers are in possession? If such be the law of this country, it sanctions a tyranny which has no existence in the monarchies of Europe, nor in any other government which has a just claim to well-regulated liberty and the protection of personal rights," 106 U.S., at 220, 221. [United States v. Lee, 106 U.S. 196, 1 S.Ct. 240 (1882)]

10. Have a monopoly on anything, INCLUDING "protection", and who turn that monopoly into a mechanism to force EVERYONE illegally to be treated as uncompensated public officers in exchange for the "privilege" of being able to even exist or earn a living to support oneself.

11. Can tax and spend any amount or percentage of the people's earnings over the OBJECTIONS of the people.

12. Can print, meaning illegally counterfeit, as much money as they want, meaning illegally counterfeit, as much money as they want to fund their criminal enterprise, and thus to be completely free from accountability to the people.

13. Deceive and/or lie to the public with impunity by telling you that you can't trust anything they say, but force YOU to sign everything under penalty of perjury when you want to talk to them. 26 U.S.C. §6065.

5.1.5 You Don’t Pay “Taxes” to the IRS: You are instead subsidizing socialism

> “Politics is the gentle art of getting votes from the poor, and campaign funds from the rich, by promising to protect each from the other.”
> [Oscar Ameringer]

Below is a definition of the word “taxation” by the U.S. Supreme Court that is very enlightening. It succinctly reveals the proper meaning and function of the word “tax” from a legal perspective:

> “The power to tax is, therefore, the strongest, the most pervading of all powers of government, reaching directly or indirectly to all classes of the people. It was said by Chief Justice Marshall, in the case of McCulloch v. Md., 4 Wheat. 431, that the power to tax is the power to destroy. A striking instance of the truth of the proposition is seen in the fact that the existing tax of ten per cent, imposed by the United States on the circulation of all other banks than the National Banks, drove out of existence every state bank of circulation within a year or two after its passage. This power can be readily employed against one class of individuals and in favor of another, so as to ruin the one class and give unlimited wealth and prosperity to the other, if there is no implied limitation of the uses for which the power may be exercised.

> To lay, with one hand, the power of the government on the property of the citizen, and with the other to bestow it upon favored individuals to aid private enterprises and build up private fortunes, is none the less a robbery because it is done under the forms of law and is called taxation. This is not legislation. It is a decree under legislative forms.

> Nor is it taxation. ‘A tax,’ says Webster’s Dictionary, ‘is a rate or sum of money assessed on the person or property of a citizen by government for the use of the nation or State.’ ‘Taxes are burdens or charges imposed by the Legislature upon persons or property to raise money for public purposes.’ Cooley, Const. Lim., 479.

> Coulter, J., in Northern Liberties v. St. John’s Church, 13 Pa.St., 104 says, very forcibly, ‘I think the common mind has everywhere taken in the understanding that taxes are a public imposition, levied by authority of the government for the purposes of carrying on the government in all its machinery and operations—that they are imposed for a public purpose.’ See, also Pray v. Northern Liberties, 31 Pa.St., 69; Matter of Mayor of N.Y., 11 Johns., 77; Camden v. Allen, 2 Dutch., 398; Sharpless v. Mayor, supra; Hansson v. Vernon, 27 Iz., 47; Whiting v. Fond du Lac, supra.”
> [Loan Association v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655 (1874)]

Black’s Law Dictionary also defines the word “tax” as follows:

> Tax: A charge by the government on the income of an individual, corporation, or trust, as well as the value of an estate or gift. The objective in assessing the tax is to generate revenue to be used for the needs of the public.
So in order to be legitimately called a “tax” or “taxation”, the money we pay to the government must fit all of the following criteria:

1. The money must be used ONLY for the support of government.
2. The subject of the tax must be “liable”, and responsible to pay for the support of government under the force of law.
3. The money must go toward a “public purpose” rather than a “private purpose”.
4. The monies paid cannot be described as wealth transfer between two people or classes of people within society.
5. The monies paid cannot aid one group of private individuals in society at the expense of another group, because this violates the concept of equal protection of law for all citizens found in section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment.

If the monies demanded by government do not fit all of the above requirements, then they are being used for a “private” purpose and cannot be called “taxes” or “taxation”, according to the Supreme Court. Actions by the government to enforce the payment of any monies that do not meet all the above requirements can therefore only be described as:

1. Theft and robbery by the government in the guise of “taxation”.
2. Government by decree rather than by law.
4. Tyranny.
5. Socialism.
6. Mob rule and a tyranny by the “have-nots” against the “haves”.
7. 18 U.S.C. §241: Conspiracy against rights. The IRS shares tax return information with states of the union, so that both of them can conspire to deprive you of your property.
8. 18 U.S.C. §242: Deprivation of rights under the color of law. The Fifth Amendment says that people in states of the Union cannot be deprived of their property without due process of law or a court hearing. Yet, the IRS tries to make it appear like they have the authority to just STEAL these people’s property for a fabricated tax debt that they aren’t even legally liable for.
11. 18 U.S.C. §876: Mailing threatening communications. This includes all the threatening notices regarding levies, liens, and idiotic IRS letters that refuse to justify why government thinks we are “liable”.
12. 18 U.S.C. §880: Receiving the proceeds of extortion. Any money collected from Americans through illegal enforcement actions and for which the contributors are not “liable” under the law is extorted money, and the IRS is in receipt of the proceeds of illegal extortion.
13. 18 U.S.C. §1581: Peonage, obstructing enforcement. IRS is obstructing the proper administration of the tax code. In a society based entirely on the requirement for consent of the governed, the government must respect the choice of those who choose NOT to volunteer to participate in the federal donation program identified under I.R.C., Subtitle A.
14. 18 U.S.C. §1583: Enticement into slavery. IRS tries to enlist “nontaxpayers” to rejoin the ranks of other peons who pay taxes they aren’t demonstrably liable for, which amount to slavery.
15. 18 U.S.C. §1589: Forced labor. Being forced to expend one’s personal time responding to frivolous IRS notices and pay taxes on my labor that I am not liable for.

In order to prove that what we pay the IRS under Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A isn’t a “tax” in the legal sense, all we have to show is that any part of the income tax revenues are spent for social welfare or wealth transfer payments. At that point, the monies are being used for “wealth transfer” and the government becomes a thief and a Robinhood, because it is using public money for private purposes. It is committing robbery disguised as taxation if it takes public funds (also called the “General fund”) and puts them into the pocket of private individuals who did not earn them with their labor or compensated services. Understanding these facts helps explain some of the following interesting observations:
• Social Security is called O.A.S.D.I., or Old Age Survivor’s Disability Insurance. It isn’t a “tax”, it is “insurance”, which is why it doesn’t appear anywhere under Title 26, Subtitle A “Income Taxes”. Instead, it appears under 42 U.S.C. Chapter 7 entitled “Social Security”. All insurance must be voluntary so it can’t be called a tax.

• Medicare also isn’t a “tax” because it too goes to private individuals. This is a form of insurance and is found in 42 U.S.C. Chapter 7, Subchapter XVIII rather than in the Internal Revenue Code. Once again, participation is voluntary and cannot be compelled because the funds are used for private purposes.

The best place to go to find out how your tax dollars are spent is the Treasury Financial Management Service (FMS) Website. We compiled a detailed breakdown of all federal receipts and expenditures earlier in section 1.12 using this website, which is located at:

If you download the latest financial report of the U.S. Government for 2002 and examine page 69, there is an analysis of “Trust Fund Financing”. The trust funds are the individual social programs maintained by the U.S. government, including Social Security (called Old Age Survivors Disability Insurance, or OASDI), Medicare, FICA unemployment, and Railroad Retirement. This analysis shows that there are certain socialist programs which are running a deficit, which means that they must be financed from the General Fund. The General Fund means the individual income tax, as the report explains. Below is a summary of the various wealth redistribution programs that are funded from general revenues:

• Unemployment (FICA): 12 Billion dollar deficit for 2003. This is based on expected economic conditions. See page 87 of the 2002 report.

• Medicare Part B: Expenditures come entirely from the general fund. See page 82 of the report.

Another good place to look is on expenditures for welfare. You have to dig for these but basically, they are paid by the Department of Health and Human Services (DHHS) under a program called Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF). The statistics on spending for this program may be found on the web at:

The total federal expenditures in 2002 for the TANF program was approximately 23 Billion dollars, and all of the money to pay for this welfare program came from the funding for DHHS, which in turn came from the General Fund. The General Fund, in turn, is paid for mostly out of personal income taxes, which means that your income tax pays for socialism and charity.

In conclusion, a significant amount of money contributed under I.R.C., Subtitles A and C DOES go to support wealth transfer, which means that the income tax cannot be classified as a “tax” according to the Supreme Court. The Treasury Financial Management Service (FMS) report above also reveals that there are massive future shortfalls predicted for Medicare and Social Security, which means that an increasing amount of individual income tax revenues will have to subsidize these programs over the next several years in order to ensure their viability. The problem is therefore predicted to get MUCH worse, not better in the future if current trends and rates of expenditures continue.

5.1.6 Lawful Subjects of Constitutional Taxation within States of the Union

"Most of the presidential candidates' economic packages involve 'tax breaks,' which is when the government, amid great fanfare, generously decides not to take quite so much of your income. In other words, these candidates are trying to buy your votes with your own [stolen] money."

[Dave Barry]

Below is a list of the only constitutional and lawful taxes in the United States of America as derived right from the Constitution itself. Note that these are the limits defined by the Constitution upon federal taxation only within states of the Union. Federal taxing powers upon those domiciled within the federal zone and outside of states of the Union are not limited in any way by the Constitution and do not need to fall within the table below. This is a point that many people overlook:

Table 5-10: What can be Legally Taxed by the Federal Government?
The important thing to remember as you try to answer the questions above is that the Internal Revenue Code describes how taxing is to be done both within the federal zone AND within states of the Union and only the states of the Union are subject to the limitations in this section. We know from Article 1, Section 8, Clause 1 of the Constitution, that the only way the Congress can tax within the states of the Union is through a uniform indirect excise or “privilege” tax. Therefore, the only proper “subject of” the I.R.C. within states of the Union is taxable activities, events incidents and occasions. The amount of tax to be paid is measured by “income”, but the event of receiving income relating only to foreign commerce, or more specifically importation, is the “activity” that is being taxed. 26 U.S.C. §7001 identifies “foreign commerce” as a privileged activity that must be licensed.

Notes:
1. Direct taxes are on biological people, which are called “natural persons” in the legal field.
2. Indirect taxes are on legal fictions, such as businesses, corporations, and partnerships.

There are no other types of legal or constitutional taxes within states of the Union, and the supreme Court agreed with this in its findings in Pollock v. Farmers’ Loan & Trust Co., 157 U.S. 429, 158 U.S. 601 (1895):

And although there have been, from time to time, intimations that there might be some tax which was not a direct tax, nor included under the words 'duties, imports, and excises,' such a tax, for more than 100 years of national existence, has as yet remained undiscovered, notwithstanding the stress of particular circumstances has invited thorough investigation into sources of revenue. [157 U.S. 429, 558]

Property taxes can be on tangibles or intangibles. In order to have a situs for taxation (a basis for imposing the tax), tangible property (physical property) must reside within the territorial jurisdiction of the taxing authority, and intangibles (patents, copyrights, receipts, etc) must be subject to choes in action within the territorial jurisdiction of the taxing authority. See Wheeling Steel Corp. v. Fox, 298 U.S. 193 (1936).

After reading the above, you might then ask the following, as a person domiciled in a state of the Union and therefore who is protected by the Constitutional limitations on taxation described in this section:

1. What is the subject of the so-called “income” tax?
2. In which section, if any, of the Internal Revenue Code (26 U.S.C.) does it create a liability on a particular subject?
3. If you can’t find an answer which meets the constitutional requirements identified above, don’t feel alone. Neither can anyone else find a subject of an unapportioned tax which should apply to individuals domiciled in states of the Union and not within any federal enclave, and who are not connected with any licensed or privileged activities.
4. If the subject of the tax cannot be found in the IRS Code which meets the constitutional requirement for the imposition of a type of tax, how can it be proved anyone is subject to or liable for any so-called “income” tax?

“The income tax is, therefore, not a tax on income as such. It is an excise with respect to certain activities and privileges, measured by reference to the income which they produce. The income is not the subject of the tax, it is the basis for determining the amount of tax.”

(a) License

All persons undertaking as a matter of business or for profit the collection of foreign payments of interest or dividends by means of coupons, checks, or bills of exchange shall obtain a license from the Secretary and shall be subject to such regulations enabling the Government to obtain the information required under subtitle A (relating to income taxes) as the Secretary shall prescribe.

(b) Penalty for failure to obtain license

For penalty for failure to obtain the license provided for in this section, see section 7231.

Foreign commerce is the ONLY activity identified in the Internal Revenue Code that requires a “license” or receipt of a federal privilege and which applies anywhere within states of the Union. We could find no others. There are lots of other types of licenses mentioned within the Internal Revenue Code, but none are authorized by the Constitution to be issued to people in states of the Union OTHER than that above. This was covered in the License Tax Cases, when the Supreme Court ruled:

Justice Holmes, delivering the opinion of the Court, said:

"Thus, Congress having power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes, may, without doubt, provide for granting coasting licenses, licenses to pilots, licenses to trade with the Indians, and any other licenses necessary or proper for the exercise of that great and extensive power; and the same observation is applicable to every other power of Congress, to the exercise of which the granting of licenses may be incident. All such licenses confer authority, and give rights to the licensee."

Notice the conspicuous use of the term “trade or business” by the Supreme Court above, way before its use became commonplace in the Internal Revenue Code starting in the early 1900’s. This term is very important, you will find out later. By getting a license, one receives a federal “privilege” and thereby “volunteers” to pay an indirect excise tax relating to their power over exclusively internal taxation is exclusive, which is also called “plenary”.

1. Congress cannot tax exports from a state of the Union. See Constitution Article 1, Section 9, Clause 5, which prohibits taxes on exports from states of the Union.

2. Congress cannot tax activities within a state that don’t involve foreign commerce, because the states are Sovereign and their power over exclusively internal taxation is exclusive, which is also called “plenary”.

3. Article 1, Section 8, Clause 3 of the Constitution authorizes the regulation of foreign and interstate commerce, but not INTRAstate commerce. This is called the “Commerce Clause”.

4. Because Congress has the power to regulate foreign and interstate commerce under Article 1, Section 8, Clause 3 of the Constitution, then it can require all those legal “persons” who engage in such regulated and licensed activities to obtain a “license”. Receipt of such a license conveys a “privilege” and constitutes an act of volunteering to pay taxes relating to the regulated activity. In that sense, excise taxes are voluntary and avoidable. Those who don’t want to engage in the licensed activities aren’t subject to the tax. The purpose of paying such legitimate and constitutional taxes is ONLY to pay for the cost of regulating the activity so that the public is not harmed. Regulation cannot be done without taxation and the two always go together.

5. Article 1, Section 8, Clause 1 of the Constitution requires that all indirect taxes must be "uniform", which means that the same percentage rate must apply throughout all states of the Union. The reason is to promote “equal protection of the laws”.

6. An indirect excise tax is not a tax on “income” per se, but on the earnings in connection with exercise of the privileged activity. The amount of tax is measured by the “income” derived from the activity, which is actually defined as the “profit”.

“The income tax is, therefore, not a tax on income as such. It is an excise tax with respect to certain activities and privileges which is measured by reference to the income which they produce. The income is not the subject of the tax; it is the basis for determining the amount of the tax.”

[Congressional Record from March 27, 1943, p. 2580, Statement by F. Morse Hubbard, former legislative draftsman for the Treasury Department]

7. If Congress attempts to tax commerce within states that is not connected with foreign or interstate commerce, then it is competing with the state and taxing the same object, which the U.S. Supreme Court said it cannot do:

“Congress is authorized to lay and collect taxes, and to pay the debts, and provide for the common defence and general welfare of the United States. This does not interfere with the power of the States to tax [internally] for the support of their own governments; nor is the exercise of that power by the States [to tax INTERNALLY], an exercise of any portion of the power that is granted to the United States [to tax EXTERNALLY]. In imposing taxes for State purposes, they are not doing what Congress is empowered to do. Congress is not empowered to tax for those purposes which are within the exclusive province of the States. When, then, each government exercises the power of taxation, neither is exercising the power of the other. But, when a State proceeds to regulate commerce with foreign nations, or among the several States, it is exercising the very power that is granted to Congress, [22 U.S. 1, 200] and is doing the very thing which Congress is authorized to do. There is no analogy, then, between the power of taxation and the power of regulating commerce.

[Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U.S. 1 (1824)]

5.1.7 Direct Taxes Defined

When any tax includes all the following elements, it is a direct tax:

1. Either it places a tax on the whole of something because of ownership and falls on the owner of the thing taxed, or it is a tax on a species of property or on a natural person, a tax on the existence of the thing taxed.
2. The thing or property or person taxed is diminished by the tax.
3. The tax cannot be shifted. For instance, you are not a corporate manufacturer selling products who can shift the burden of the tax to the ultimate consumers by raising the price of the end product.
4. It is not a tax on consumption, nor a tax on an identified activity, nor a tax on a privilege, nor a tax on the happening of an event.

Any tax that does not satisfy these elements is not a direct tax and is therefore an indirect tax. Generally, a tax on gross receipts is a direct tax while a tax on net income (profit) is an indirect tax under the Constitution. Consequently, the Supreme Court went too far in the Pollock v. Farmers’ Loan & Trust Co., 157 U.S. 429 (1895) decision, as a tax on the net income of real estate is not a tax on the ownership of the real estate. Income from real estate is the fruit of the invested capital; it is the net. It may be severed from the capital leaving the underlying investment whole. When only income (profit) is taxed, the underlying investment is not diminished. The tax on the income from real estate may be shifted to those who pay the rents. The tax on the income from real estate may not even be payable by the owner of the real estate if there were some kind of management arrangement in place where the owner does not receive the income stream. Nor is it a tax on the existence of the real estate, as the amount of the tax is measured by the degree to which the property is successfully managed. It does not fall on the ownership of the real estate. A successfully managed building may pay a lot of tax while an identical building next door, that is poorly managed, might not pay any tax at all. Clearly the Pollock tax was not levied on the ownership nor the value of the building. Tax in the Pollock Case was an indirect tax and the Supreme Court went too far in linking an inherently indirect income tax with the source of the income. The boundary line between the two being that point where the underlying asset is diminished by the tax. The purpose of the 16th Amendment was to overturn Pollock.

The first apportioned direct tax we are aware of was imposed by Congress during the Civil War and is found in Volume 37 of the Statutes at Large. Below is a link to that original enactment that you can use to show how the Constitutional requirement for apportionment was implemented the first time it was used:

The above apportioned direct tax was enacted on August 5, 1861 and repealed following the end of the Civil War by the Act of June 30, 1864, Statutes at Large, Volume 13, Ch. 173, section 173, page 304. The amount was $20 million and 12 Stat 294 bottom of the page shows how it was apportioned. The tax was extended once to April 1, 1865, per Statutes at Large, July 1, 1862, Volume 12, Chapter 119, page 489. 12 Stat 297 Section 13 says that the tax is apportioned on all real estate, and 12 Stat. 304 says:

"That it shall not be lawful to make distraint of the tools or implements of a trade or profession, beasts of the plough necessary for the cultivation of improved lands, arms, or household furniture, or apparel necessary for a family."

[12 Stat. 304, Statutes at Large, 37th Congress, 1st Session]

The most fascinating and impassioned legal definition of “direct taxes” we have found appears in the Congressional Record and was presented by Congressman Reeves of New York on June 2, 1870. Below is his very lucid definition of “direct taxes”, and why the income tax that is mis-enforced by the IRS is not authorized by the Constitution. We have highlighted the important parts to emphasize them:

Income tax.

REMARKS OF HON. H. A. REEVES OF NEW YORK, IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
June 2, 1870,

On the bill (H.R. No. 2015) to reduce internal taxes, and for other purposes.

Mr. REEVES. Mr. Speaker, I desire, in as brief a manner as possible, to state some considerations which constrain me to vote for the motion of my colleague [Air. MCCARTHY] to strike out the provisions of this bill relating to the income tax. Having on yesterday voted to reduce this tax from five to three per cent., I am unwilling to let that vote stand open to the inference that I approve the principle of such a tax, and merely favor its reduction to a lower figure from prudential or political motives.

I oppose its theory and its practice, its principle as well as its policy, and shall so vote. The main controlling reason that sways my judgment is one to which comparatively little attention, incidental allusion only, has been given in the discussion on either side of this question, as, indeed, unhappily seems to be the case with many other questions that come before this House. It relates to the constitutional power of Congress to enact such a law. The fact that it was enacted by a previous Congress, and has continued in force from that time to this, annually extorting vast sums of money from the pockets of “a favored few,” whom the caprice of fortune happened to have endowed with a surplus of filthy lucre over and above an arbitrary limit, and with the rare honesty to tell the truth when pressed in the close embrace of the internal revenue’s “Black Maria,” does not in the least remove this constitutional difficulty, does not confer on the present Congress the smallest modicum of new power, and does not in any degree lessen the duty incumbent on all honest legislators to carefully examine the warrant and measure of the power they are invited to exercise. We have before us in the pending bill provisions for reenacting and enforcing the income tax substantially in the same form and upon the same basis as when it was first created by the fiat of Congress.

The increase in the amount of exemption from ten to fifteen hundred dollars, which is the only really new feature in this bill, while it diminishes the number of those upon whom the law takes effect, does not alter or affect the principle or lack of principle involved in its original enactment. If from the first it was a usurpation, void of any constitutional authority, it remains just the same now, for the Constitution has not in the interim been “amended” so as to bestow on Congress any new grant of power in respect to taxation. What, then, did and does the Constitution provide touching this vital matter of laying and collecting taxes, this supreme power over the purse of the people, second only in the attributes of delegated authority to that control over the lives of the people which results from the undoubted right to declare war and conclude peace? Does the Constitution authorize Congress to levy a tax on incomes?

I maintain that it does not; and I am persuaded that had this question been fairly presented to the Supreme Court of the United States, judicially constituted, it would have been definitely settled in the negative. What says the Constitution upon the subject of taxation? There are but four places in the Constitution, and none in the articles of amendment thereto, where the subject of taxation is treated, namely, clause three of section two of article one; clause one of section eight of article one; clauses four and five of section nine of article one; and clause two of section ten of article one. A careful analysis and comparison of these provisions leaves no doubt on my mind that the existing tax on incomes, which it is proposed to reenact, does not fall within the enumerated or clearly-implied powers of Congress, and is therefore absolutely void. Let us examine these various provisions of the Constitution in the order in which they stand in that instrument.

The third clause of section two of the first article reads as follows:

“Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union according to their respective numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole number of free persons, including those bound to service for a term of years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three fifths of all other persons.”

The rest of the clause relates to the mode of taking the census, &c. This is an affirmative and peremptory regulation of the mode of levying direct taxes, and commands that they shall in all cases be apportioned among the States according to population. Section eight, which specifies the particular powers of Congress, the primary powers from which secondary ones are implied, under the provision that Congress shall have the right “to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers,” in its first clause says:

“To lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises; to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.”

This is an explicit limitation as to duties, imposts, and excises, that their operation shall be uniform throughout the country, and the reason that the word “taxes” does not occur in the limitation, as it does in the grant of power to lay and collect, is manifestly because of the distinction already made between direct and indirect taxes, the former of which had been ordered to be apportioned “among the several States” according to population, while the latter alone were to be made “uniform throughout the United States.”

Duties are charges laid upon goods exported, imported, or consumed; imposts are charges laid upon products of industry, and are generally applied only to commodities when imported into a country; and excises are charges laid upon franchises or licenses to carry on particular lines of trade or branches of business. Congress has the clear constitutional right to lay and collect charges of these sorts; but if it does so the law must have a uniform operation in all the States; there must be no exceptional privileges to one section, no favoritism to one class; all sections and all classes must share alike in the burdens as well as the benefits of the General Government. Congress also has, under this same clause, an equally clear right to “lay and collect taxes,” meaning by that significant little word, “direct” taxes, for no other are referred to in the Constitution; but it is bound to see that such taxes, whenever laid and collected, shall be “apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers.”

Section nine, which specifically circumscribes, defines, and restrains the powers of Congress, in its fourth clause ordains:

“No capitation or other direct tax shall be laid, unless in proportion to the census or enumeration hereinbefore directed to be taken.”
This is a repetition, with redoubled emphasis, of the restriction contained in the third clause of the second section, before referred to, and makes it absolutely certain that no direct tax can be levied by Congress except in proportion to population. Clause five of section nine forbids Congress from levying a tax or duty "on any article exported from any State." Clause two of section three prohibits the State from laying "any imposts or duties on imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws;" and also from levying any "duty of tonnage."

These are all the provisions of the Constitution in relation to taxation. Do they severally or collectively authorize Congress today a tax on incomes? What kind of a tax is it? If a direct tax, within the meaning of the Constitution, it must be apportioned according to population. Is it thus apportioned? Nobody so pretends. A reference to the last published report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue will demonstrate that it was not apportioned according to population. From that suggestive document it appears that the State of New York paid on account of the income tax for the year 1868 the sum of $10,726,769.21, while the State of Ohio paid for the same period $2,039,588.99. By the census of 1860 New York had a population of 3,880,735, while Ohio had a population of 2,339,511.

Assuming that this income tax had been apportioned according to population, and that the amount collected from the people of Ohio was in just accordance with the unit of apportionment, whatever that might be, then the amount levied upon the people of New York should have been less than three and a half millions instead of almost ten and three quarters millions; or, to take the reverse of the hypothesis, if the amount collected from the people of New York was according to the unit of measurement, Ohio ought to have paid nearly six and a half millions instead of a little over two millions. Similar analogies, or antitheses rather, yet more striking, be afforded by this parallel between New York and Ohio, might be drawn from the same full repertory of official testimony to the inequality, the injustice, and the utter incompatibility of this tax with the provision of the Constitution that all direct taxes shall be according to numbers; but it would be useless. No one contends that the income tax is apportioned according to numbers; and no proofs are needed to show that it is not so apportioned. It only remains to consider whether it is a direct tax within the meaning of the Constitution.

To the determination of such a question no surer test can be applied than that which is supplied by the Constitution itself, to wit: can the tax be apportioned among the several States according to numbers? I maintain that it can and ought to be so apportioned, if laid at all; and this appears to be clear from a consideration of the important and most suggestive words among the several States," in connection with and direct sequence to the words "shall be apportioned." These words are evidently inseparable, and in any complete view of the question must be taken together. Taking them together, they can be construed in no other sense than as forming the substantive proposition of the sentence, which is qualified as a whole, and not in its separate parts, by the subsequent words "according to their respective numbers." It follows, therefore, that any tax which is susceptible of apportionment, not among individual citizens of the States, but among the States themselves, in just proportion to their respective population, is a direct tax, and must be so apportioned as the Constitution directs.

Is the income tax of that character? The only ground for doubt is the element of uncertainty as to the amount which such a tax may yield. Because the net income of the country cannot be determined in advance, and because we could not tell beforehand what the tax arbitrarily proposed to be assessed against that income would amount to, it seems to have been assumed that the tax could not be apportioned according to population. If the Constitution provided for an apportionment among individuals this would be true, and would constitute a valid defense of the tax against any such objection; but we have seen that the apportionment must be "among the several States," in the doing of which there would be found no impossibility and no serious difficulty. All the data requisite for a fair, safe, and correct estimate of the income reasonably certain to accrue from the active business and the invested wealth of the country are at hand, and are sufficient to fix the aggregate revenue to be derived from that source. This done, the apportionment becomes simply a matter of arithmetic, of easy calculation.

If the maximum sum of $25,000,000 were to be raised under the head of a tax on incomes the proportion which the population of any State bears to the whole population fixes the amount to be collected from that State. Then, if we remit the collection to the States, abolishing the Federal machinery now in use, each State will collect its

I stop not now to discuss the flagrant injustice of a tax on the earnings of business, be they more or less; the inequality of a tax on the gains of accumulated capital which, how-ever fair and just in theory, is incapable of being reduced to practical effect without inflicting gross wrongs on individuals; the inquisitorial, odious, and tyrannical character of an income tax, however apportioned and levied; nor any of the other grave objections which have been so well presented and illustrated by others. For me it is enough to be convinced that such a tax is at variance with the spirit and letter of the Constitution. That view of the question once fixed in my mind, I am concluded from any accidental consideration of advantages or disadvantages that may attend the proposed measure. But one course lies before me, and that leads straight to the vote I shall cast.

Income is derived from two sources, earnings and invested capital. In either case, when considered as a basis for taxation, it is inseparably associated with, and in greater or less part is made up from the rents, gains, or profits of land. A tax on incomes is therefore, in substance and in fact, a tax on land. There may be, as we know there are, individuals who do not own a foot of land, and a tax on whose income would in no sense involve the idea of taxing lands; but this can be said of a few only out of the mass of those whose incomes are subject to tax; indeed a large, if not the largest, part of the taxed incomes in this country comes from the rents, gains, or profits of land. Now, it has been distinctly and repeatedly held that a tax on lands is a “direct” tax such as the Constitution requires to be apportioned “among the several States,” as much so as the capitation tax itself. Hence, the income tax, involving as it inevitably does the principle of taxing lands, is a “direct” tax. Being a direct tax, it must be apportioned as the Constitution commands. But it is not so apportioned. Therefore the tax is unconstitutional, and should be immediately abrogated.

I know, Mr. Speaker, it may appear presumptuous for one little versed in the subleties of dialectics, much less in the maxims and canons of constitutional interpretation, to essay an argument of this kind, based solely upon a construction of the Constitution. But I am profoundly impressed with the belief that the great men who framed our Constitution meant to make it so plain that even the most unlettered need not err as to its meaning, and that one of its cardinal merits is this very fact that they did succeed in imbedding the immortal principles of civil and religious liberty, which filled their own minds, in language at once so simple, so perspicuous, so nervous, and so strong as could neither be washed away by sophistry nor broken down by the weight of glosses and critical emendations.
It is in the light of this plain, common sense understanding of the Constitution that I have attempted to explore its meaning with respect to the question of taxation. I also know that it is unfashionable and unusual in this revolutionary period to even refer to a document whose precepts, once sacred, have now become almost obsolete; that he who avows devotion to the fundamental source of all power in a free government, the will of the people embodied in a written constitution, is too apt to be stigmatized as obstructive, unprogressive, old-fogyish, or by still harsher terms: that partisan malevolence even sees "disloyalty" in a text and "treason" in a paragraph from the grand gospel of our American freedom.

Be it so. I gladly accept the odium and proudly wear the brand which attaches to the unwavering few who still uplift the banner of "the Constitution as it was;" the integrity of the Union which our fathers established, and which, administered in the spirit of its authors, for seventy years poured manifold blessings upon all the people; the sovereignty of the States as the creators of the new political system then established, which, allowed to distribute harmoniously its beneficent influences, expanded the few and feeble members of the Confederacy into the august proportions of a mighty republic of republics; the supremacy and undivided rule of the superior white race-in fine, all the glorious truths of the earlier and purer days of American democracy, before "new lights" had risen to shed their baleful glare over a land till then united, free, and happy; before sectional passions had been organized to do their devil's work of alienation and distrust; before fanaticism and folly had combined to rend asunder the silken cords of fraternal affection and mutual esteem which held us together with bands infinitely stronger than "hooks of steel."

In those days debt and taxation, bonds and bondholders, were figments of the imagination, not the tremendous realities which now confront us; in those days peace, real peace, prosperity, real prosperity, liberty, real liberty, sat triply throned in our midst and held their scepter of bounty and blessing over thirty million freemen. If to wish those halcyon days back again, with all the "sin and shame" which a maudlin sentimentality affected to find in their train, be doughfacism or demagogery or anything most obnoxious to "loyal' sensibilities, I glory to be so denounced. To our knowledge, the question of whether or not a tax on a man's wage (not "wage" as defined in the Internal Revenue Code, 26 C.F.R. §31.3401(a)-3(a), but "wage" as defined in its common or more general sense) or salary is an indirect tax or a direct tax has never been before the Supreme Court, except in the case of Evans v. Gore, 253 U.S. 245 (1920). Evans v. Gore was a 1920 case about a federal judge who was having his government salary diminished by an income tax and the Supreme Court ruled the tax was unconstitutional. But the question in this case related to a constitutional provision affecting only federal judges. Since most of us reading this book are not federal judges or public officers in the government, Evans v. Gore does not affect us. But the Court has discussed the issue three times in its dicta.

The first time was in the Hylton v. United States, 3 U.S. 171 (1796), where they quoted with approval Adam Smith's book entitled Wealth of Nations in stating that a tax on a man's revenue is a direct tax. The second time was in the Springer v. United States, 102 U.S. 586 (1881), where Springer failed to put this question directly in front of the court. It is unfortunate that Springer made numerous strategic errors in prosecuting his case. The third time was in Pollock v. Farmers’ Loan & Trust Co., 157 U.S. 529 (1895), where the court said, quoting with approval Springer:

"While this language is broad enough to cover interest as well as the professional earnings, the case would have been more significant as a precedent if the distinction had been brought out in the report and commented on in
The reality of a tax on a man's labor was very well described by Senator Bailey of Texas as he debated the income tax amendment [16th Amendment]. Senator Bailey had one of the more vocal voices in this debate. As a Democrat he was an avid supporter of the 16th Amendment. Here is his statement:

"I believe in earning an income by personal service every man consumes a part of his principal, and that fact ought always to be taken into consideration. The man who has his fortune invested in securities may find in a hundred years, if he spent his income, that the fortune still intact, but the lawyer or the physician or the man engaged in other personal employment is spending his principal in earning his income. That fact ought under every just system of income taxation to be recognized and provided against."

A tax on the labor of a man, whether or not he is a construction worker or a rocket scientist, is a tax on the man. It is a species of a capitation tax. Adam Smith described it as a capitation tax and a direct tax. It diminishes the man as the man consumes part of his capital in earning his wage or salary. It is a direct tax. Such a tax in the post 16th Amendment era must be apportioned among the 50 states of the Union before it can be collected from those who, absent a privilege, work and live within the several States of the Union.

A tax on a privilege, although measured by income, is not an income tax either. It is an excise tax. The tax of the Spreckels Sugar Case from the Spanish-American War and the Corporate Excise Tax of 1909 are such taxes. The 16th Amendment provides no authority for such a tax. These taxes are levied under the authority of the original Constitution, not the 16th Amendment.

An income tax within the meaning of the 16th Amendment is a tax on net income (profit). It is not necessarily a tax on a privilege nor is it necessarily a tax on a source. There are many species of income taxes. An income tax can be direct or it can be indirect. It would be a whole lot less confusing if we would stop calling a gross receipts tax an income tax. It is not, as the tax does not fall on income, but instead falls on the source of the income. Any tax that falls on the source of income is a direct tax.

The table below summarizes the types of income taxes found within the United States in relation to the chronology associated with both the 16th Amendment and the Pollock v. Farmers’ Loan and Trust case so as to make the meanings of “Direct tax” and “Indirect tax” perfectly clear:

5.1.8 The Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A is an excise tax

The supreme Court has ruled several times that an “income tax” is, and always has been, an indirect or excise tax. With or without the Sixteenth Amendment, this HAS ALWAYS been the case. Because direct taxes are taxes on natural persons (biological people) and property, then indirect taxes are taxes on other than real people. Therefore, the income tax can’t, by definition, apply to you and me as a person.

Excise taxes are taxes on privileges granted by the government ONLY to artificial entities other than natural persons, such as corporations, partnerships. Public officers of the U.S. government in receipt of the federal privileges can also be “subject to” subtitle A income/excise taxes but only if they VOLUNTEER because there is no statute making them liable. Likewise, these same public officers are the main ONLY persons defined in Subtitle C (Employment Taxes) of the Internal Revenue Code as "employees". Excise taxes are also commonly referred to in legal circles as "privilege taxes". Here is the definition of "excise tax" from Black’s Law Dictionary, Sixth Edition, on page 563:

"excise tax: A tax imposed on the performance of an act, the engaging in an occupation, or the enjoyment of a privilege. Rapa v. Haines, Ohio Comm.Pl., 101 N.E.2d. 733, 735. A tax on the manufacture, sale, or use of goods or on the carrying on of an occupation or activity, or a tax on the transfer of property. In current usage the term has been extended to include various license fees and practically every internal revenue tax except the income tax (e.g. federal alcohol and tobacco excise taxes, I.R.C. §5001 et seq.)

Did you notice the phrase: “In current usage the term has been extended to include various license fees and practically every internal revenue tax EXCEPT THE INCOME TAX.” Well then we should be asking ourselves WHAT KIND OF TAX IS THE INCOME TAX from among the five constitutional taxes listed in table 5-1? You can’t tell by reading the legal dictionary, and this is no accident, friends. They are trying to hide the truth!

Furthermore, that last part of the definition from above “or a tax on the transfer of property” is an embellishment and a self-serving distortion of the definition of “excise” by our dishonest government that was not part of the original Constitution, or any supreme court ruling before about 1900. The addition of that phrase is where most courts think they get their authority to impose income taxes on Americans domiciled in states of the Union, and it was not part of the intent of the founding fathers, but is an insidious addition by the unethical legal profession and politicians to illegally extend the jurisdiction of the federal government to impose income taxes against Americans in the states of the Union. We cover this subject in excruciating detail in section 6.12.4 entitled “Judicial Conspiracy to Protect the Income Tax: The Changing Definition of ‘Direct, Indirect, and Excise Taxes’". To pique your interest at this point, below is the definition of “excises” from Bouvier’s Law Dictionary, Revised Sixth Edition, 1856, which was the law dictionary used by the U.S. supreme Court back in 1856:

EXCISES. This word is used to signify an inland imposition, paid sometimes upon the consumption of the commodity, and frequently upon the retail sale. 1 Bl. Com. 318; 1 Tuck. Bl. Com. Appx. 341; Story, Const. Sec. 950.

[Bouvier’s Law Dictionary, Revised Sixth Edition, 1856]

Do you see “transfer of property” anywhere here? You will note that the definition from Bouvier’s Law dictionary would, on the surface, appear to create the impression that 26 U.S.C. Subtitle A income taxes are NOT excise taxes, but this is not true because as you will find out next, even the Congressional Research Service calls income taxes indirect excise taxes.

As you will learn by reading the following:

http://famguardian.org/PublishedAuthors/Govt/CRS/CRS-97-59A-rebuts.pdf

...the U.S. Congress calls the income tax an indirect excise tax. To make things even more confusing, the IRS contends that the Sixteenth Amendment authorizes a direct, unapportioned tax, as ruled by the circuit courts.

So let’s summarize all the confusing and contradictory propaganda and claims of the various legal authorities and sources below for your benefit to help clarify things:
The first thing you notice about the table above is that the IRS definition of income taxes as being direct taxes relies exclusively on Circuit court rulings but completely ignores and overrides the rulings of the Supreme Court on this subject! However, the IRS’ own Internal Revenue Manual says the following about this matter:

Internal Revenue Manual (I.R.M.), Section 4.10.7.2.9.8 (05/14/99)

1 “Decisions made at various levels of the court system are considered to be interpretations of tax laws and may be used by either examiners or taxpayers to support a position.

2. Certain court cases lend more weight to a position than others. A case decided by the U.S. Supreme Court becomes the law of the land and takes precedence over decisions of lower courts. The Internal Revenue Service must follow Supreme Court decisions. For examiners, Supreme Court decisions have the same weight as the Code.

3. Decisions made by lower courts, such as Tax Court, District Courts, or Claims Court, are binding on the Service only for the particular taxpayer and the years litigated. Adverse decisions of lower courts do not require the Service to alter its position for other taxpayers.”

What this means is that the IRS is obligated to quote the Supreme Court in all cases and ignore the lower courts in determining general tax liabilities of all Americans, and especially where there is a conflict between the two. The Supreme Court is the only court whose rulings can universally apply to all “taxpayers” (which incidentally doesn’t necessarily mean all Americans, as you will find out later in section 5.3.1). All other rulings of lower courts apply only to specific cases and not generally to all Americans. Therefore, we must conclude that the Congressional and Supreme Court views are to take precedent and that the income tax, when it is an enforced tax, is an indirect excise tax. The IRS pushes deliberate misinformation on this subject because it benefits them financially to do so. This amounts to a clear conflict of interest, and a violation of their own IRM. Now if the IRS and the Congress, who are in two different branches of the same federal government can’t even agree on what the income tax is, then what are us Americans supposed to think? Don’t you think this creates enough confusion in the minds of law abiding Americans such that the Internal Revenue Code or at least the enforcement of it, ought to be declared “void for vagueness” as we point out later in section 5.10? We do! This seeming contradiction also provides compelling evidence of the existence of a “judicial conspiracy to protect the income tax” at the circuit court level which we thoroughly explain later in section 6.6. Here is what one federal court said on this subject:

“Lower court owes deference to higher court and ordinarily has no authority to reject doctrine developed by higher court.”
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

To conclude our in-depth investigation, here is our definition of what kind of “taxes” Subtitles A and C income taxes are:

If 26 U.S.C. Subtitle A Income Taxes are ENFORCED against artificial entities like “persons” (in the legal sense, which aren’t the same as “natural born persons”) through distraint (penalties, interest, etc), then they are indirect excise taxes.

Below are just a few citations from U.S. supreme Court Rulings over the years that conclusively demonstrate that income taxes imposed through FORCE or DISTRAINT, are always excise taxes made on privileges, and that DIRECT TAXES on individuals rather than states. The target of the enforcement can only be those artificial entities that have elected or volunteered to engage in privileged taxable activities such as foreign commerce or a “trade or business”.

“Nothing can be clearer than that what the constitution intended to guard against was the exercise by the general government of the power of directly taxing persons and property within any state through a majority made up from the other states. It is true that the effect of requiring direct taxes to be apportioned among the states in proportion to their population is necessarily that the amount of taxes on the individual [157 U.S. 429, 583] taxpayer in a state having the taxable subject-matter to a larger extent in proportion to its population than another state has, would be less than in such other state; but this inequality must be held to have been contemplated, and was manifestly designed to operate to restrain the exercise of the power of direct taxation to extraordinary emergencies, and to prevent an attack upon accumulated property by mere force of numbers. “

"Here I close my opinion. I could not say less in view of questions of such gravity that they go down to the very foundations of the government. If the provisions of the Constitution can be set aside by an act of Congress, where is the course of usurpation to end?"

The present assault upon capital is but the beginning. It will be but the stepping stone to others larger and more sweeping, until our political contest will become war of the poor against the rich; a war of growing intensity and bitterness.”

"[Excise taxes are]...taxes laid upon the manufacture, sale, or consumption of commodities within the country, upon license to pursue occupations, and upon corporate privileges.”

...Moreover in addition the Conclusion reached in the Pollock Case did not in any degree involve holding that income taxes generically and necessarily came within the class of direct taxes on property, but on the contrary recognized the fact that taxation on income was in its nature an excise entitled to be enforced as such unless and until it was concluded that to enforce it would amount to accomplishing the result which the requirement as to apportionment of direct taxation was adopted to prevent, in which case the duty would arise to disregard form and consider substance alone and hence subject the tax to the regulation as to apportionment which otherwise as an excise would not apply to it.

...the Amendment demonstrates that no such purpose was intended and on the contrary shows that it was drawn with the object of maintaining the limitations of the Constitution and harmonizing their operation.”

...the [16th] Amendment contains nothing repudiating or challenging the ruling in the Pollock Case that the word direct had a broader significance since it embraced also taxes levied directly on personal property because of its ownership, and therefore the Amendment at least impliedly makes such wider significance a part of the Constitution — a condition which clearly demonstrates that the purpose was not to change the existing interpretation except to the extent necessary to accomplish the result intended, that is, the prevention of the resort to the sources from which a taxed income was derived in order to cause a direct tax on the income to be a direct tax on the source itself and thereby to take an income tax out of the class of excises, duties and imposts and place it in the class of direct taxes...

Indeed in the light of the history which we have given and of the decision is the Pollock Case and the ground upon which the ruling in that case was based, there is no escape from the Conclusion that the Amendment was drawn for the purpose of doing away for the future with the principle upon which the Pollock Case was decided, that is, of determining whether a tax on income was direct not by a consideration of the burden placed on the taxed income upon which it directly operated, but by taking into view the burden which resulted on the property from which the income was derived, since in express terms the Amendment provides that income taxes, from whatever source the income may be derived, shall not be subject to the regulation of apportionment...

[Brushaber v. Union Pacific Railroad Co., 240 U.S. 1 (1916)]

"[The 16th Amendment]...prohibited the ... power of income taxation possessed by Congress from the beginning from being taken out of the category of indirect taxation to which it inherently belonged..."

[Stanton v. Baltic Mining Co., 240 U.S. 103 (1916)]

"After further consideration, we adhere to that view and accordingly hold that the Sixteenth Amendment does not authorize or support the tax in question." [A direct tax on salary income of a federal judge]

[Evans v. Gore, 253 U.S. 245 (1920)]

The Sixteenth Amendment must be construed in connection with the taxing clauses of the original Constitution and the effect attributed to them before the amendment was adopted. In Pollock v. Farmers’ Loan & Trust Co., 158 U.S. 601, 39 Sup.Ct. 912, under the Act of August 27, 1894 (28 Stat. 509, 553, c. 349, 27), it was held that taxes upon rents and profits of real estate and upon returns from investments of personal property were in effect direct taxes upon the property from which such income arose, imposed by reason of ownership; and that Congress could not impose such taxes without apportioning them among the states according to population, as required by article 1, 2, cl. 3, and section 9, cl. 4, of the original Constitution.

Afterwards, and evidently in recognition of the limitation upon the taxing power of Congress thus determined, the Sixteenth Amendment was adopted, in words lucidly expressing the object to be accomplished:

'The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among [252 U.S. 189, 206] the several states, and without regard to any census or enumeration.'

As repeatedly held, this did not extend the taxing power to new subjects, but merely removed the necessity which otherwise might exist for an apportionment among the states of taxes laid on income. Brushaber v. Union Pacific

A proper regard for its genesis, as well as its very clear language, requires also that this amendment shall not be extended by loose construction, so as to repeal or modify, except as applied to income, those provisions of the Constitution that require an apportionment according to population for direct taxes upon property, real and personal. This limitation still has an appropriate and important function, and is not to be overridden by Congress or disregarded by the courts.

After examining dictionaries in common use (Bouv. L. D.; Standard Dict.; Webster’s Internat. Dict.; Century Dict.), we find little to add to the succinct definition adopted in two cases arising under the Corporation Tax Act of 1909 (Stratton’s Independence v. Howbert, 231 U.S. 399, 415, 34 S.Sup.Ct. 136, 140 [58 L.Ed. 285]; Doyle
v. Mitchell Bros. Co., 247 U.S. 179, 185, 38 S.Sup.Ct. 467, 469 [62 L.Ed. 1054]). ‘Income may be defined as the gain derived from capital, from labor, or from both combined,’ provided it be understood to include profit gained through a sale or conversion of capital assets, to which it was applied in the Doyle Case, 247 U.S. 183;

185, 38 S.Sup.Ct. 467, 469 (62 L.Ed. 1054).

Brief as it is, it indicates the characteristic and distinguishing attribute of income essential for a correct solution of the present controversy. The government, although basing its argument upon the definition as quoted, placed chief emphasis upon the word ‘gain,’ which was extended to include a variety of meanings; while the significance of the next three words was either overlooked or misconceived. ‘Derived-from- capital’; ‘the gain-derived-from-capital,’ etc. Here we have the essential matter: not a gain accruing to capital; not a growth or increment of value in the investment; but a gain, a profit, something of exchangeable value, proceeding from the property, severed from the capital, however invested or employed, and coming in, being ‘derived’-that is, received or drawn by the recipient (the taxpayer) for his separate use, benefit and disposal- that is income derived from property. Nothing else answers the description.

Thus, from every point of view we are brought irresistibly to the conclusion that neither under the Sixteenth Amendment nor otherwise has Congress power to tax without apportionment a true stock dividend made lawfully

If you would like a more thorough treatment of this subject, we refer you to section 6.9.4 et seq. We don’t have the space to repeat ourselves here, especially because the treatment is so much more thorough in that section.

5.1.9 What type of “Tax” Are You Paying the IRS--Direct or Indirect?

There are still only two types of taxes allowed under the Constitution, direct and indirect. Here, as they say, is the sixty-four dollar question. When you file IRS Form 1040, aside from whether or not it’s the correct form for an American working outside the federal zone to use, you’re certainly not paying an indirect excise tax for the privilege of conducting your private profession, are you? Wouldn’t your employer be paying that instead of you?

Aren’t you in fact paying an unapportioned direct tax based upon the amount of money you receive each year, according to the tax tables? But that’s not an indirect tax based upon an excise taxable activity identified under the Constitution, is it? After all, even the 16th Amendment states:

doesn’t it? According to the Supreme Court in the case of Pollock v. Farmers’ Loan and Trust Company, 157 U.S. 429, 158 U.S. 601 (1895), the money you receive in exchange for your labor is your personal property and cannot be directly taxed. They said it again earlier in 1825 as well:

“Every man has a natural right to the fruits of his own labor, is generally admitted; and no other person can rightfully deprive him of those fruits, and appropriate them against his will...”

Maybe your State is sending you a bill each year for your share of your State’s share of a constitutionally apportioned direct tax? They aren’t? So what are you paying?

Aren’t you in fact paying a direct tax that has not been apportioned? It certainly looks that way, doesn’t it? How does the IRS get away with this? Why don’t the federal judges speak up? Is it possible that the high officials of the IRS have been so busy trying to convict everyone who objects to their gross violation of the Constitution that they haven’t had time to read the Brushaber case or other still standing Supreme Court Decisions? Or could they all be victims of outcome based education and can’t understand these court decisions? Or do you think that perhaps the current and former Secretaries of the Treasury and Commissioners of Internal Revenue have read these decisions and just ignore them--and hope you won’t notice, or at least not object if you do?

Amazingly, the truth is that the IRS has never rebutted the Brushaber or Stanton decisions or any subsequent decisions of the Supreme Court that declared income taxes to be indirect excise taxes, either. They also don’t dare deal with the issue in any of their propaganda publications such as the following:

[Rebutted Version of the IRS “The Truth About Frivolous Tax Arguments”, Family Guardian Fellowship
http://famguardian.org/PublishedAuthors/Govt/IRS/friv_tax_rebuts.pdf]

Instead, in trying to sustain the income tax, the IRS has completely ignored these decisions and only quoted from District and Circuit court cases that said what they wanted and ignored the rulings of the Supreme Court, in direct violation of their own Internal Revenue Manual, section 4.10.7.2.9.8 and in contradiction to established precedent of the Supreme Court!124

The founding fathers understood the distinction between direct and indirect taxes. Here is what they said in the Federalist Papers that were the foundation of our Constitution. At the writing of these papers, the Congress had already ratified the Constitution and now ratification was put for vote before the American people. The Papers were written to encourage ratification of the new United States Constitution by the American people to replace the Articles of Confederation. The Papers convey very simply and exactly what the authors, Alexander Hamilton, James Madison, and John Jay explained to the American people about the meaning and content of the constitution for the United States of America:

Federalist Paper #15, 15 FP § 6:

"The existing Confederation’s great and fundamental defect is the principle of LEGISLATION for STATES in their COLLECTIVE CAPACITIES rather than for the INDIVIDUALS living in the States. Although this principle does not apply to all the powers delegated to the Union, it pervades those on which the effectiveness of the rest depends. Except for the rule of apportionment, the United States has indefinite discretion to requisition men and money. But it has no authority to raise either directly from individual citizens of America."

[Emph added]

So what are we missing here? How can the IRS legally enforce a direct unapportioned tax upon people in states of the Union?

The answer is that they are the tax collection agency exclusively and only for the municipal government of the District of Columbia and they have no authority to operate in states of the Union. Treasury Order 150-02, in fact, reveals that the ONLY remaining Internal Revenue District that they can operate within is the District of Columbia. They are responsible for administering a system of excise taxation that is perfectly constitutional, because all of the taxable subjects maintain a domicile within the District of Columbia and not within states of the Union under 26 U.S.C. §911(d)(3). Somewhere along the way, you gave them permission to treat you as a person whose legal identity actually “resides” in the District of Columbia. See 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(39), which says effectively that if you file a form 1040, which is only authorized to be used by “citizens and residents of the United States”, then you are treated as though you have a domicile in the District of Columbia by the federal courts. 26 U.S.C. §7408(d) contains the same provisions. In effect, you helped the IRS kidnap your legal identity and move it to the District of Columbia and thereby put you under the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal courts. If the IRS had told you the WHOLE truth in their publications, which is that you are neither a “citizen” nor a “resident” under any federal law and that the “United States” is defined as the District of Columbia in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) and (a)(10), then you never would have filed the wrong form, the 1040, to begin with. Receipt of this form by the IRS provided court-admissible evidence under penalty of perjury that you are the proper subject of an excise tax upon earnings of those holding “public office” within the District of Columbia. This condition or activity, by the way, is called a “trade or business” within the I.R.C., which is a “word of art” that means “public office”.

If you submitted an IRS Form W-4 to a private employer outside of federal territorial jurisdiction, then you announced to the IRS that you are a federal “employee” domiciled in the District of Columbia under 26 C.F.R. §31.3401(c)-1 who is engaged in a taxable activity called a “trade or business”. Note that the upper left corner of the W-4 says “EMPLOYEE Withholding Allowance Certificate”. The EMPLOYEE is YOU, friends, and its’ not the “employee” you think it is! Now do you know why they call it “the code”? It’s encrypted and you have to decrypt it by looking up all the definitions. Do you think they are going to make it convenient to stop paying extortion money to them? Does the mafia do what you tell them to? By voluntarily signing that W-4 under penalty of perjury, you also consented to treat all of your earnings as “gross income” under the Internal Revenue Code.

CHAPTER I
SUBCHAPTER C
PART 31
Subpart E
Sec. 31.3402(p)-1 Voluntary withholding agreements.

(a) In general. An employee and his employer may enter into an agreement under section 3402(b) to provide for the withholding of income tax upon payments of amounts described in paragraph (b)(1) of Sec. 31.3401(a)-3, made after December 31, 1970. An agreement may be entered into under this section only with respect to amounts which are includible in the gross income of the employee under section 61, and must be applicable to all such amounts paid by the employer to the employee. The amount to be withheld pursuant to an agreement under section 3402(p) shall be determined under the rules contained in section 3402 and the regulations thereunder. (b) Form and duration of agreement. (1)(i) Except as provided in subdivision (ii) of this subparagraph, an employee who desires to enter into an agreement under section 3402(p) shall furnish his employer with Form W-4 (withholding exemption certificate) executed in accordance with the provisions of section 3402(f) and the regulations thereunder. The furnishing of such Form W-4 shall constitute a request for withholding.

So when you filed that dastardly W-4, which was the wrong form, you gave the IRS permission to treat amounts earned at your employer’s place of business as taxable “gross income” under the Internal Revenue Code and which is connected with the “trade or business” franchise described in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(26). What makes it taxable, is that you essentially volunteered to become a “taxpayer” by submitting that false IRS Form W-4. Signing and submitting that form made you into a “taxpayer” subject to the Internal Revenue Code and a party to a voluntary “contract” between you and your new boss, the IRS. Always remember that the IRS only “helps” people who want to be “taxpayers” and the Internal Revenue Code is written to apply ONLY to “taxpayers”. The IRS doesn’t deal with or help “nontaxpayers”. Their mission statement even bluntly confirms this, which says:

Internal Revenue Manual (I.R.M.), Section 1.1.1.1 (02-26-1999)
IRS Mission and Basic Organization

The IRS Mission: Provide America’s taxpayers top quality service by helping them understand and meet their tax responsibilities and by applying the tax law with integrity and fairness to all.

Do you see “nontaxpayers” anywhere in that mission statement? Therefore, you are a “taxpayer”, if you ask for help from the IRS. If you want help, you are going to have to pay for it, friends, by becoming a “taxpayer”!! Do you think they work for “free” out of the generosity of their heart? If you think the cost of education is high, then try ignorance of the laws for a while and tell us which is more expensive.

[Prov. 28:9, Bible, NKJV]

If you filed a 1040 or took deductions on your return, then you also indirectly announced that you are involved in a “trade or business”, which again is a “public office” in the District of Columbia. We cover these subjects in more detail later in section 5.6.11. 26 C.F.R. §1.1-1(a)(2)(ii) indicates that the only type of taxable income is that which is “effectively connected with a trade of business”. If people would stop acting like “taxpayers”, read the law for themselves, correct their status on all their government paperwork, and stop believing or reading the deceptive IRS publications and phone support, which are deliberately wrong more than 80% of the time, then we could at least hope that things might start getting better. When are people going to learn?

So the answer to the question posed by this section is that the money that most Americans pay to the IRS is, indeed, a lawful direct, unapportioned tax upon their earnings that is perfectly Constitutional, because it is done against a legal “person” who is “resident” within the District of Columbia, which is within exclusive federal jurisdiction. The problem is, that this legal “person” or “res” is something that was created and continues to exist without your knowledge or explicit informed consent. The IRS never told you it was “voluntary” and that you could choose NOT to volunteer, now did they? As such, the tax “codes” are administered by the IRS in a way that is constructively fraudulent, unjust, and usurious. Through smoke and mirrors, the IRS has made the I.R.C. to “appear” like a mandatory unapportioned direct tax upon EVERYONE in states of the Union, when in fact, your informed, voluntary consent as an American Citizen not living within federal jurisdiction is required and mandatory in order to create the taxable legal “person” engaged in the excise taxable privilege called a “trade or business” who is the target of their fraudulent and unlawful enforcement actions. Why would they want the truth to get out about this elaborate trap, if it would just reduce their revenues, cause IRS agents to have to be laid off, and worsen the federal budget deficit? Would you tell just a few “white lies” to the American Public for the sizable sum of one TRILLION dollars a year of cold hard stolen loot? I know a lot of people who would do that, and most of them work for the IRS and the government!

Here is a joke about that subject:

Late one night in the capitol city a mugger wearing a ski mask jumped into the path of a well-dressed man and stuck a gun in his ribs. “Give me your money!” he demanded.

Indignant, the affluent man replied, “You can't do this - I'm a U.S. Congressman!”

(a) IN GENERAL. Notwithstanding the exceptions to the definition of wages specified in section 3401(a) and the regulations thereunder, the term “wages” includes the amounts described in paragraph (b)(1) of this section with respect to which there is a voluntary withholding agreement in effect under section 3402(p). References in this chapter to the definition of wages contained in section 3401(a) shall be deemed to refer also to this section (Section 31.3401(a)-3).

They didn’t tell you it was “voluntary” and that you could choose NOT to volunteer, now did they? As such, the tax “codes” are administered by the IRS in a way that is constructively fraudulent, unjust, and usurious. Through smoke and mirrors, the IRS has made the I.R.C. to “appear” like a mandatory unapportioned direct tax upon EVERYONE in states of the Union, when in fact, your informed, voluntary consent as an American Citizen not living within federal jurisdiction is required and mandatory in order to create the taxable legal “person” engaged in the excise taxable privilege called a “trade or business” who is the target of their fraudulent and unlawful enforcement actions. Why would they want the truth to get out about this elaborate trap, if it would just reduce their revenues, cause IRS agents to have to be laid off, and worsen the federal budget deficit? Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

5.1.10 The Income Tax: Constitutional or Unconstitutional?

So is the income tax constitutional or unconstitutional? If you’re like most people, you probably suspect that its unconstitutional and that Americans pay income taxes in direct violation of the Constitution. Well, in light of everything we just told you, the real answer will likely astonish you. If you don’t have a headache by now, you may want to go take an aspirin at this point, because it gets worse. Here, as they say, is the "story behind the story."

1. In spite of the fact that most Americans have never been lawful withholding agents for nonresident aliens or other foreign entities;
2. In spite of the fact that Americans living and working within the states of the Union have never been made liable by Congress for a tax on “income” under Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A;
3. In spite of the fact that most Americans have been filing IRS Form 1040 every year although it is not a required form for a CONSTITUTIONAL state citizen domiciled in a state of the Union to use according to the OMB;
4. In spite of the fact that most Americans have been paying what appears to be a direct, unapportioned income tax directly to the IRS:

In spite of all this, the money that Americans have VOLUNTEERED to self-assess and pay to the IRS are in fact absolutely and 100% constitutional. Paying what are actually donations to the federal government deceitfully disguised as lawful “taxes” is constitutional when Americans are not compelled to do so. They are really donations, but your dishonest public servants call them “taxes” to increase “voluntary compliance”. This kind of manipulation is dishonest and fraudulent, but the courts refuse to force the government to tell the truth about the voluntary nature of Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A, so we continue to be the victim of such constructive fraud. For an eye-opening article on this subject, read:

Federal Courts and the IRS’ Own IRM Say the IRS is NOT RESPONSIBLE for Its Actions or its Words or for Following Its Own Written Procedures, Family Guardian Fellowship

http://famguardian.org/Subjects/Taxes/Articles/IRSNotResponsible.htm

How is this possible? Because the Internal Revenue Code is limited in its application to what is specifically written and stated. All law is always specific to the subjects it is directed at, no others, and is never generally applied to persons or activities that are not mentioned. In real estate the term is "location, location, location".

The first and foremost principle of law is jurisdiction, jurisdiction, jurisdiction. Therefore, the first question to be answered is: where are you? Are you abroad in a foreign country or in a U.S. possession or territory such as Guam or Samoa? Or are you within one of the now 50 Union states and outside of plenary or exclusive federal jurisdiction?

In Hooven & Allison Co. v. Evatt, 324 U.S. 652 (1945) the high Court stated that, in exercising its constitutional power to make all needful regulations respecting territory belonging to the United States, Congress is not subject to the same constitutional limitations as when legislating for the 50 Union states.

In Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U.S. 244 (1901), the Supreme Court stated that constitutional restrictions and limitations were not applicable to the areas, enclaves, territories and possessions over which Congress had exclusive legislative authority--i.e., not the 50 Union states.

The constitution and the Bill of Rights, which is the First ten Amendments to the Constitution, attach not to your citizenship status, but to the land you live on and it protects ALL, whether citizen or alien.

"The difficulties arising out of our dual form of government and the opportunities for differing opinions concerning the relative rights of state and national governments are many; but for a very long time this court has steadfastly adhered to the doctrine that the taxing power of Congress does not extend to the states or their political subdivisions. The same basic reasoning which leads to that conclusion, we think, requires like limitation upon the power which springs from the bankruptcy clause. United States v. Butler, supra."

[Ashton v. Cameron County Water Improvement District No. 1, 298 U.S. 513, 56 S.Ct. 892 (1936)]

The constitutional protection against direct taxation afforded to Americans, however, ends at the borders of the states of the Union and affords no protection within the territories and possessions where Congress has exclusive and plenary power to...
tax. In short-row out past the international limit and Congress has you by the short hairs. But here within the 50 states of the Union., you're FREE! (remember the Bible, Matthew 17:24-27?)

So the question where you are is primary. The next question is: who are you? Are you:

4. A statutory “non-resident non-person” who is NONE of the above and outside of federal jurisdiction because:
   4.1. Not domiciled on present anywhere in the federal zone.

Under the Internal Revenue Code, a “resident alien” or “resident” for short is a foreigner who has received permission to live in the stay in the District of Columbia for a prolonged period and may be in the process of relocating here permanently and becoming a naturalized citizen. If you are domiciled in a state of the Union, on the other hand, you are called a “non-resident non-person” if not engaged in a public office and a “nonresident alien” if engaged in a public office. Other than in the context of their official duties as a public officer, “nonresident aliens” are afforded the same protections as a citizen under the Constitution.

A “non-resident non-person” could be a French tourist just visiting our country. What if he sold a painting to an American citizen while visiting here? Under no circumstances would he be made liable to pay a tax to the U.S. Government on that transaction unless he is in receipt of federal payments from within the District of Columbia and volunteers to declare himself to be engaged in a taxable activity called a “trade or business”, as you will find out later. France might tax him under a treaty with our government, but our government would have no jurisdiction.

The next question is what, What were you doing that made you liable for a particular class of taxation? Were you engaged in a privileged excise taxable activity such as the sale, manufacture or distribution or alcohol, tobacco or firearms within the federal zone? Or were you engaged in the exercise of a natural right, such as your right to exchange your labor for money?

The next question is when? When were you engaged in the particular taxable activity, because, if you were liable for the particular tax, the rate of taxation may have been different than at another time.

Let's put all this together into a specific example. Let's say you're an American citizen domiciled in the middle of the country, say in Kansas, in 1998. Where are you? In one of the states of the Union, which are “foreign” with respect to federal general legislative jurisdiction. Therefore, you fall under the protection of the Constitution.

Who are you? If you have never renounced your citizenship, you're an American National, therefore you cannot be taxed directly by the federal government under Article 1, Section 2, Clause 3 of the Constitution as we have already seen.

What are you doing? Selling your house, so that's a capital gain, right? Not for you. You're a citizen within the state of Kansas. You do not live in the “United States” under the Internal Revenue Code, which is limited to the District of Columbia (see 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) and (a)(10)). Congress cannot directly tax the proceeds from the sale of your property because they can't collect a tax in an area over which they have no legislative or subject matter jurisdiction:

"It is no longer open to question that the general government, unlike the states, Hammer v. Dagenhart, 247 U.S. 295, 35 S.Ct. 529, 5 A.L.R. 649, Ann.Cas.1918E 724, possesses no inherent power in respect of the internal affairs of the states; and emphatically not with regard to legislation."

[Carter v. Carter Coal Co., 298 U.S. 228, 56 S.Ct. 855 (1936)]

When did you do this? Sometime during 1998. Was the Constitution in full force and effect? Yes, it's been in full force and effect since the day it was ratified and that included 1998. In other words, the law did not apply to you under these particular, limited circumstances.

However, what if you step outside the jurisdictional restrictions of the I.R.C. and volunteer to assess yourself a tax you don’t owe and volunteer to pay it? Is that unconstitutional? No, of course not. It's called "voluntary compliance" and the IRS thanks you for your generous and willing “donation.”
By volunteering to make a donation to the Treasury, millions of Americans each year manage to do something all by themselves that all the international bankers combined could not accomplish, that is, to prop up paper money as Beardsley Ruml explained. And deep in their hearts, Congress and senior Treasury Department officials must say a silent prayer of thanks to all of those willing to volunteer!

Disregarding whether income taxes on U.S. (note capitalization, and as distinguished from “U.S. citizens”, as described in section 3.12.1.24) Americans living and working in the 50 Union states are constitutional from the perspective of direct or indirect taxes, there are many other legal reasons why they are unconstitutional if they are enforced rather than strictly voluntary. Consider all of the constitutional provisions that are violated by the provisions below as a consequence of compelling Americans domiciled and working in the 50 Union states to involuntarily pay monies to the government or file a tax return:

5.1.11 Taxable persons and objects within I.R.C., Subtitle A

As we said in previous sections, I.R.C., Subtitle A describes an indirect excise tax upon a privileged activity called a “trade or business”, which is defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(26) as “the functions of a public office”. This section will identify specific taxable persons and activities within the I.R.C. and where the tax upon these persons is found. Below is a simplified table summarizing all the taxable persons and activities:

NOTES:

1. A “trade or business” is defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(26) as “the functions of a public office”. Congress can only tax a “trade or business” in the District of Columbia and outside the District of Columbia in places where it has expressly authorized “public offices”, as required by 4 U.S.C. §72. The only place outside the District of Columbia where “public offices” have been expressly authorized is in the Virgin Islands, pursuant to 48 U.S.C. §1612. No “public offices” have been expressly authorized within any state of the Union except possibly in federal areas, and so taxes related to “trade or business” activities cannot apply in states of the Union.
2. For the purposes of above table, “federal zone” means the District of Columbia and the Virgin Islands, and excludes all other localities, including states of the Union. Title 48 of the U.S. Code indicates that all other territories and possessions do not have federal income taxes. This is covered in much greater detail later in section 5.14.
3. When statutory “U.S. citizens” as defined in 8 U.S.C. §1401 and 26 C.F.R. §1.1-1(c) are abroad, they interface to the I.R.C. as “aliens” through a tax treaty with a foreign country. The same is true of “residents” (aliens) domiciled in the federal zone who are temporarily abroad.
4. Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A is NOT a tax on “all earnings” or “gross receipts”, but instead is a tax upon “profit” connected with excise taxable activity, which is a “trade or business”, meaning a public office.

“We must reject in this case, as we have rejected in cases arising under the Corporation Excise Tax Act of 1909 (Doyle, Collector, v. Mitchell Brothers Co., 247 U.S. 179, 38 Sup.Ct. 467, 62 L.Ed.--), the broad contention submitted on behalf of the government that all receipts—everything that comes in—are income within the proper definition of the term ‘gross income,’ and that the entire proceeds of a conversion of capital assets, in whatever form and under whatever circumstances accomplished, should be treated as gross income. Certainly the term ‘income’ has no broader meaning in the 1913 act than in that of 1909 (see Stratton’s Independence v. Howbert, 231 U.S. 399, 416, 417 S., 34 Sup.Ct. 136), and for the present purpose we assume there is no difference in its meaning as used in the two acts.” (Southern Pacific Co. v. Lowe, 247 U.S. 330, 335, 38 S.Ct. 540 (1918)).

The bottom line to the above is that unless you are either domiciled in the federal zone or receive payments of some kind from the U.S. government, including employment compensation as a federal “employee”, I.R.C., Subtitle A says you can’t earn “gross income” or “taxable income”. To confirm these findings, the following corroborating evidence is provided:

1. The Index in the back of the current edition to the Internal Revenue Code does not even mention “U.S. citizens”, because the government cannot collect Subtitle A income taxes upon “citizens” of any description, including domiciled citizens, when they are situated within the place of their domicile. The only situation where a statutory “U.S. citizen” as defined in 8 U.S.C. §1401 can be a “taxpayer” is when they are abroad pursuant to 26 U.S.C. §911. This is consistent with the foundation of our tax system which is:

There are many reasons for this, but the most important reason is that taxes destroy sovereignty, and a government cannot be in charge or protecting someone when it has the taxing power to take EVERYTHING they own away from them. If it could, then there would be no way to ensure a fair trial in any court, because no judge who is paid by monies lawfully extorted from citizens could possibly claim to be operating impartially by simultaneously also protecting the rights of the same person. Nearly every country on earth runs its tax system this same way, and most have done just as masterful a job as the U.S. government in hiding the truth within their “codes”. There is a reason they call it “code”: Because you have to “decode” it to understand it. The truth is “encrypted” and kept from you using words of art.

2. No statutory provision is provided in the I.R.C. for a statutory “U.S. citizen” under 8 U.S.C. §1401 domiciled in the federal zone who is not abroad to be taxed because it is simply NOT allowed. This is also consistent with the U.S. Supreme Court’s ruling in Cook v. Tait (1924), in which it said that statutory “U.S. citizens” abroad may be taxed for the privilege of being protected, because they are not protected by the Constitution and the Bill of Rights when overseas.

The “national citizenship” they are talking about is federal zone citizenship and NOT constitutional citizenship. This is confirmed by the same Supreme Court, which said in Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 Dall. (U.S.) 419, 1 L.Ed. 440 (1793) that the U.S. is NOT a “nation”, but a “society”. The above statement also contains a deception, because the phrase “wherever resident” EXCLUDES persons within the exterior boundaries of a state of the Union on other than land subject to the exclusive jurisdiction or plenary power of the general government. When a statutory “citizen of the United States” pursuant to 8 U.S.C. §1401 moves his domicile to a state of the Union or anywhere outside the federal zone, he at that point:

2.2. Becomes a “national” but not a “citizen” pursuant to 8 U.S.C. §1101(a)(21) just like any other person domiciled in the state of the Union he is in.

2.3. Is no longer “subject to the jurisdiction” of the United States, because no longer domiciled there. Domicile is the source of all of the government’s civil jurisdiction, including both its taxing and police powers.

3. 26 C.F.R. §1.1-1(a)(2)(ii) defines a “married individual” and an “unmarried individual” as an alien with earnings from a “trade or business”. The only “taxpayers” who are “individuals” are therefore “aliens”, and a “nonresident alien” as defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(b)(1)(B) is not equivalent to an “alien” as defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(b)(1)(A).

4. I.R.C. Section 1 imposes the Subtitle A income tax, but the word “domicile” are never mentioned, even though this is the ONLY lawful basis for the tax according to the U.S. Supreme Court.

"The right to tax and regulate the national citizenship is an inherent right under the rule of the Law of Nations, which is part of the law of the United States, as described in Article I, Section 8, Clause 17. "The Lusitania, 251 F.715, 712.

The requirement for domicile is carefully hidden in 26 U.S.C. §911(d)(3), by referring to it as “abode”, which the legal dictionary defines as domicile. The only tax liability connected with domicile therefore relates ONLY to “citizens and residents” while they are abroad, but not domestically (federal zone) situated. The reason the I.R.C. doesn’t mention the source of authority for income tax as “domicile” is because domicile is so hard to prove, and because it is voluntary. If you knew the law allowed you to “unvolunteer”, would you participate in the income tax system? This is covered later starting in section 5.4.8.

5. Nowhere in the Internal Revenue Code is the term “individual” defined, because if your corrupt public servants did truthfully define it, they would have to admit that it means a government (corporate) person domiciled in the federal zone and engaged in a public office. 5 U.S.C. §552(a)(2) confirms that such an “individual” is a government employee or agent or “public officer”, because it falls under Title 5 of the U.S. Code, which is entitled “Government Organization and Employees”. The government cannot keep records on citizens who are not domiciled in their jurisdiction, because they would be engaging in a conspiracy to violate the privacy of those persons in violation of the Fourth Amendment, but it certainly has the authority to maintain records, protected by the Privacy Act, which describe public employees.

6. 26 U.S.C. §871 lists all the taxable activities and “sources” together in one spot. Although this section describes the taxable activities for “nonresident aliens”, the same rules apply to ALL persons, because equal protection of the law mandated by Section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment demands that everyone in states of the Union must pay the same amount and kind of taxes on the same activities. Notice that this section divides the taxable activities basically into two groups: 1. Earnings not connected with a “trade or business” in 26 U.S.C. §871(a); 2. Earnings connected with a “trade or business” in 26 U.S.C. §871(b). Notice also that all the items in 26 U.S.C. §871(a) are payments by the government to private persons of one kind or another or are earnings from passive activities in the District of Columbia, which is what the “United States” is defined as for that section in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) and a(10).

The process of determining whether we are “taxpayers” under Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A is rather simple. Below are the questions you must answer and the consequences of each answer:

If the answer to all the above is NO, then you can’t be a “taxpayer” under I.R.C., Subtitle A and must instead be a “nontaxpayer” not subject to any part of the Internal Revenue Code. Such a person would be a “foreign estate” as defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(31).

5.1.12 The “Dual” nature of the Internal Revenue Code

Congress legislates for two separate legal and political and territorial jurisdictions:
1. The states of the Union under the requirements of the Constitution of the United States. In this capacity, it is called the “federal/general government”.

2. The U.S. government, the District of Columbia, U.S. possessions and territories, and enclaves within the states. In this capacity, it is called the “national government”. The authority for this jurisdiction derives from Article I, Section 8, Clause 17 of the United States Constitution. All laws passed essentially amount to municipal laws for federal property, and in that capacity, Congress is not restrained by either the Constitution or the Bill of Rights. We call the collection of all federal territories, possessions, and enclaves within the states “the federal zone” throughout this document.

The U.S. Supreme Court confirmed this division of powers of our general government described above when it said:

“It is clear that Congress, as a legislative body, exercise two species of legislative power: the one, limited as to its objects, but extending all over the Union: the other, an absolute, exclusive legislative power over the District of Columbia. The preliminary inquiry in the case now before the Court, is, by virtue of which of these authorities was the law in question passed?"

[Cohens v. Virginia, 19 U.S. 264, 6 Wheat. 265, 5 L.Ed. 257 (1821)]

James Madison, one of our founding fathers, described these two separate jurisdictions in Federalist Paper #39, when he said:

First. In order to ascertain the real character of the government, it may be considered in relation to the foundation on which it is to be established; to the sources from which its ordinary powers are to be drawn; to the operation of those powers; to the extent of them; and to the authority by which future changes in the government are to be introduced.

On examining the first relation, it appears, on one hand, that the Constitution is to be founded on the assent and ratification of the people of America, given by deputies elected for the special purpose; but, on the other, that this assent and ratification is to be given by the people, not as individuals composing one entire nation, but as composing the distinct and independent States to which they respectively belong. It is to be the assent and ratification of the several States, derived from the supreme authority in each State, the authority of the people themselves. The act, therefore, establishing the Constitution, will not be a NATIONAL, but a FEDERAL act.

That it will be a federal and not a national act, as these terms are understood by the objectors; the act of the people, as forming so many independent States, not as forming one aggregate nation, is obvious from this single consideration, that it is to result neither from the decision of a MAJORITY of the people of the Union, nor from that of a MAJORITY of the States. It must result from the UNANIMOUS assent of the several States that are parties to it, differing no otherwise from their ordinary assent than in its being expressed, not by the legislative authority, but by that of the people themselves. Were the people regarded in this transaction as forming one nation, the will of the majority of the whole people of the United States would bind the minority, in the same manner as the majority in each State must bind the minority; and the will of the majority must be determined either by a comparison of the individual votes, or by considering the will of the majority of the States as evidence of the will of a majority of the people of the United States. Neither of these rules have been adopted. Each State, in ratifying the Constitution, is considered as a sovereign body, independent of all others, and only to be bound by its own voluntary act. In this relation, then, the new Constitution will, if established, be a FEDERAL, and not a NATIONAL constitution.

The next relation is, to the sources from which the ordinary powers of government are to be derived. The House of Representatives will derive its powers from the people of America; and the people will be represented in the same proportion, and on the same principle, as they are in the legislature of a particular State. So far the government is NATIONAL, not FEDERAL. The Senate, on the other hand, will derive its powers from the States, as political and coequal societies; and these will be represented on the principle of equality in the Senate, as they now are in the existing Congress. So far the government is FEDERAL, not NATIONAL. The executive power will be derived from a very compound source: The immediate election of the President is to be made by the States in their political characters. The votes allotted to them are in a compound ratio, which considers them partly as distinct and coequal societies, partly as unequal members of the same society. The eventual election, again, is to be made by that branch of the legislature which consists of the national representatives; but in this particular act they are to be thrown into the form of individual delegations, from so many distinct and coequal bodies politic.

From this aspect of the government it appears to be of a mixed character, presenting at least as many FEDERAL as NATIONAL features.

The difference between a federal and national government, as it relates to the OPERATION OF THE GOVERNMENT, is supposed to consist in this, that in the former the powers operate on the political bodies composing the Confederacy, in their political capacities; in the latter, on the individual citizens composing the nation, in their individual capacities. On trying the Constitution by this criterion, it falls under the NATIONAL, not the FEDERAL character; though perhaps not so completely as has been understood. In several cases, and particularly in the trial of controversies to which States may be parties, they must be viewed and proceeded against in their collective and political capacities only. So far the national countenance of the government on this side seems to be disfigured by a few federal features. But this blemish is perhaps unavoidable in any plan; and the operation of the government on the people, in their individual capacities, in its ordinary and most essential proceedings, may, on the whole, designate it, in this relation, a NATIONAL government.

But if the government be national with regard to the OPERATION of its powers, it changes its aspect again when we contemplate it in relation to the EXTENT of its powers. The idea of a national government involves in it, not only an authority over the individual citizens, but an indefinite supremacy over all persons and things, so far as they are objects of lawful government. Among a people consolidated into one nation, this supremacy is completely vested in the national legislature. Among communities united for particular purposes, it is vested partly in the general and partly in the municipal legislatures. In the former case, all local authorities are subordinate to the supreme; and may be controlled, directed, or abolished by it at pleasure. In the latter, the local or municipal authorities form distinct and independent portions of the supremacy, no more subject, within their respective spheres, to the general authority, than the general authority is subject to them, within its own sphere. In this relation, then, the proposed government cannot be deemed a NATIONAL one; since its jurisdiction extends to certain enumerated objects only, and leaves to the several States a residuary and inviolable sovereignty over all other objects. It is true that in controversies relating to the boundary between the two jurisdictions, the tribunal which is ultimately to decide, is to be established under the general government. But this does not change the principle of the case. The decision is to be impartially made, according to the rules of the Constitution; and all the usual and most effectual precautions are taken to secure this impartiality. Some such tribunal is clearly essential to prevent an appeal to the sword and a dissolution of the compact; and that it ought to be established under the general rather than under the local governments, or, to speak more properly, that it could be safely established under the first alone, is a position not likely to be combated.

If we try the Constitution by its last relation to the authority by which amendments are to be made, we find it neither wholly NATIONAL nor wholly FEDERAL. Were it wholly national, the supreme and ultimate authority would reside in the MAJORITY of the people of the Union; and this authority would be competent at all times, like that of a majority of every national society, to alter or abolish its established government. Were it wholly federal, on the other hand, the concurrence of each State in the Union would be essential to every alteration that would be binding on all. The mode provided by the plan of the convention is not founded on either of these principles. In requiring more than a majority, and particularly in computing the proportion by STATES, not by CITIZENS, it departs from the NATIONAL and advances towards the FEDERAL character; in rendering the concurrence of less than the whole number of States sufficient, it loses again the FEDERAL and partakes of the NATIONAL character.

The proposed Constitution, therefore, is, in strictness, neither a national nor a federal Constitution, but a composition of both. In its foundation it is federal, not national; in the sources from which the ordinary powers of the government are drawn, it is partly federal and partly national; in the operation of these powers, it is national, not federal; in the extent of them, again, it is federal, not national; and, finally, in the authoritative mode of introducing amendments, it is neither wholly federal nor wholly national.

PUBLIUS.

[Federalist Paper #39, James Madison]

Based on Madison’s comments, a “national government” operates upon and derives its authority from individual citizens whereas a “federal government” operates upon and derives its authority from states. The only place where the central government may operate directly upon the individual through the authority of law is within federal territory. Hence, when courts use the word “national government”, they are referring to federal territory only and to no part of any state of the Union. The federal government has no jurisdiction within a state of the Union and therefore cannot operate directly upon the individual there.

"It is no longer open to question that the general government, unlike the states, Hammer v. Dagenhart, 247 U.S. 291, 275, 38 S.Ct. 529, 3 A.L.R. 649, Ann.Cas.1918E 724, possesses no inherent power in respect of the internal affairs of the states; and emphatically not with regard to legislation." [Carter v. Carter Coal Co., 298 U.S. 238, 56 S.Ct. 835 (1936)]

The rights of life and personal liberty are natural rights of man. 'To secure these rights,' says the Declaration of Independence, 'governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.' The very highest duty of the States, when they entered into the Union under the Constitution, was to protect all persons within their boundaries in the enjoyment of these 'unalienable rights with which they were endowed by their Creator.' Sovereignty, for this purpose, rests alone with the States. It is no more the duty or within the power of the United States to punish for a conspiracy "554 to falsely imprison or murder within a State, than it would be to punish for false imprisonment or murder itself.

The fourteenth amendment prohibits a State from denying to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws; but this provision does not, any more than the one which precedes it, and which we have just considered, add any thing *555 to the rights which one citizen has under the Constitution against another. The equality of the rights of citizens is a principle of republicanism. Every republican government is in duty bound to protect all its citizens in the enjoyment of this principle, if within its power. That duty was originally assumed by the States; and it still remains there. The only obligation resting upon the United States is to see that the States do not deny the right. This the amendment guarantees, but no more. The power of the national government is limited to the enforcement of this guaranty.

These two political/legal jurisdictions, federal territory v. states of the Union, are separate sovereignties, and the Constitution dictates that these two distinct sovereignties MUST remain separate because of the Separation of Powers Doctrine:

[Treatise on Government, Joel Tiffany, p. 49, Section 78;

In this section, we will summarize federal jurisdiction to tax by consolidating the analysis found throughout this chapter into one simple table to make our findings crystal clear. The vast majority of all laws passed by Congress apply to the latter jurisdiction above: the federal zone. The Internal Revenue Code actually describes the revenue collection “scheme” for these two completely separate political and legal jurisdictions and the table below compares the two. In the capacity as the “national government”, the I.R.C. in Subtitles A (income tax), B (inheritance tax), and C (employment tax) acts as the equivalent of a state income tax for the municipal government of the District of Columbia only. In the capacity of the “federal government”, the I.R.C. in subtitle D acts as an excise tax on imports only. We discussed the difference between the “national government” and the “federal/general government” earlier in section 4.7, if you would like to review:

The “plenary” jurisdiction described above means exclusive sovereignty which is not shared by any other sovereignty and which is exercised over territorial lands owned by or ceded to the federal government under Article 1, Section 8, Clause 17 of the Constitution. Here is a cite that helps confirm what we are saying about the “plenary” word above:

"In dealing with the meaning and application of an act of Congress enacted in the exercise of its plenary power under the Constitution to tax income and to grant exemptions from that tax, it is the will of Congress which controls, and the expression of its will, in the absence of language evidencing a different purpose, should be interpreted 'so as to give a uniform application to a nation-wide scheme of taxation'. Burnet v. Harmel, 287 U.S. 103, 110, 53 S.Ct. 74, 77. Congress has established its own criteria and the state law may control only when the federal taxing act by express language or necessary implication makes its operation dependent upon state law. Burnet v. Harmel, supra. See Burk-Wegmeyer Oil Association v. Hopkins, 269 U.S. 110, 111, 114 S., 46 S.Ct. 48, 49; Weiss v. Wiener, 279 U.S. 333, 49 S.Ct. 337; Morrissey v. Commissioner, 296 U.S. 44, 56 S.Ct. 289.

Why is such jurisdiction “plenary” or “exclusive”? Because all those who file IRS 1040 returns implicitly consent to be treated as “virtual residents” of the District of Columbia, over which Congress has exclusive legislative jurisdiction under Article 1, Section 8, Clause 17 of the Constitution:

TITLE 26 > Subtitle E > CHAPTER 79 > Sec. 7701.

Sec. 7701. – Definitions

(a) When used in this title, where not otherwise distinctly expressed or manifestly incompatible with the intent thereof—

(39) Persons residing outside [the federal] United States

If any citizen or resident of the United States does not reside in (and is not found in) any United States judicial district, such citizen or resident shall be treated as residing in the District of Columbia for purposes of any provision of this title relating to -

(A) jurisdiction of courts, or
(B) enforcement of summons.

Because kidnapping is illegal under 18 U.S.C. §1201, people domiciled in states of the Union subject to the provisions above must be volunteers and must explicitly consent to participate in federal taxation by filling out the WRONG tax form, which is the 1040, and signing it under penalty of perjury. The IRS Published Products Catalog for 2003 confirms that those who file IRS Form 1040 do indeed declare themselves to be “citizens or residents of the [federal] United States”, which is untrue for the vast majority of Americans:

W:CAR:MP:FP:F:JTax Form or Instructions

If American Nationals domiciled in the states of the Union would learn to file with their correct status as “non-resident non-persons”, then most Americans wouldn’t owe anything. They would have no earnings from sources identified in 26 U.S.C. §871! The U.S. Congress and their IRS henchmen have become “sheep poachers”, where you, a person domiciled in state of the Union and outside of federal legislative jurisdiction, are the “sheep”. They are “legally kidnapping” people away from the Constitutional protections of their domicile within states using deceptive forms so that they volunteer into exclusive federal jurisdiction to become “U.S. persons”, “U.S. citizens”, or “residents” under federal law.

Notice the use of the term “nation-wide” in the Lyeth case above, which we now know means the “national government” in the context of its jurisdiction over federal territories, possessions, and the District of Columbia and which excludes states of the Union. They are just reiterating that federal jurisdiction over the federal zone is “exclusive” and “plenary” and that state law only applies where Congress consents to delegate authority, under the rules of “comity”, to the state relating to taxing matters over federal areas within the exterior limits of a state.
An example of this kind of “comity” is the Buck Act, 4 U.S.C. §§110-113, in which 4 U.S.C. §106 delegates authority to federal territories and possessions, but not states of the Union, to tax areas within their boundaries subject to exclusive federal jurisdiction. That jurisdiction then is mentioned in the context of 5 U.S.C. §5517 as applying ONLY to federal “employees”.

The above table is confirmed by the Supreme Court in the case of Downes v. Bidwell, which said on the subjects covered by the table:

"Loughborough v. Blake, 5 Wheat. 317, 5 L.Ed. 98, was an action of trespass or, as appears by the original record, replevin, brought in the circuit court for the District of Columbia to try the right of Congress to impose a direct tax for general purposes on that District. 3 Stat. at L. 216, chap. 60. It was insisted that Congress could act in a double capacity: in one as legislating [182 U.S. 244, 260] for the states; in the other as a local legislature for the District of Columbia. In the latter character, it was admitted that the power of levying direct taxes might be exercised, but for District purposes only, as a state legislature might tax for state purposes; but that it could not legislate for the District under art. 1, 8, giving to Congress the power 'to lay and collect taxes, impost, and excises,' which 'shall be uniform throughout the United States,' inasmuch as the District was no part of the United States [described in the Constitution]. It was held that the grant of this power was a general one without limitation as to place, and consequently extended to all places over which the government extends; and that it extended to the District of Columbia as a constituent part of the United States. The fact that art. 1, 2, declares that 'representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several states . . . according to their respective numbers' furnished a standard by which taxes were apportioned, but not to exempt any part of the country from their operation. The words used do not mean that direct taxes shall be imposed on states only which are represented, or shall be apportioned to representatives; but that direct taxation, in its application to states, shall be apportioned to numbers.' That art. 1, 9, 4, declaring that direct taxes shall be laid in proportion to the census, was applicable to the District of Columbia, 'and will enable Congress to apportion on it its just and equal share of the burden, with the same accuracy as on the respective states. If the tax be laid in this proportion, it is within the very words of the restriction. It is a tax in proportion to the census or enumeration referred to.' It was further held that the words of the 9th section did not 'in terms require that the system of direct taxation, when resorted to, shall be extended to the territories, as the words of the 2d section require that it shall be extended to all the states. They therefore may, without violence, be understood to give a rule when the territories shall be taxed, without imposing the necessity of taxing them."

"There could be no doubt as to the correctness of this conclusion, so far, at least, as it applied to the District of Columbia. This District had been a part of the states of Maryland and [182 U.S. 244, 261] Virginia. It had been subject to the Constitution, and was a part of the United States[*][][]. The Constitution had attached to it irrevocably. There are steps which can never be taken backward, the tie that bound the states of Maryland and Virginia to the Constitution could not be dissolved, without at least the consent of the Federal and state governments to a formal separation. The mere cession of the District of Columbia to the Federal government relinquished the authority of the states, but it did not take it out of the United States or from under the aegis of the Constitution. Neither party had ever consented to that construction of the cession. If, before the District was set off, Congress had passed an unconstitutional act affecting its inhabitants, it would have been void. If done after the District was created, it would have been equally void; in other words, Congress could not do indirectly, by carving out the District, what it could not do directly. The District still remained a part of the United States, protected by the Constitution. Indeed, it would have been a fanciful construction to hold that territory which had been once a part of the United States ceased to be such by being ceded directly to the Federal government."

"Indeed, the practical interpretation put by Congress upon the Constitution has been long continued and uniform to the effect [182 U.S. 244, 279] that the Constitution is applicable to territories acquired by purchase or conquest, only when and so far as Congress shall so direct. Notwithstanding its duty to 'guarantee to every state in this Union a republican form of government' (art. 4, 4), by which we understand, according to the definition of Webster, 'a government in which the supreme power resides in the whole body of the people, and is exercised by representatives elected by them,' Congress did not hesitate, in the original organization of the territories of Louisiana, Florida, the Northwest Territory, and its subdivisions of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, and Wisconsin and still more recently in the case of Alaska, to establish a form of government bearing a much greater analogy to a British Crown colony than a republican state of America, and to vest the legislative power either in a governor and council, or a governor and judges, to be appointed by the President. It was not until they had attained a certain population that power was given them to organize a legislature by vote of the people. In all
Based on the above table, ALL of the revenues collected by the IRS under the authority of Subtitle A only apply to workers of the employees, instrumentalities, and public officers of the U.S. government wherever located, those receiving federal payments, and those domiciled in the federal zone, and they behave as the equivalent of a kickoff of a federal payment, and not lawful “taxes”. In particular, Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A applies only within federal territory, as is revealed by the definition of “United States” found in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) and (a)(10) and 4 U.S.C. §110(d). The IRS has been involved in criminal extortion because they are:

1. Deliberately and systematically deceiving Americans about the requirements of the I.R.C. using their publications, as we showed earlier in section 3.19. They are doing so by not explaining what “United States” means in their publications and by not emphasizing that Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A is entirely voluntary and not a “tax”, but a donation. They also are trying to make most Americans falsely believe that the two jurisdictions identified above are equivalent, and that all Americans domiciled in states of the Union are “citizens of the United States” or “residents” under federal law, when in fact they are not. Americans who make false statements on their tax returns go to jail for 3 years minimum, but the I.R.S. does it with impunity every day in their publications and the federal judiciary refuses to hold them accountable for this constructive fraud.

2. Applying Subtitles A through C of the Internal Revenue Code unlawfully to persons domiciled in states of the Union over which they have no jurisdiction.

4. Enforcing that which is not “law” and is therefore unenforceable. The Internal Revenue Code is not “law” for those not subject to it such as “nontaxpayers”, as you will find out later in section 5.4.3, and therefore may not be enforced against anyone absent explicit, informed, voluntary consent and a promise by the government of no repercussions for not “volunteering”. Those who explicitly consent in writing or implicitly consent by their conduct to be subject to it are called “taxpayers”, and for them ONLY, I.R.C., Subtitle A is “law”.

5.1.13 Brief History of Circuit Court Rulings Relating to Income Taxes

Before we scare you or confuse you with the following, we wish to emphasize that in the cases cited below, those cases that contradicted the idea that mandatory income taxes are excise taxes have a common thread, and that thread is that the individuals who ended up having to pay in effect a FORCED DIRECT income tax claimed they were U.S. citizens and/or claimed they resided “within the United States Judicial District”, which is a no-no as we emphasize throughout this book. These are the two things that got them into most of their trouble. If they had insisted all along that:

1. They were “non-resident non-persons” not subject to the laws of Congress and outside their jurisdiction.
2. Filed their withholding forms consistent with this status. This means NOT filing I.R.S. Form W-4.
3. Changed their citizenship status to “nationals” in all government records. This includes passports.
4. Filed their “Revocation of Election” (see section 4.5.3.13 of the Sovereignty Forms and Instructions Manual, Form #10.005) as required

...then the federal courts would have respected their rights and not tried to assert nonexistent jurisdiction over them to assess federal income taxes.

In 1894, Congress adopted an income tax act which was declared unconstitutional in Pollock v. Farmers’ Loan & Trust Co., 157 U.S. 429, 15 S.Ct. 673, aff. reh., 158 U.S. 601, 15 S.Ct. 912 (1895). The Pollock Court found that the income tax was a direct tax which could only be imposed if the tax was apportioned; since this tax was not apportioned, it was found unconstitutional. In an effort to circumvent this decision, the 16th Amendment was proposed by Congress in 1909 and allegedly ratified by the states in 1913. As a result, various opinions arose regarding the legal effect of the amendment. Some factions contended that the 16th Amendment simply eliminated the apportionment requirement for one specific direct tax known as the income tax, while others asserted that the amendment simply withdrew it from the direct tax category and placed the income tax in the indirect, excise tax class. These competing contentions and interpretations were apparently resolved in Brushaber v. Union Pacific Railroad Co., 240 U.S. 1, 36 S.Ct. 236 (1916).\(^{25}\) Rather than attempt a determination of what the Court held in this case, it is more important to learn what various courts have subsequently declared Brushaber to mean.

A little more than a week after the opinion in Brushaber, similar issues were present for decision in Stanton v. Baltic Mining Co., 240 U.S. 103, 112-13, 36 S.Ct. 278 (1916), which involved the question of whether an inadequate depletion allowance for a mining company constituted a direct tax on the company’s property. As to Baltic’s contention that "the 16th Amendment authorized only an exceptional direct income tax without apportionment," the Court rejected it by stating that this contention:

"... manifestly disregards the fact that by the previous ruling it was settled that the provisions of the 16th Amendment conferred no new power of taxation, but simply prohibited the previous complete and plenary power of income taxation possessed by Congress from the beginning from being taken out of the category of indirect taxation to which it inherently belonged, and being placed in the category of direct taxation."

The Court clearly held that income taxes inherently belonged to the indirect/excise tax class, but had been converted by Pollock to direct taxes by considering the source of the income; the 16th Amendment merely banished the rule in Pollock. See also Tyee Realty Co. v. Anderson, 240 U.S. 115, 36 S.Ct. 281 (1916), decided the same day.

Subsequently, there was a ruling on the issue in the case of William E. Peck and Co. v. Lowe, 247 U.S. 165, 172-73, 38 S.Ct. 432, 433 (1918), which involved a tax imposed on export earnings:

"The Sixteenth Amendment, although referred to in argument, has no real bearing and may be put out of view. As pointed out in recent decisions, it does not extend the taxing power to new or excepted subjects, but merely removed all occasion, which otherwise might exist, for an apportionment among the states of taxes laid on income, whether it be derived from one source or another."

The federal district courts deviated from these Supreme Court rulings subsequently as part of a “judicial conspiracy to uphold the income tax” described elsewhere in section 6.6. For instance, in Parker v. Commissioner, 724 F.2d. 469, 471 (5th Cir. 1984), the court clearly rejected the contention that income taxes are an excise:

"The Supreme Court promptly determined in Brushaber... that the sixteenth amendment provided the needed constitutional basis for the imposition of a direct non-apportioned income tax."

"The sixteenth amendment merely eliminates the requirement that the direct income tax be apportioned among the states.

"The sixteenth amendment was enacted for the express purpose of providing for a direct income tax."

In Coleman v. Commissioner, 791 F.2d. 68, 70 (7th Cir. 1986), the court held that an argument that this tax was an excise was frivolous on its face ("The power thus long predates the Sixteenth Amendment, which did no more than remove the apportionment requirement.").

In United States v. Francisco, 614 F.2d. 617, 619 (8th Cir. 1980), that court declared that Brushaber held this tax to be a direct one:

"The cases cited by Francisco clearly establish that the income tax is a direct tax, thus refuting the argument based upon his first theory. See Brushaber v. Union Pacific Railroad Co., 240 U.S. 1, 19, 36 S.Ct. 236, 242, 60 L.Ed. 493 (1916) (the purpose of the Sixteenth Amendment was to take the income tax ‘out of the class of excises, duties and imposts and place it in the class of direct taxes’)."

Finally, in United States v. Lawson, 670 F.2d. 923, 927 (10th Cir. 1982), that court expressed in the following fashion its contempt for the contention that the federal income tax was an indirect excise tax:

"Lawson’s ‘jurisdictional’ claim, more accurately a constitutional claim, is based on an argument that the Sixteenth Amendment only authorizes excise-type taxes on income derived from activities that are government-licensed or otherwise specially protected... The contention is totally without merit... The Sixteenth Amendment \(^{25}\) In this decision, there is a very lengthy sentence which contains the following phrase: "... by which alone such taxes were removed from the great class of excises, duties and imposts subject to the rule of uniformity, and were placed under the other or direct class, 240 U.S., at 19. This phrase and the one at the very end of this paragraph are almost identical. This language was used to describe the contention the Court was rejecting, not approving.

removed any need to apportion income taxes among the states that otherwise would have been required by Article I, Section 9, Clause 4."

A direct tax applies to and taxes property while an indirect, excise tax is never imposed on property but usually a business event such as sales; see Bromley v. McCaughn, 280 U.S. 124, 50 S.Ct. 46, 47 (1929). 26 The federal appellate courts which now hold that an income tax is a direct property tax believe that income is property. 27

Income is property according to St. Louis Union Trust Co. v. United States, 617 F.2d. 1293, 1301 (8th Cir. 1980). Accrued wages and salaries are likewise property; see Sims v. United States, 252 F.2d. 434, 437 (4th Cir. 1958), aff’d., 359 U.S. 108, 79 S.Ct. 641 (1959); and Kolb v. Berlin, 356 F.2d. 269, 271 (5th Cir. 1966). Even private employment and a profession are considered property; see United States v. Briggs, 514 F.2d. 794, 798 (5th Cir. 1975). In James v. United States, 970 F.2d.
750, 755, 756 n. 11 (10th Cir. 1992), the 10th Circuit made it clear that income is property. Pursuant to United States v. 28
Lawson, supra, the Tenth Circuit declares that the property known as income is subject to tax under the view that the 16th Amendment eliminated the apportionment requirement for a specific class of property known as income.

Readers commonly ask us:

“Your book is great, and is so thorough about analyzing all the issues and providing very compelling evidence and debate to support all your arguments. The trouble is, it’s hard to get my relatives and friends interested or motivated enough to read your whole large book. Can you give me a very short synopsis of the income tax fraud that I could tell someone in a short enough time to communicate the essential elements during an elevator ride?
You know, kind of like the 10 second sound bite version that I can yell off a street corner or put into a short pamphlet? That’s about the attention span these days of a media saturated culture, you know, and we have to meet them where they are at!”

Good question! In responding to this query, we must remember the words of one of the most brilliant scientists who ever lived, Albert Einstein, when he said:

“"The essence of genius is simplicity."

The remainder of this section is our attempt to answer this request in as simple and short a way as I know how. It sums up the several hundred pages in this book into one concise brief statement in order to help you get the word out:

To summarize the federal income tax fraud, what the federal government did to create the “appearance” of a lawful income tax on natural persons is the following, in the order it was accomplished:

1. Starting in 1862 to fund the Civil War, Congress passed a municipal donation program that only applies to privileged elected federal employees within the District of Columbia and to federal territories and possessions. See 12 Stat. 432.
These “employees” were all officers of the federal corporation called the “United States” identified in 28 U.S.C.
§3002(15)(A). The “privilege” that was being "taxed” was that of holding a public office, which is called a “trade or business” in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(26). The definition of “employee” found in 5 U.S.C. §2105 continues to be entirely consistent with this scheme.
2. They fraudulently called this donation or “kickback” program a “tax”, even though the Supreme Court admitted it isn’t. See section 5.1.2 earlier.
3. Following the Civil War in 1871, an Act of Congress, 19 Stat. 419, made the District of Columbia into a federal corporation so that this municipal donation program could be made to “appear” like a “tax” on the officers of this federal corporation service in the District of Columbia.

26 The Court defined these two types of taxes in the following manner: “While taxes levied upon or collected from persons because of their general ownership of property may be taken to be direct..., a tax imposed upon a particular use of property or the exercise of a single power over property incidental to ownership, is an excise which need not be apportioned...”

27 At least one court has declared that the term “income” is not defined in the Internal Revenue Code; see United States v. Ballard, 535 F.2d. 400, 404 (8th Cir. 1976).
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

4. Starting with the Revenue Act of 1932, subjected federal judges to IRS terrorism and extortion in order to get them on their side as enforcers and corrupters of the system. This program of extortion was made permanent in 1938, when the Supreme Court wrongly declared in O’Malley v. Woodrough, 307 U.S. 277 (1939) that it was Constitutional.

5. Since that time, they have:

5.2. Passed the Public Salary Tax Act of 1939 and the Buck Act in 1940, in order to unlawfully make the I.R.C. apply within federal areas in the exterior limits of the states.

5.3. Obfuscated and confused the “code” over the years to expand its operation, all the while knowing full well that the I.R.C. was repealed in 1939 (see 53 Stat. 1) and has never been “positive law”. That which is not positive law cannot be enforced against those who do not consent.

6. Congress repealed the Internal Revenue Code in 1939 just before the start of the Second World War and then forgot to tell everyone it was repealed. This made the I.R.C. into a state-sponsored religion for all those who obeyed it from that point on. See:

53 Stat. 1, SEDM Exhibit #05.027
http://sedm.org/Exhibits/ExhibitIndex.htm

7. Then they spent decades propagandizing American Nationals in the states into thinking that this “tax”, which is really just a federal public officer “kickback program” and a voluntary franchise, applied to them. They did so as follows:

7.1. Produced misleading and deceptive IRS publications

7.2. By refusing to acknowledge or admit the truth about the limited scope of their jurisdiction. In short, they “played stupid”.

7.3. Encouraging people to file the wrong tax form: the 1040. The 1040NR is the correct form for Americans domiciled in states of the Union on other than federal territory. This created a false presumption that people domiciled in the states were “U.S. citizens” and “residents” domiciled within the federal zone and subject to federal legislative jurisdiction, when in fact, they were not. This gave the IRS court-admissible evidence that they could use as a basis to launch bogus enforcement actions against sovereign American Nationals in the states.

7.4. Instituted an “Enrolled agent” program to “license” tax professionals so that they could be manipulated and propagated, and have their license pulled and starve to death if they told the truth about the IRS fraud.

7.5. Using “words of art” on government forms that are not defined on the form or in the statutes, such as “State”, “United States”, “employee”, “income”, knowing full well that all these terms refer ONLY to the U.S. government and not any state of the Union or the people domiciled therein.

8. They started a program called Agreements on Coordination of Tax Administration (A.C.T.A.) in 1949 and promised the states “kickbacks” from this extortion if they would sign an agreement with the Secretary of the Treasury. This got the states involved in the fraud and created financial incentives for them to help the IRS expand this illegal organized crime and conspiracy against rights by helping them break down the separation of taxing powers between the states and the federal government. The states at the point became a party to exploiting the propaganda to get their citizens participating in the federal system, because if they didn’t, then they most couldn’t collect anything from state citizens because the Bill of Rights made that process too difficult. This destroyed the separation of powers between the state and federal government by causing states of the Union to act like the federal “States” described in the Buck Act, 4 U.S.C. §110(d).

9. The IRS then launched an automated, computerized, paper-terrorism campaign with their IDRS system throughout the 50 states and outside of their jurisdiction to illegally enforce this donation program. Since the IRS had no implementing regulations authorizing enforcement, they encouraged “voluntary compliance” through:

9.1. Constructive fraud in their publications, which the federal courts refused to hold them accountable for.

9.2. Incorrect telephone support advice, which the federal courts also refused to hold them accountable for.

9.3. Encouraging “false presumption” in their treatment of Americans.

9.4. Scare tactics on their website.

9.5. Mistreatment of selected famous personalities that would get a lot of media coverage.

9.6. Careful use of the media through their “Press Releases” website.

9.7. Terrorizing tax publishers like Ernst and Young to change their publications to deceive Americans.

10. The IRS met with little resistance to the above illegal efforts at enforcement within the states because of the relative legal ignorance of most people.

The legal profession conspired with the IRS in this extortion because doing so would increase their revenues, power, and control over the society. In the process, they committed a constructive fraud, but the corrupt federal courts let them get away with it because their salaries were paid by the money they were extorting. The cite below from the U.S. Supreme Court helps clarify the validity of this approach:

“... [Counsel] has contended, that Congress must be considered in two distinct characters. In one character as legislating for the states; in the other, as a local legislature for the district [of Columbia]. In the latter character, it is admitted, the power of levying direct taxes may be exercised; but, it is contended, for district purposes only, in like manner as the legislature of a state may tax the people of a state for state purposes. Without inquiring at present into the soundness of this distinction, its possible influence on the application in this district of the first article of the constitution, and of several of the amendments, may not be altogether unworthy of consideration."

[Loughborough v. Blake, 18 U.S. 317 (1820)]

5.2 Federal Jurisdiction to Tax

"Giving money and power to government is like giving Whiskey and Car keys to teenage boys"

[P.J O’Rourke, Parliament of Whores]

"The difference between death and taxes is death doesn’t get worse every time Congress meets."

[Will Rogers, 1920’s]

After reading our thorough discussion of the law in chapter 3, you ought to have a good idea the legal background we are operating in. Now let’s apply that to the case of an American national living and working in the 50 United States who has income only from within the 50 Union states of the United States of America. We will find out from this section that the federal government has jurisdiction to tax only the following items. We are showing this picture because “a picture is worth a thousand words”, as they say. This picture applies ONLY to states of the Union, by the way. There are NO LIMITS upon federal taxation within the federal zone or abroad, because neither of these two places are protected by the Constitution:

NOTES:
1. The Sixteenth Amendment did NOT eliminate the constitutional requirement for apportionment of direct or capitation taxes, but simply placed all taxes on income in the category of indirect excise taxes, to which they inherently belonged.
2. “Excise taxes” may only be placed on the sale or manufacture of goods which are imported from foreign countries. Excise taxes are synonymous to “privilege” taxes and apply only to corporations and the profits of corporations, but not to natural born persons.
3. Excise taxes may not be placed on exports from states or sales between two entities entirely within a single state. This requirement comes from Article 1, Section 9, Clause 5 (1:9:5) of the Constitution, which states:

   Article 1, Section 9, Clause 5

   No Tax or Duty shall be laid on Articles exported from any State.

4. The supreme Court case of Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., 220 U.S. 107 (1911) defined excise taxes as:
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

5. When the supreme Court said “licenses”, they meant licenses granted by the taxing authority. For instance, under I.R.C., Subtitle A, one must be a federal corporation or franchise with a domicile in the federal zone and involved in foreign commerce in order to be liable for excise taxes. The same thing goes for state income taxes.

6. If you want to avoid income taxes altogether as a corporation, then just make sure that you have no profits and that all profits are passed on to the wage earners through a means such as employee ownership of the corporation.

Before a court can hear a matter dealing with jurisdiction, at least one of two elements that make up jurisdiction must be present. We now quote Black’s Law Dictionary, Sixth Edition, on this subject:

"Subject matter jurisdiction: This term refers to a court’s power to hear and determine cases of the general class or category to which proceedings in question belong; the power to deal with the general subject involved in the action. Standard Oil Co. v. Montecatini Edison S. p. A., D.C.Del., 342 F.Supp. 125, 129. See also Jurisdiction of the Subject matter."

"Territorial jurisdiction: Territory over which a government or a subdivision thereof, or court, has jurisdiction.

State v. Cox, 106 Utah 253, 147 P.2d. 858, 861. Jurisdiction considered as limited to cases arising or persons residing within a defined territory, as, a country, a judicial district, etc. The authority of any court is limited by the boundaries thus fixed. See also Extraterritorial jurisdiction: Jurisdiction."

Lastly, if you would like to know more about the subject of the federal tax jurisdiction, we have prepared a whole line of deposition questions on the subject useful in an IRS audit or deposition that basically backs the government into the corner of admitting based on facts and evidence and their own words that they have absolutely no basis to assert jurisdiction to impose federal taxes upon sovereign Americans such as yourself. It is at:

Tax Deposition Questions, Family Guardian Fellowship
http://famguardian.org/TaxFreedom/Forms/Discovery/Deposition/Deposition.htm

Look under section 3 of the questions entitled “Jurisdiction” for some rather compelling evidence showing that what we are saying here is true.

5.2.1 Territorial Jurisdiction

Defining jurisdiction is the key to understanding what Congress can lawfully tax. This is the same as the way the real estate field works:

“The three key things in deciding property value are location, location, and location!”

In the case of the government, we could rewrite this as:

“The three key things in deciding the amount of tax that can be extracted/extorted is location, jurisdiction, and what the ignorance and apathy of the voters will let you get away with!”

In this section, we’ll establish the jurisdiction of the federal government of the United States. We have compiled a list of a few court cases and statutory citations that confirm the importance of jurisdiction and geographical boundaries and their extent when establishing the relevancy of the federal tax code:

“The law of Congress in respect to those matters do not extend into the territorial limits of the states, but have force only in the District of Columbia, and other places that are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the national government.”

[Caha v. United States, 152 U.S. 211 (March 5, 1894)]

“. . . the states are separate sovereigns with respect to the federal government. The states are no less sovereign with respect to each other than they are with respect to the federal government. The Court expressly refused to find that only state and federal government could be considered distinct sovereign with respect to each other: ‘

[Heath v. Alabama, 474 U.S. 82 (December 3, 1985)]
[American Banana Co. v. United Fruit Co., 213 U.S. 347, at 357-358 (1909)]

“A canon of construction which teaches that of Congress, unless a contrary intent appears, is meant to apply only within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States.”

NOTE: An example of this construction and limitation is found in Title 18 USC (Criminal Code) at §7 which specifies such jurisdiction outside of any particular state. The Federal income tax of 1939 recorded in the Statutes at Large of October 3, 1913 on page 177 states the limitation to be only that of “any Federal territory, Alaska, District of Columbia, Puerto Rico and Philippine Islands.” Alaska is now a Sovereign state and the Philippine islands are no longer a territory of the United States and you cannot find any reference to these former territories in the Internal Revenue Code. Why is that?

[N.Y. R.R. v. Chisholm, 268 U.S. 29, at 31-32 (1925)]

In addition to these cases, the most enlightening case of all on the subject of federal jurisdiction and the division of responsibilities between the states and the Federal government is the supreme Court case of U.S. v. Lopez, 514 U.S. 549 (1995). This case firmly establishes that the only thing that the federal government can regulate or tax within states are activities that impact commerce between states, under the Commerce Clause of the U.S. Constitution, Article 1, Section 8, Clause 3. There is no other constitutional basis for any federal taxation or intervention within a sovereign state than the Commerce Clause. Direct taxes on citizens assessed within states violate the Commerce Clause and usurp the power, sovereignty, and authority of the states and implementation of such taxes by the IRS and the Treasury should have been declared unconstitutional by all federal courts long ago.

Now that we have established the importance of geography and sovereignty of the states vis a vis the Federal Government, let’s look at the definitions of the term “United States”. Looking into the IRC we find specifics about the definition of the “United States”. It is not the same as the “United States of America”.

1. "United States": general definition for the entire Title 26. This definition is to be used in all chapters, sub-chapter, sections, sub-sections, etc., unless there is another definition for the "United States” for that specific chapter, sub-chapter, section, sub-section, etc.”:

Sec. 7701 Definitions:

(a) When used in this title, where not otherwise distinctly expressed or manifestly incompatible with the intent thereof –

(9) United States. The term "United States” when used in the geographical sense includes only the States and the District Of Columbia.

2. Section 3121 of the I.R.C. deals with the Rate of tax, in Subchapter A - Tax on Employees of Chapter 21-Federal Insurance Contributions Act (FICA). This definition is for chapter 21 ONLY. This definition does not apply to any other chapter, subchapter, section subsection, etc.

Sec. 3121 Definitions: (e) State, United States and citizen.

For purposes of this chapter -(2) United States. The term "United States” when used in the geographical sense includes the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, and American Samoa.

3. Section 3306 deals with Chapter 23-Federal Unemployment Tax Act. This definition is for Chapter 23 ONLY. This definition does not apply to any other chapter, subchapter, section subsection, etc.

Sec. 3306 Definitions:
(j) State, United States and citizen. For purposes of this chapter –

(2) United States. The term “United States” when used in the geographical sense includes the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, and American Samoa.

From these citations, we can clearly infer that jurisdiction and geography are the foundation of all laws! That is why references to legitimate “sources” of tax are so important and why they can’t be ignored, even though the Congress and the IRS would like for you to do so! This section also explains the otherwise absurd definitions of the following two terms found earlier in the document:

Employee: An officer or employee of the federal government (see section 3.11.1.3 and 26 U.S.C. § 3401(c))

5.2.2 Sovereignty: Key to Understanding Federal Territorial Jurisdiction

The concept of sovereignty is the key to understanding federal jurisdiction. First, let’s define the term from Black’s Law Dictionary, Sixth Edition, page 1396:

“Sovereignty. The power to do everything in a state without accountability, to make laws, to execute and to apply them, to impose and collect taxes and levy contributions, to make war or peace, to form treaties of alliance or of commerce with foreign nations, and the like.

Sovereignty in government is that public authority which directs or orders what is to be done by each member associated in relation to the end of the association. It is the supreme power by which any citizen is governed and is the person or body of persons in the necessary existence of the state and that right and power which necessarily follow is “sovereignty.” By “sovereignty” in its largest sense it means supreme, absolute, uncontrollable power, the absolute right to govern. The word which by itself comes nearest to being the definition of “sovereignty” is will or volition as applied to political affairs. City of Bisbee v. Cochise County, 52 Ariz. 1, 78 P.2d. 982, 986.” [Black’s Law Dictionary, Sixth Edition, p. 1396]

The issue of sovereignty as it relates to jurisdiction is the foundation of understanding our system of government under the Constitution. In the most common sense of the word, “sovereignty” is autonomy, freedom from external control. The sovereignty of any government usually extends up to, but not beyond, the geographical borders of its jurisdiction. This jurisdiction defines a specific territorial boundary which separates the “external” from the “internal”, the “within” from the “without”, or the “domestic” from the “foreign”. It may also define a specific function, or set of functions, which a government may lawfully perform within a particular geographic boundary.

Sovereignty is a term to be used very thoughtfully and carefully. In fact, in America, it is the foundation for all governmental authority, because it is always delegated downwards from the true source of sovereignty, the People themselves! This is the entire basis of our Constitutional Republic as follows:

[James Madison, The Federalist, No. 46]

“Whatever these Constitutions and laws validly determine to be property, it is the duty of the Federal Government, through the domain of jurisdiction merely Federal, to recognize to be property.

“And this principle follows from the structure of the respective Governments, State and Federal, and their reciprocal relations. They are different agents and trustees of the people of the several States, appointed with different powers and with distinct purposes, but whose acts, within the scope of their respective jurisdictions, are mutually obligatory.” [Dred Scott v. Sandford, 60 U.S. 393 (1856)]

“While sovereign powers are delegated to ... the government, sovereignty itself remains with the people.” [Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356 (1886)]

The “federal zone” is that area over which the sovereignty or “general legislative jurisdiction” or “police powers” of the federal government extends under the authority of Article I, Section 8, Clause 17 of the U.S. Constitution. It consists of the District of Columbia, the territories and possessions belonging to Congress under Title 48 of the U.S. Code, and a limited amount of land within the states of the Union called “federal enclaves” or “federal areas”. Enclaves are often referred to in U.S. government regulations simply as “the states” or “the States”, which can and often does deceive people into thinking this means all of the nonfederal land in the 50 sovereign states of the union when in fact it does not in nearly all cases. The U.S. Supreme Court, in the case of Hooven and Allison v. Evatt, confirmed this view in its definition of “United States”:

> “The term ‘United States’ may be used in any one of several senses. [1] It may be merely the name of a sovereign occupying the position analogous to that of other sovereigns in the family of nations. [2] It may designate the territory over which the sovereignty of the United States extends, or [3] it may be the collective name of the states which are united by and under the Constitution.”

Note that only the second definition of the term “United States” above uses the word “sovereignty”, and this area is the “federal zone”. Let’s clarify the other word, “territory” used in this second definition:

> “Various meanings are sought to be attributed to the term ‘territory’ in the phrase ‘the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof.’ We are of opinion that it means the regional areas of land and adjacent waters over which the United States claims and exercises dominion and control as a sovereign power. The immediate context and the purport of the entire section show that the term is used in a physical and not a metaphorical sense—that it refers to areas or districts having fixity of location and recognized boundaries. See United States v. Bevans, 3 Wheat. 336, 390.

> “It is now settled in the United States and recognized elsewhere that the territory subject to United States jurisdiction includes the land areas under its dominion and control, the ports, harbors, bays and other enclosed arms of the sea along its coast and a marginal belt of the sea extending from the coast line outward a marine league, or three geographic miles. Church v. Hubbard, 2 Cranch, 187, 234; The Ann, 1 Fed.Cas. No. 397, p. 926; United States v. Smiley, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16317, p. 1132; Manchester v. Massachusetts, 139 U.S. 240, 257, 258 S., 11 Sup.Ct. 559; Louisiana v. Mississippi, 202 U.S. 1, 52, 26 S.Sup.Ct. 408; 1 Kent's Com. (12th Ed.) *79; 1 Moore, [262 U.S. 100, 123], International Law Digest, 145; 1 Hyde, International Law, 141, 142, 154; Wilson, International Law (6th Ed.) 54; Westlake, International Law (2d Ed.) p. 187, et seq; Wheaton, International Law (5th Eng. Ed, 1 Phillipson) p. 252; 1 Oppenheim International Law (3d Ed.) 185-189, 252. This, we hold, is the territory which the amendment designates as its field of operation; and the designation is not of a part [Cunard S.S. Co. v. Mellon, 262 U.S. 100, 43 S.Ct. 304 (1923)]

An examination of the authoritative publication called Words and Phrases also clarifies the distinction between a sovereign Union “state” and a federal “territory”:

> “A territory is not a state, nor are the words ‘territory’ and ‘state’ used as synonymous or convertible terms in the acts of Congress. For instance, in 1853, Congress passed “An act regulating the fees and costs in the several states.” By act of 1855 Congress extended the provisions of the act of 1853 to the territories ‘as fully in all particulars as they would be had the word ‘territories’ been inserted after the word ‘states,’” and the act had read in the several states and territories of the United States. Smith v. U.S., 1 Wash.T., 262, 268. See Brigh Digg. Pp. 273, 279.”

> “The ‘state’ is only a corporate name for all the citizens within certain territorial limits. Regents of University System of Georgia v. Blanton, 176 S.E. 673, 49 Ga.App. 602.”

[40 Words and Phrases, p. 12-20]

So Union “states” are not “territories” of the federal government. They are, instead, independent sovereignties and are not part of the “sovereignty” of the federal government in a general sense. This was confirmed by the U.S. Supreme Court in the case of Clyatt v. U.S., 197 U.S. 207 (1905), which was a case about slavery and the Thirteenth Amendment which we quote...

below. Note how the court distinguishes in its ruling between “sovereignty of the United States” and “the states” (note the capitalization of the word “states” by the way).

“Other authorities to the same effect might be cited. It is not open to doubt that Congress may enforce the Thirteenth Amendment by direct legislation, punishing the holding of a person in slavery or in involuntary servitude except as a punishment for a crime. In the exercise of that power Congress has enacted those sections denouncing peonage, and punishing one who holds another in that condition of involuntary servitude. This legislation is not limited to the territories or other parts of the strictly national domain, but is operative in the states and wherever the sovereignty of the United States extends. We entertain no doubt of the validity of this legislation, or of its applicability to the case of any person holding another in a state of peonage, and this whether there be municipal ordinance or state law sanctioning such holding. It operates directly on every citizen of the Republic, wherever his residence may be.”

In the above, if the term “sovereignty of the United States” and “the states” were equivalent, then the sentence “This legislation …is operative in the states and whenever the sovereignty of the United States extends” would be redundant and unnecessary. Below is another example of how the states of the union are sovereign and independent of the federal government, again right from the mouth of the U.S. Supreme Court:

“The several States of the Union are not, it is true, in every respect independent, many of the right and powers which originally belonged to them being now vested in the government created by the Constitution. But, except as restrained and limited by that instrument, they possess and exercise the authority of independent States, and the principles of public law to which we have referred are applicable to them. One of these principles is, that every State possesses exclusive jurisdiction and sovereignty over persons and property within its territory. As a consequence, every State has the power to determine for itself the civil status [e.g. citizenship] and capacities of its inhabitants; to prescribe the subjects upon which they may contract, the forms and solemnities with which their contracts shall be executed, the rights and obligations arising from them, and the mode in which their validity shall be determined and their obligations enforced; and also the regulate the manner and conditions upon which property situated within such territory, both personal and real, may be acquired, enjoyed, and transferred. The other principle of public law referred to follows from the one mentioned; that is, that no State can exercise direct jurisdiction and authority over persons or property without its territory. Story, Conf. Laws, c. 2; Wheat. Int. Law, pt. 2, c. 2; The several States are of equal dignity and authority, and the independence of one implies the exclusion of power from all others.

The federal zone area, which we abbreviate as “United States” throughout this book or simply as the “federal United States” is described in the Treasury Regulations as follows:

“The term "United States" when used in a geographical sense includes any territory under the sovereignty of the United States, it includes the [federal enclaves with the] states, the District of Columbia, the possessions and territories of the United States, the territorial waters of the United States, the air space over the United States, and the seabed and subsoil of those submarine areas which are adjacent to the territorial waters of the United States and over which the United States has exclusive rights, in accordance with international law, with respect to the exploration and exploitation of natural resources.”

Unfortunately, nowhere in the Internal Revenue Code or Treasury Regulations does it indicate how to distinguish between “United States” in its geographic sense indicated above, and “United States” in any of the other two senses defined by the Supreme Court in Hooven, nor do they say that the geographic sense is the only sense in which that term is used in the code or regulations. Consequently, once again, the Internal Revenue Code is “void for vagueness” and unenforceable, as we point out later in section 5.10 of this chapter.

A nation or state has no jurisdiction outside its own territory, as made clear by the U.S. supreme Court in Dred Scott v. John F.A. Sanford, 60 U.S. 393 (1856):

“Every State or nation possesses an exclusive sovereignty and jurisdiction within her own territory, and her laws affect and bind all property and persons residing within it. It may regulate the manner and circumstances under which property is held, and the condition, capacity, and state of all persons therein, and also the remedy and modes of administering justice. And it is equally true that no State or nation can affect or bind property out of its territory, or persons not residing within it. No State therefore can enact laws to operate beyond its own dominions, and if it attempts to do so, it may be lawfully refused obedience. Such laws can have no inherent authority extraterritorially. This is the necessary result of the independence of distinct and separate sovereignties.”
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

Now it follows from these principles that whatever force or effect the laws of one State or nation may have in the territories of another must depend solely upon the laws and municipal regulations of the latter, upon its own jurisprudence and polity, and upon its own express or tacit consent.”

[Dred Scott v. John F.A. Sanford, 60 U.S. 393 (1856)]

IMPORTANT NOTE: In law, everything outside the “territory” (which describes the “exclusive” or “general” sovereignty, sometimes also called “plenary jurisdiction”) of a nation or state is considered “foreign” with respect to it. It is absolutely crucial that you understand this concept. A person born in a state of the Union, for instance, is called a “national” but not a “citizen” under federal law, and his status is defined in 8 U.S.C. §1101(a)(21) but not limited or regulated in any way. The reason for this is clear, by reading the case above

“As a consequence, every State has the power to determine for itself the civil status [e.g. citizenship] and capacities of its inhabitants”[f. . J. The several States are of equal dignity and authority, and the independence of one implies the exclusion of power from all others.

[Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 714 (1877)]

A “national but not a citizen” is “foreign” with respect to federal government because he does not come under the jurisdiction of its law, and therefore is called a “non-resident non-person” under the tax code. If they are also engaged in a public office, they become a “nonresident alien”. The definition of “nonresident alien” confirms this, noting that a “national” fits the criteria for being a “nonresident alien”:

26 U.S.C. §7701(b)(1)(B)

An individual is a nonresident alien if such individual is neither a citizen of the United States nor a resident of the United States (within the meaning of subparagraph (A)).

Most people in ordinary speech have an aversion to being called an “alien” or a “non-resident non-person” or “nonresident alien” in respect to the federal government. Our corrupted politicians and the legal profession have capitalized on this “cognitive dissonance” by refusing to cover such important subjects as the “Separation of Powers Doctrine” in the public school curricula or in the IRS publications. Understanding the Separation of Powers Doctrine can have profound effect on how we describe our status on government forms. The fact that most Americans do not understand this important concept has caused them to misrepresent their status to the Internal Revenue Service by submitting the wrong tax form, the 1040. The correct form for a person born in a state of the Union is the 1040NR, and not the 1040 with the following attached:

1. Tax Form Attachment, Form #04.201
   http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

2. Affidavit of Citizenship, Domicile, and Tax Status, Form #02.001
   http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

The 1040NR form is completed by “nonresident aliens”. The fact that the term “foreign” is nowhere defined in the Internal Revenue Code is no accident, and results from the fact that your public dis-servants do not want you to know about the Separation of Powers Doctrine and its effect on their jurisdiction over you. They want to undermine and destroy your sovereignty by devious legal means, because it makes the job of governing you “more convenient” and empowering for them. SCUM BAGS!

If Americans would just learn how the Separation of Powers Doctrine works and not have an aversion to being called a “nonresident alien”, then we could at least have hope that things would get better and that the federal government would once again be put back inside the legal box that the founders bequeathed to us.

None of the 50 united States comes under the general sovereignty of the federal "United States" under Article 1, Section 8, Clause 17 of the Constitution, nor are the nonfederal areas of the 50 Union states subject to the exclusive rights or jurisdiction of the federal government. Therefore, we must conclude that the term “the states” in 26 C.F.R. §1.911-2(g) above refers only to federal enclaves inside the borders of the sovereign states, and most people do NOT live in these areas. Furthermore, 26 C.F.R. §1.911-2(h) reveals that anything outside the “federal zone” is considered a “foreign country”, including the 50 Union states united by the Constitution!:

26 C.F.R. §1.911-2(h):

The Great IRS Hoax: Why We Don’t Owe Income Tax, version 4.54

Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

“The term “foreign country” when used in a geographical sense includes any territory under the sovereignty of a government other than that of the federal United States. It includes the territorial waters of the foreign country (determined in accordance with the laws of the United States), the air space over the foreign country, and the seabed and subsoil of those submarine areas which are adjacent to the territorial waters of the foreign country and over which the foreign country has exclusive rights, in accordance with international law, with respect to the exploration and exploitation of natural resources.”

That’s right(!): all of the 50 sovereign states are foreign with respect to each other and are under the exclusive sovereignty of their respective legislatures, except where a specific power has been expressly delegated to Congress over lands within their borders. For cases where such a specific power has been delegated by the states to the federal government, this is called “subject matter jurisdiction” rather than “territorial jurisdiction”. Each of these states, in turn, is also foreign to the territorial jurisdiction of the U.S. government for the purposes of income taxes as well. The Citizens of each Union state are foreigners and aliens with respect to another Union state, unless they establish a domicile therein under the laws of that Union state. Otherwise, they are “nonresident aliens” with respect to all the other Union states and with respect to the Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A. As far as legal fictions such as corporations, “domestic” corporations within a state are those corporations chartered within that state. Those corporations chartered in other states are considered “foreign corporations”. Here are a few quotes to back this up:

Foreign Laws: “The laws of a foreign country or sister state.”

Foreign States: “Nations outside of the United States...Term may also refer to another state; i.e. a sister state. The term ‘foreign nations’, ...should be construed to mean all nations and states other than that in which the action is brought, and hence, one state of the Union is foreign to another, in that sense.”

When the U.S. Supreme Court is trying to describe places where the “sovereignty” of a state or the federal government is exclusive and complete and entire, their favorite word is “plenary”:

Here are a few examples of how the U.S. Supreme Court uses the word “plenary”:

“In the states, there reposes the sovereignty to manage their own affairs except as the requirements of the Constitution otherwise provide. Within these constitutional limits the power of the state over taxation is plenary.”

“In dealing with the meaning and application of an act of Congress enacted in the exercise of its plenary power under the Constitution to tax income and to grant exemptions from that tax, it is the will of Congress which controls, and the expression of its will, in the absence of language evidencing a different purpose, should be interpreted ‘so as to give a uniform application to a nation-wide scheme of taxation’.”
[Lyeth v. Hoey, 305 U.S. 188, 59 S.Ct. 155 (1938)]

Notice in the above that the term “state” is in lower case, because the court is talking about federal statutes, and in these statutes, states of the Union are “foreign countries” and are not part of the general sovereignty of the federal government. The Supreme Court basically says in Madden above that the power of the states in regards to taxation is plenary within their own borders, which means it is absolute and isn’t shared with anyone, including the federal government. You will also find out in sections 7.4.1 and 7.4.2 of the Tax Fraud Prevention Manual, Form #06.008 that “Acts of Congress” mentioned in Lyeth above only have force within the “federal zone” and nowhere else by default. The subject of the Madden case above is a state tax. The court said that the power of the state government to impose taxes on persons within their borders who are “U.S. citizens” is “plenary”, which means unrestrained or not limited by federal taxing powers. In doing so, they overruled Colgate v. Harvey, 296 U.S. 404 (1935), which was a case that made state citizen status inferior to that of federal or constitutional “U.S. citizen” status. Reading Madden further confirms that Madden was a constitutional “U.S. citizen”,

The Great IRS Hoax: Why We Don’t Owe Income Tax, version 4.54
TOP SECRET: For Official Treasury/IRS Use Only (FOUO) Copyright Family Guardian Fellowship
because the Mr. Madden’s executor counsel claimed that Mr. Madden was a constitutional “U.S. citizen” who came under the “privileges and immunities clause” of the Fourteenth Amendment:

"II. Privileges and Immunities.-

The appellant [for Mr. Madden, the deceased] presses urgently upon us the argument that the privileges and immunities clause of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States forbids the enforcement by the Commonwealth of Kentucky of this enactment which imposes upon the testator taxes five times as great on money deposited in banks outside the State as it does on money of others deposited in banks within the State. The privilege or immunity which appellant contends is abridged is the right to carry on business beyond the lines of the State of his residence, a right claimed as appertaining to national citizenship. “

To summarize, we need to think of Congress as "City Hall" for the “federal zone”. In 1820, Justice Marshall described it this way:

"...[Counsel] has contended, that Congress must be considered in two distinct characters. In one character as legislating for the states; in the other, as a local legislature for the district [of Columbia]. In the latter character, it is admitted, the power of levying direct taxes may be exercised; but, it is contended, for district purposes only, in like manner as the legislature of a state may tax the people of a state for state purposes. Without inquiring at present into the soundness of this distinction, its possible influence on the application in this district of the first article of the constitution, and of several of the amendments, may not be altogether unworthy of consideration.”

[Loughborough v. Blake, 18 U.S. 317 (1820)]

The two distinct characters are mentioned again in a case the following year heard before the same Supreme Court, Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 264, 5 L.Ed. 257 (1821):

"It is clear that Congress as a legislative body, exercises two species of legislative power: the one, limited as to its objects but extending all over the Union; the other, an absolute, exclusive legislative power over the District of Columbia."

The problem thus becomes one of deciding which of these "two distinct jurisdictions" is being referred to in the context of whatever tax statute or citizenship statute we are reading. The IRC language used to express the meaning of the word "State" is arguably the best place to undertake a careful diagnosis of this split personality. However, one good place to start appears in the cite below, which establishes that we should assume in any law passed by Congress that the jurisdiction they are referring to is only the federal zone and not the 50 Union states, unless an express contrary intent is clearly shown:

"A canon of [statutory] construction which teaches that of Congress, unless a contrary intent appears, is meant to apply only within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States."

The reasons why we must conclude that federal statutes only apply within the federal zone by default are very clear: the federal government has no “police powers” within the borders of the states, as we covered thoroughly under section 4.9. “Police powers” are synonymous with “legislative jurisdiction” or “criminal jurisdiction”. 40 U.S.C. §3112 abundantly confirms these conclusions by stating that the federal government has no jurisdiction within the borders of a state of the union except by an act of the legislature ceding specific lands to the federal government.

A very interesting exposition on the relationship of the states to the federal government can be found in the book entitled Conflicts in a Nutshell, Third Edition, David D. Siegel and Patrick J. Borchers, ISBN 0-314-160669-3, West Publishing. This exposition helps underscore the content of this section. On pp. 39-41 of this document, we find the following very revealing quote:

§22 Federal Subject Matter Jurisdiction

Because of our federal system, in which more than 50 sovereigns function within the framework of a national sovereign, the federal court structure is unique in that its principal trial court, the U.S. District Court, is a court of limited rather than general jurisdiction. The state is left to supply the “general” court. The federal constitution permits Congress to confer on federal courts of its creation only such jurisdiction as is outlined in section 2 of Article III. Hence the source of these federal limitations is the constitution itself.

Even within the federal system, however, one can find courts of general jurisdiction. Areas within the jurisdiction of the United States that lack their own sovereignty, and thus a court system of their own, must depend on the federal legislature for a complete court system: the District of Columbia and the few remaining territories of the federal government.
United States are in this category. For them, Congress has the power (from Article I of the constitution for the District and from Article IV of the constitution for the territories) to create courts of general jurisdiction. But Congress has no such power with respect to the states, for which reason all of the federal courts sitting within the states, including the district courts, must trace their powers to those within the limits of Article III and are hence courts of “limited” jurisdiction.

This is one reason why issues of subject matter jurisdiction arise more frequently in the federal system than in state courts. Another is that for a variety of reasons, federal jurisdiction is often preferred by a plaintiff who has a choice of forums. Taken together, this means that more cases near the subject matter jurisdiction borderline appear in the federal than in the state courts.

One of the major sources of federal subject matter jurisdiction is the diversity of citizenship of the parties. It authorizes federal suit even though the dispute involves no issues of federal law. The statute that authorizes this jurisdiction, however (28 U.S.C.A. §1332), requires that there be more than $75,000 in controversy. A plaintiff near that figure and who wants federal jurisdiction will try for it, while a defendant who prefers that the state courts hear the case may try to get it dismissed from federal court on the ground that it can’t support a judgment for more than $75,000.

A major source of federal jurisdiction is that the case “arises under” federal law, the phrase the constitution itself uses (Article III, §2). Unless it so arises, there is no subject matter jurisdiction under this caption, and whether it does or does not is often the subject of a dispute between the parties to a federal action.

For these and other reasons, the study of “subject matter” jurisdiction is a more extensive one in federal than in state practice. Indeed, a law school course on federal courts is likely to be devoted in the main to subject matter jurisdiction, with a correspondingly similar time allotment left for mere procedure, rather the reverse of what usually occurs in a course studying the state courts.

To give you an idea of the extent of federal jurisdiction relating to various areas of law, we’ve prepared a table summarizing the jurisdiction of the federal government in various subject matters. A picture is worth a thousand words, and this table is the equivalent of a picture of federal sovereignty and jurisdiction. The important thing to remember as you examine the table below is that Subtitle A personal income taxes are indirect excise taxes which apply to persons and federal corporations domiciled within the federal zone as per Eisner v. Macomber, 252 U.S. 189 (1920). This conclusion explains items 6 and 7:

NOTE: The federal government may only reach inside the borders of a sovereign state for the sake of enforcing areas over which the government has subject matter jurisdiction, because it cannot have territorial jurisdiction and cannot be
5.2.3 Two Species of Federal Legislative Jurisdiction

Before we proceed further, we need to remember that our Congress legislates for two jurisdictions. In the United States of America, there are two (2) separated and distinct jurisdictions,

1. The jurisdiction of states of the Union within their own state boundaries. These areas are subject to the sovereignty of the states and the federal government can only have subject matter but not territorial jurisdiction or sovereignty within these areas. Any federal courts created or authorized by legislation or the Constitution to adjudicate matters in these areas must come under Article III of the U.S. Constitution. An example of an Article III court is the Supreme Court. District and Circuit courts of the United States are Article I territorial courts that do not have jurisdiction within states of the Union.

2. Federal jurisdiction (United States), which is limited to the District of Columbia, the U.S. Territories and possessions, and federal enclaves within the states under Article I, Section 8, Clause 17 of the federal Constitution as well as to federal property wherever located. We call these areas the “federal zone” within this book. These areas are subject only to the general or plenary sovereignty of the U.S. government, and do not come under the jurisdiction of the states of the Union except by mutual agreement between the federal government and a state in a cession document. Any federal courts created by legislation to address matters exclusively within these areas are Article I (of the Constitution) courts. An example of an Article I court is the U.S. Tax Court. Article III courts can also address issues within these areas, but are exercising Article I powers when they do so. Portions of the federal zone are without Constitutional protections, and it is only in those areas where direct taxes or taxes on natural persons can lawfully be collected. In most cases, the areas without Constitutional protections are limited to U.S. territories such as Guam, Puerto Rico, American Samoa, and the Virgin Islands, which are also called federal States and are listed in Title 48 of the U.S. Code.

As we described in detail earlier in sections 4.8 and 4.11.4, only those areas that do not have Constitutional protections, that is the Bill of Rights, can be the proper subject of unapportioned direct taxes on natural persons. These areas are, in almost all cases, federal territories. It is also true that the only place anywhere where the U.S. Congress has the authority or legislative power to suspend the operation of any part of the Constitution is in U.S. territories and enclaves within the states that have never been under the protection of the U.S. Constitution. With this in mind, we can then turn a critical eye at a highly suspect piece of legislation below to establish precisely where Subtitle A federal income taxes can properly apply:

United States Code
TITLE 28 - JUDICIARY AND JUDICIAL PROCEDURE
PART VI - PARTICULAR PROCEEDINGS
CHAPTER 151 - DECLARATORY JUDGMENTS
Sec. 2201, Creation of remedy

(a) In a case of actual controversy within its jurisdiction, except with respect to Federal taxes other than actions brought under section 7428 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, a proceeding under section 505 or 1146 of title 11, or in any civil action involving an antidumping or countervailing duty proceeding regarding a class or kind of merchandise of a free trade area country (as defined in section 516A(f)(10) of the Tariff Act of 1930), as determined by the administering authority, any court of the United States, upon the filing of an appropriate pleading, may declare the rights and other legal relations of any interested party seeking such declaration, whether or not further relief is or could be sought. Any such declaration shall have the force and effect of a final judgment or decree and shall be reviewable as such.

(b) For limitations on actions brought with respect to drug patents see section 505 or 512 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act.

So what the Congress is saying in the above statute that it authored, is that federal courts, in the case of Subtitle A income tax cases (which apply mainly to natural persons) may not address RIGHTS, and the rights they are talking about are the Bill of Rights, which are the first fourteen amendments to the Constitution! But wait a minute: Congress is bound by the Constitution and they can’t legislate it out of existence in the 50 Union states. Even the Supreme Court admitted this:

"The Constitution had attached to it irrevocably. There are steps which can never be taken backward. The tie that bound the states of Maryland and Virginia to the Constitution could not be dissolved, without at least the consent of the Federal and state governments to a formal separation. The mere cession of the District of Columbia to the Federal government relinquished the authority of the states, but it did not take it out of the United States or from under the aegis of the Constitution. Neither party had ever consented to that construction of the cession. If, before the District was set off, Congress had passed an unconstitutional act affecting its inhabitants, it would have been void."

There is only one place where the Congress can pass legislation that suspends enforcement of the Constitution, and that is in Constitution Article I, II, or IV courts inside the federal zone or Article III courts in administering laws that only apply to the federal zone or abroad. This ought to be a BIG clue that Subtitle A federal income taxes can only apply in federal territories that are already devoid of Constitutional protections. This can be confirmed by reading the rest of the Supreme Court Case of Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U.S. 244 (1901), cited above:

“Loughborough v. Blake, 5 Wheat. 317, 5 L.Ed. 98, was an action of trespass or, as appears by the original record, replevin, brought in the circuit court for the District of Columbia to try the right of Congress to impose a direct tax for general purposes on that District. 3 Stat. at L. 216, chap. 60. It was insisted that Congress could act in a double capacity: in one as legislating [182 U.S. 244, 260] for the states; in the other as a local legislature for the District of Columbia. In the latter character, it was admitted that the power of levying direct taxes might be exercised, but for District purposes only, as a state legislature might tax for state purposes; but that it could not legislate for the District under art. 1, 8, giving to Congress the power 'to lay and collect taxes, imposts, and excises,' which 'shall be uniform throughout the United States,' inasmuch as the District was no part of the United States. It was held that the grant of this power was a general one without limitation as to place, and consequently extended to all places over which the government extends; and that it extended to the District of Columbia as a constituent part of the United States. The fact that art. 1, 2, declares that 'representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several states ... according to their respective numbers' furnished a standard by which taxes were apportioned, but not to exempt any part of the country from their operation. The words used do not mean that direct taxes shall be imposed on states only which are represented, or shall be apportioned to representatives; but that direct taxation, in its application to states, shall be apportioned to numbers;' That art. 1, 9, 4, declaring that direct taxes shall be laid in proportion to the census, was applicable to the District of Columbia, 'and will enable Congress to apportion on it its just and proper share of the burden, with the same accuracy as on the respective states. If the tax be laid in this proportion, it is within the very words of the restriction. It is a tax in proportion to the census or enumeration referred to.' It was further held that the words of the 9th section did not 'in terms require that the system of direct taxation, when resorted to, shall be extended to the territories, as the words of the 2d section require that it shall be extended to all the states. They therefore may, without violence, be understood to give a rule when the territories shall be taxed, without imposing the necessity of taxing them."

“There could be no doubt as to the correctness of this conclusion, so far, at least, as it applied to the District of Columbia. This District had been a part of the states of Maryland and [182 U.S. 244, 261] Virginia. It had been subject to the Constitution, and was a part of the United States[]. The Constitution had attached to it irrevocably. There are steps which can never be taken backward, The tie that bound the states of Maryland and Virginia to the Constitution could not be dissolved, without at least the consent of the Federal and state governments to a formal separation. The mere cession of the District of Columbia to the Federal government relinquished the authority of the states, but it did not cut it out of the United States or from under the aegis of the Constitution. Neither party had ever consented to that construction of the cession. If, before the District was set off, Congress had passed an unconstitutional act affecting its inhabitants, it would have been void. If done after the District was created, it would have been equally void; in other words, Congress could not do indirectly, by carving out the District, what it could not do directly. The District still remained a part of the United States, protected by the Constitution. Indeed, it would have been a fanciful construction to hold that territory which had been once a part of the United States ceased to be such by being ceded directly to the Federal government.”

This means that direct Subtitle A income taxes can’t apply in the sovereign 50 Union states, the District of Columbia (which was formerly covered by Constitutional protections before it was ceded to the federal government), or federal enclaves within states that were formerly owned by the state prior to being ceded to the federal government. The only exception to this exclusion is that it can apply voluntarily to natural persons domiciled outside the federal zone, which means you have to volunteer into federal jurisdiction by volunteering to become a “taxpayer” subject to the Internal Revenue Code who has an effective domicile within the federal zone under 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(39). This is done by filing an IRS Form W-4 or submitting a 1040 form rather than the correct 1040NR form.

The territorial jurisdiction that all Congressional legislation is intended to apply to absent a clearly expressed intent to the contrary is the second jurisdiction from above, which are federal zone areas coming under Article 1, Section 8, Clause 17 of the U.S. Constitution as revealed by the U.S. Supreme Court below in U.S. v. Spelar, 338 U.S. 217 at 222 (1949):

As you will learn in the next few sections, states of the Union are “foreign” with respect to the federal government for the purposes of legislative jurisdiction. The federal/general government has no “police powers” or legislative jurisdiction within states of the Union, as pointed out by the Supreme Court. Keep in mind that the term “legislation” in the quote below INCLUDES the Internal Revenue Code, folks!:

5.2.4 The Three Geographical Definitions of “United States”

Most of us are completely unaware that the term “United States” has several distinct and separate legal meanings and that it is up to us to know and understand these differences, to use them appropriately, and to clarify exactly which one we mean whenever we sign any government or financial form (including voter registration, tax documents, etc). If we do not, we could unknowingly, unwillingly and involuntarily be creating false presumptions that cause us to surrender our Constitutional rights and our sovereignty. The fact is, most of us have unwittingly been doing just that for most, if not all, of our lives. Much of this misunderstanding and legal ignorance has been deliberately “manufactured” by our corrupted government in the public school system. It is a fact that our public dis-servants want docile sheep who are easy to govern, not “high maintenance” sovereigns capable of critical and independent thinking and who demand their rights. We have become so casual in our use of the term “United States” that it is no longer understood, even within the legal profession, that there are actually three different legal meanings to the term. In fact, the legal profession has contributed to this confusion over this term by removing its definitions from all legal dictionaries currently in print that we have looked at. See Section 6.13.1 for details on this scam.

Most of us have grown up thinking the term “United States” indicates and includes all 50 states of the Union. This is true in the context of the U.S. Constitution but it is not true in all contexts. As you will see, this is the third meaning assigned to the term “United States” by the United States Supreme Court. But, usually when we (Joe six pack) use the term United States we actually think we are saying the united states, as we are generally thinking of the several states or the union of States. As you will learn in this section, the meaning of the term depends entirely on the context and when we are filling out federal forms or speaking with the federal government, this is a very costly false presumption.

First, it should be noted that the term United States is a noun. In fact, it is the proper name and title “We the people...” gave to the corporate entity (non-living thing) of the federal (central) government created by the Constitution. This in turn describes where the “United States” federal corporation referenced in 28 U.S.C. §3002(15)(A) was to be housed as the Seat of the Government - In the District of Columbia, not to exceed a ten mile square.

Constitution
Article 1, Section 8, Clause 17

To exercise exclusive Legislation in all Cases whatsoever, over such District (not exceeding ten Miles square) as may, by Cession of particular States, and the Acceptance of Congress, become the Seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like Authority over all Places purchased by the Consent of the Legislature of the State in which the Same shall be for the Erection of Forts, Magazines, Arsenals, dock-Yards, and other needful Buildings;—And [underlines added]

Below is how the united States Supreme Court addressed the question of the meaning of the term “United States” (see Black’s Law Dictionary) in the famous case of Hooven & Allison Co. v. Evatt, 324 U.S. 652 (1945). The Court ruled that the term United States has three uses:

"The term 'United States' may be used in any one of several senses. It may be merely the name of a sovereign occupying the position analogous to that of other sovereigns in the family of nations. It may designate the territory over which the sovereignty of the United States extends, or it may be the collective name of the states which are united by and under the Constitution."

[Hooven & Allison Co. v. Evatt, 324 U.S. 652 (1945)]

We will now break the above definition into its three contexts and show what each means.

The U.S. Supreme Court helped to clarify which of the three definitions above is the one used in the U.S. Constitution, when it held the following. Note they are implying the THIRD definition above and not the other two:

> The earliest case is that of Hepburn v. Ellzey, 2 Cranch, 445, 2 L.Ed. 332, in which this court held that, under that clause of the Constitution limiting the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States to controversies between citizens of different states, a citizen of the District of Columbia could not maintain an action in the circuit court of the United States. It was argued that the word 'state,' in that connection, was used simply to denote a distinct political society. But, said the Chief Justice, 'as the act of Congress obviously used the word 'state' in reference to that term as used in the Constitution, it becomes necessary to inquire whether Columbia is a state in the sense of that instrument. The result of that examination is a conviction that the members of the American confederacy only are the states contemplated in the Constitution, ... and excludes from the term the signification attached to it by writers on the law of nations.' This case was followed in Barney v. Baltimore, 6 Wall. 280, 18 L.Ed. 825, and quite recently in Hooe v. Jamieson, 166 U.S. 395, 41 L.Ed. 1049, 17 Sup.Ct.Rep. 596. The same rule was applied to citizens of territories in New Orleans v. Winter, 1 Wheat. 91, 4 L.Ed. 44, in which an attempt was made to distinguish a territory from the District of Columbia. But it was said that 'neither of them is a state in the sense in which that term is used in the Constitution.' In Scott v. Jones, 5 How. 343, 12 L.Ed. 181, and in Miners’ Bank v. Iowa ex rel. District Prosecuting Attorney, 12 How. 1, 13 L.Ed. 867, it was held that under the judiciary act, permitting writs of error to the supreme court of a state in cases where the validity of a state statute is drawn in question, an act of a territorial legislature was not within the contemplation of Congress.” [Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U.S. 344 (1901)]

The Supreme Court further clarified that the Constitution implies the third definition above, which is the United States* when they held the following. Notice that they say “not part of the United States within the meaning of the Constitution” and that the word “the” implies only ONE rather than multiple meanings:

> “As the only judicial power vested in Congress is to create courts whose judges shall hold their offices during good behavior, it necessarily follows that, if Congress authorizes the creation of courts and the appointment of judges for limited time, it must act independently of the Constitution upon territory which is not part of the United States within the meaning of the Constitution.” [O’Donoghue v. United States, 289 U.S. 516, 53 S.Ct. 740 (1933)]

And finally, the U.S. Supreme Court has also held that the Constitution does not and cannot determine or limit the authority of Congress over federal territory and that the ONLY portion of the Constitution that does in fact expressly refer to federal territory and therefore the statutory “United States” is Article 1, Section 8, Clause 17. Notice they ruled that Puerto Rico is NOT part of the “United States” within the meaning of the Constitution, just like they ruled in O’Donoghue above that territory was no part of the “United States”:

In passing upon the questions involved in this and kindred cases, we ought not to overlook the fact that, while the Constitution was intended to establish a permanent form of government for the states which should elect to take advantage of its conditions, and continue for an indefinite future, the vast possibilities of that future could never have entered the minds of its framers. The states had but recently emerged from a war with one of the most powerful nations of Europe, were disheartened by the failure of the confederacy, and were doubtful as to the feasibility of a stronger union. Their territory was confined to a narrow strip of land on the Atlantic coast from Canada to Florida, with a somewhat indefinite claim to territory beyond the Alleghenies, where their sovereignty was disputed by tribes of hostile Indians supported, as was popularly believed, by the British, who had never formally delivered possession [182 U.S. 244, 285] under the treaty of peace. The vast territory beyond the Mississippi, which formerly had been claimed by France, since 1762 had belonged to Spain, still a powerful nation and the owner of a great part of the Western Hemisphere. Under these circumstances it is little wonder that the question of annexing these territories was not made a subject of debate. The difficulties of bringing about a union of the states were so great, the objections to it seemed so formidable, that the whole thought of the convention centered upon surmounting these obstacles. The question of territories was dismissed with a single clause, apparently applicable only to the territories then existing, giving Congress the power to govern and dispose of them.

Had the acquisition of other territories been contemplated as a possibility, could it have been foreseen that, within little more than one hundred years, we were destined to acquire, not only the whole vast region between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, but the Russian possessions in America and distant islands in the Pacific, it is incredible that no provision should have been made for them, and the question whether the Constitution should or should not extend to them have been definitely settled. If it be once conceded that we are at liberty to acquire foreign territory, a presumption arises that our power with respect to such territories is the same power which other nations have been accustomed to exercise with respect to territories acquired by them. If, in limiting the power which Congress was to exercise within the United States[], it was also intended to limit it with regard to such territories as the people of the United States[] should thereafter acquire, such limitations should have been expressed. Instead of that, we find the Constitution speaking only to states, except in the territorial clause, which is absolute in its terms, and suggestive of no limitations upon the power of Congress in dealing with them. The states could only delegate to Congress such powers as they themselves possessed, and as they had no power to acquire new territory they had none to delegate in that connection. The logical inference from this is that if Congress had power to acquire new territory, which is conceded, that power was not hampered by the constitutional provisions. If, upon the other hand, we assume [182 U.S. 244, 286] that the territorial clause of the Constitution was not intended to be restricted to such territory as the United States then possessed, there is nothing in the Constitution to indicate that the power of Congress in dealing with them was intended to be restricted by any of the other provisions.

If those possessions are inhabited by alien races, differing from us in religion, customs, laws, methods of taxation, and modes of thought, the administration of government and justice, according to Anglo-Saxon principles, may for a time be impossible; and the question at once arises whether large concessions ought not to be made for a time, that ultimately our own theories may be carried out, and the blessings of a free government under the Constitution extended to them. We decline to hold that there is anything in the Constitution to forbid such action.

We are therefore of opinion that the island of Porto Rico is a territory appurtenant and belonging to the United States, but not a part of the United States[] within the revenue clauses of the Constitution; that the Foraker act is constitutional, so far as it imposes duties upon imports from such island, and that the plaintiff cannot recover back the duties exacted in this case.

Another important distinction needs to be made. Definition 1 above refers to the country “United States*”, but this country is not a “nation”, in the sense of international law. This very important point was made clear by the U.S. Supreme Court in 1794 in the case of Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 Dall. (U.S.) 419, 1 L.Ed. 440 (1793), when it said:

This is a case of uncommon magnitude. One of the parties to it is a State; certainly respectable, claiming to be sovereign. The question to be determined is, whether this State, so respectable, and whose claim soars so high, is amenable to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States? This question, important in itself, will depend on others, more important still; and, may, perhaps, be ultimately resolved into one, no less radical than this ‘do the people of the United States form a Nation?’

A cause so conspicuous and interesting, should be carefully and accurately viewed from every possible point of sight. I shall examine it; 1st. By the principles of general jurisprudence. 2nd. By the laws and practice of particular States and Kingdoms. From the law of nations little or no illustration of this subject can be expected. By that law the several States and Governments spread over our globe, are considered as forming a society, not a NATION. It has only been by a very few comprehensive minds, such as those of Elizabeth and the Fourth Henry, that this last great idea has been even contemplated. 3rdly, and chiefly, I shall examine the important question before us, by the Constitution of the United States, and the legitimate result of that valuable instrument.
[Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 Dall. (U.S.) 419, 1 L.Ed. 440 (1793)]

Black’s Law Dictionary further clarifies the distinction between a “nation” and a “society” by clarifying the differences between a national government and a federal government, and keep in mind that our government is called “federal government”:

“NATIONAL GOVERNMENT. The government of a whole nation, as distinguished from that of a local or territorial division of the nation, and also as distinguished from that of a league or confederation.

“A national government is a government of the people of a single state or nation, united as a community by what is termed the ‘social compact,’ and possessing complete and perfect supremacy over persons and things, so far as they can be made the lawful objects of civil government. A federal government is distinguished from a national government by its being the government of a community of independent and sovereign states, united by compact.” Piqua Bank v. Knop, 6 Ohio St. 393.

“FEDERAL GOVERNMENT. The system of government administered in a state formed by the union or confederation of several independent or quasi independent states; also the composite state so formed.

In strict usage, there is a distinction between a confederation and a federal government. The former term denotes a league or permanent alliance between several states, each of which is fully sovereign and independent, and each of which retains its full dignity, organization, and sovereignty, though yielding to the central authority a controlling power for a few limited purposes, such as external and diplomatic relations. In this case, the component states are the units, with respect to the confederation, and the central government acts upon them, not upon the individual citizens. In a federal government, on the other hand, the allied states form a union.-
not, indeed, to such an extent as to destroy their separate organization or deprive them of quasi sovereignty with respect to the administration of their purely local concerns, but so that the central power is erected into a true state or nation, possessing sovereignty both external and internal,-while the administration of national affairs is directed, and its effects felt, not by the separate states deliberating as units, but by the people of all, in their collective capacity, as citizens of the nation. The distinction is expressed, by the German writers, by the use of the two words “Staatenbund” and “Bundesstaat;” the former denoting a league or confederation of states, and the latter a federal government, or state formed by means of a league or confederation.”

So the “United States” the country is a “society” and a “sovereignty” but not a “nation” under the law of nations, by the Supreme Court’s own admission. Because the Supreme Court has ruled on this matter, it is now incumbent upon each of us to always remember it and to apply it in all of our dealings with the Federal Government. If not, we lose our individual Sovereignty by default and the Federal Government assumes jurisdiction over us. So, while those who wish to preserve their sovereign immunity will want to be the third type of Citizen, which is a “Citizen of the United States” and on occasion a citizen of the United States”, he would never want to be the second, which is a “citizen of the United States”. A human being who is a “citizen” of the second is called a statutory “U.S. citizen” under 26 U.S.C. §1401, and he is treated in law as occupying a place not protected by the Bill of Rights, which is the first ten amendments of the United States Constitution.
Below is how the U.S. Supreme Court, in a dissenting opinion, described this “other” United States, which we call the “federal zone”:

“I take leave to say that, if the principles thus announced should ever receive the sanction of a majority of this court, a radical and mischievous change in our system of government will result. We will, in that event, pass from the era of constitutional liberty guarded and protected by a written constitution into an era of legislative absolutism.

substantially two national governments: one to be maintained under the Constitution, with all of its restrictions; the other to be maintained by Congress outside the independently of that instrument, by exercising such powers [of absolutism] as other nations of the earth are accustomed to.

It will be an evil day for American liberty if the theory of a government outside the supreme law of the land finds lodging in our constitutional jurisprudence. No higher duty rests upon this court than to exert its full authority to prevent all violation of the principles of the Constitution.

[Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U.S. 244 (1901), Justice Harlan, Dissenting]

The second definition of “United States” above is also a federal corporation. This corporation was formed in 1871. It is described in 28 U.S.C. §3002(15)(A):

"Corporations are also of all grades, and made for varied objects; all governments are corporations, created by usage and common consent, or grants and charters which create a body politic for prescribed purposes; but whether they are private, local or general, in their objects, for the enjoyment of property, or the exercise of power, they are all governed by the same rules of law, as to the construction and the obligation of the instrument by which the incorporation is made [the Constitution is the corporate charter]. One universal rule of law protects persons and property. It is a fundamental principle of the common law of England, that the term freemen of the kingdom, includes 'all persons,' ecclesiastical and temporal, incorporate, politique or natural; it is a part of their magna charta (2 Inst. 4), and is incorporated into our institutions. The persons of the members of corporations are on the same footing of protection as other persons, and their corporate property secured by the same laws which protect that of individuals. 2 Inst. 46-7. 'No man shall be taken,' 'no man shall be disseised,' without due process of law, is a principle taken from magna charta, infused into all our state constitutions, and is made inviolable by the federal government, by the amendments to the constitution."

If we are acting as a federal “public official” or contractor, then we are representing the “United States federal corporation”.

That corporation is a statutory “U.S. citizen” under 8 U.S.C. §1401 which is completely subject to all federal law.

"A corporation is a citizen, resident, or inhabitant of the state or country by or under the laws of which it was created, and of that state or country only."

[19 Corpus Juris Secundum (C.J.S.), Corporations, §886 (2003)]

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 17(b) says that when we are representing that corporation as “officers” or “employees”, we therefore become statutory “U.S. citizens” completely subject to federal territorial law:

IV. PARTIES > Rule 17.
Rule 17. Parties Plaintiff and Defendant; Capacity
(b) Capacity to Sue or be Sued.

Capacity to sue or be sued is determined as follows:
(1) for an individual who is not acting in a representative capacity, by the law of the individual’s domicile;
(2) for a corporation, by the law under which it was organized; and
(3) for all other parties, by the law of the state where the court is located, except that:
(A) a partnership or other unincorporated association with no such capacity under that state’s law may sue or be sued in its common name to enforce a substantive right existing under the United States Constitution or laws; and
(B) 28 U.S.C. §754 and §756(a) govern the capacity of a receiver appointed by a United States court to sue or be sued in a United States court.

[Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 17(b)]
Yet on every government (any level) document we sign (e.g. Social Security, Marriage License, Voter Registration, Driver’s License, BATF 4473, etc.) they either require you to be a “citizen of the United States” or they ask “are you a resident of Illinois?”. They are in effect asking you to assume or presume the second definition, the “United States”, when you fill out the form, but they don’t want you to tell them. The reason this must be so is that they are not allowed to pay “benefits” to private citizens and can only lawfully pay them to public employees. Any other approach makes the government into a thief. If you accept the false and self-serving presumption of your public dis-servants, or you answer “Yes” to the question of whether you are a “citizen of the United States” or a “U.S. citizen” on a federal or state form, usually under penalty of perjury, then you have committed perjury under penalty of perjury and also voluntarily placed yourself under their exclusive/plenary legislative jurisdiction as a public official/“employee” and are therefore subject to Federal & State Codes and Regulations (Statutes). The Social Security Number they ask for on the form, in fact, is prima facie evidence that you are a federal employee, in fact. Most laws passed by government are, in effect, law only for government. They are private law or contract law that act as the equivalent of a government employment agreement.

[City of Boerne v. Flores, Archbishop of San Antonio, 521 U.S. 507 (1997)]

What the U.S. Supreme Court is saying above is that the government has no authority to tell you how to run your private life. This is contrary to the whole idea of the Internal Revenue Code, whose main purpose is to monitor and control every aspect of those who are subject to it. In fact, it has become the chief means for Congress to implement what we call “social engineering”. Just by the deductions they offer, people who are not engaged in a “trade or business” and thus have no income tax liability are incentivized into all kinds of crazy behaviors in pursuit of reductions in a liability that they in fact do not even have. Therefore, the only reasonable thing to conclude is that Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A, which would “appear” to regulate the private conduct of all individuals in states of the Union, in fact only applies to “public officials” in the official conduct of their duties while present in the District of Columbia, which 4 U.S.C. §72 makes the “seat of government”. The I.R.C. therefore essentially amounts to a part of the job responsibility and the “employment contract” of “public officials”. This was also confirmed by the House of Representatives, who said that only those who take an oath of “public office” are subject to the requirements of the personal income tax. See:

We the People, as the Sovereigns, cannot lawfully become the proper subject to exclusive federal jurisdiction unless and until we surrender our sovereignty by signing a government employment agreement that can take many different forms: W-4, SS-5, 1040, etc.

The W-4 is a federal “election” form and you are the only voter. They are asking you if you want to elect yourself into “public office”, and if you say “yes”, then you got the job and a cage is reserved for you on the federal plantation:

“The restrictions that the Constitution places upon the government in its capacity as lawmaker, i.e., as the regulator of private conduct, are not the same as the restrictions that it places upon the government in its capacity as employer. We have recognized this in many contexts, with respect to many different constitutional guarantees. Private citizens perhaps cannot be prevented from wearing long hair, but policemen can. Kelley v. Johnson, 425 U.S. 238, 247 (1976). Private citizens cannot have their property searched without probable cause, but in many circumstances government employees can. O’Connor v. Ortega, 480 U.S. 709, 723 (1987) (plurality opinion); id., at 732 (SCALIA, J., concurring in judgment). Private citizens cannot be punished for refusing to provide the government information that may incriminate them, but government employees can be dismissed when the incriminating information that they refuse to provide relates to the performance of their job. Gardner v. Broderick, [497 U.S. 62, 95] 92 U.S. 273, 277-278 (1968). With regard to freedom of speech in particular: Private citizens cannot be punished for speech of merely private concern, but government employees can be fired for that reason. Connick v. Myers, 461 U.S. 138, 147 (1983). Private citizens cannot be punished for partisan political activity, but federal and state employees can be dismissed and otherwise punished for that reason. Public Workers v. Mitchell, 330 U.S. 75, 101 (1947); Civil Service Comm’n v. Letter Carriers, 413 U.S. 548, 556 (1973); Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601, 616-617 (1973)."

By making you into a “public official” or “employee”, they are intentionally destroying the separation of powers that is the main purpose of the Constitution and which was put there to protect your rights.

“To the contrary, the Constitution divides authority between federal and state governments for the protection of individuals. State sovereignty is not just an end in itself. "Rather, federalism secures to citizens the liberties that derive from the diffusion of sovereign power." Coleman v. Thompson, 591 U.S. 722, 759 (1991) (BLACKMUN, J., dissenting). “Just as the separation and independence of the coordinate branches of the Federal Government serve to prevent the accumulation of excessive power in any one branch, a healthy balance of power between the States and the Federal Government will reduce the risk of tyranny and abuse from either front.” Gregory v. Ashcroft, 505 U.S. 144, 182 (1992); see The Federalist No. 51, p. 323. (C. Rossiter ed. 1961)."

[New York v. United States, 505 U.S. 144 (1992)]

They are causing you to voluntarily waive sovereign immunity under the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act, 28 U.S.C. §1601-1611. 28 U.S.C. §1605(a)(2) of the act says that those who conduct “commerce” within the legislative jurisdiction of the “United States” (federal zone), whether as public official or federal benefit recipient, surrender their sovereign immunity.

TITLE 28 > PART IV > CHAPTER 97 > § 1605

§ 1605. General exceptions to the jurisdictional immunity of a foreign state

(a) A foreign state shall not be immune from the jurisdiction of courts of the United States or of the States in any case—

(2) in which the action is based upon a commercial activity carried on in the United States by the foreign state; or upon an act performed in the United States in connection with a commercial [employment or federal benefit] activity of the foreign state elsewhere; or upon an act outside the territory of the United States in connection with a commercial activity of the foreign state elsewhere and that act causes a direct effect in the United States;

They are also destroying the separation of powers by fooling you into declaring yourself to be a statutory “U.S. citizen” under 8 U.S.C. §1401. 28 U.S.C. §1603(b)(3) and 28 U.S.C. §1332(e) specifically exclude such statutory “U.S. citizens” from being foreign sovereigns who can file under statutory diversity of citizenship. This is also confirmed by the Department of State Website:

“Section 1603(b) defines an "agency or instrumentality" of a foreign state as an entity (1) which is a separate legal person, corporate or otherwise, and (2) which is an organ of a foreign state or political subdivision thereof, or a majority of whose shares or other ownership interest is owned by a foreign state or political subdivision thereof, and (3) which is neither a citizen of a state of the United States as defined in Sec. 1332(e) nor created under the laws of any third country.”

In effect, they kidnapped your legal identity and made you into a “resident alien federal employee” working in the “king’s castle”, the District of Criminals, and changed your status from “foreign” to “domestic” by creating false presumptions about citizenship and using the Social Security Number, IRS Form W-4, and SSA Form SS-5 to make you into a “subject citizen” and a “public employee” with no constitutional rights.

The nature of most federal law as private/contract law is carefully explained below:

Requirement for Consent, Form #05.003
```

As you will soon read, the government uses various ways to mislead and trick us into their private/contract laws (outside our Constitutional protections) and make you into the equivalent of their “employee”, and thereby commits a great fraud on the American People. It is the purpose of this document to expose the most important aspect of that willful deception, which is the citizenship trap.

5.2.5 Dual sovereignty

An old version of our Test for Federal Tax Professionals document found in section 2.2.1 of the Sovereignty Forms and Instructions Online, Form #10.004 was posted on the MSN Tax Bulletin Board, Jeff Schnepper and commented on by several readers. One of the readers in that discussion group posted two intriguing U.S. Supreme Court cites to rebut the contents of this book which relate to the subject of sovereignty and which we verified were accurate:

"The laws of the United States are laws in the several States, and just as much binding on the citizens and courts thereof as the State laws are. The United States is not a foreign sovereignty as regards the several States, but is a concurrent, and, within its jurisdiction, paramount sovereignty. Every citizen of a State is a subject of two distinct sovereignties, having concurrent jurisdiction in the State,-concurrent as to place and persons, though distinct as to subject-matter.”
[Clifton v. Houseman, 93 U.S. 130, 136 (1876)]

"And the powers of the General Government, and of the State, although both exist and are exercised within the same territorial limits, are yet separate and distinct sovereignties, acting separately and independently of each other, within their respective spheres.”
[Ableman v. Booth, 62 U.S. 506, 516 (1858)]

The issue he raised relates to the concept of what we call “dual sovereignty”, and he implied in his comments and his emphasis in the above two cases that there is such a thing as “dual sovereignty” within the states of the union, but is there? Can two entities be simultaneously sovereign over a single geographic region and the same subject matter? Let’s investigate this intriguing matter further, keeping in mind that such controversies result from a fundamental misunderstanding of what “sovereignty” really means.

We allege and a book on Constitutional government also alleges that it is a legal impossibility for two sovereign bodies to enjoy concurrent jurisdiction over the same subject, and especially when it comes to jurisdiction to tax.

"§79. This sovereignty pertains to the people of the United States as national citizens only, and not as citizens of any other government. There cannot be two separate and independent sovereignties within the same limits or jurisdiction; nor can there be two distinct and separate sources of sovereign authority within the same jurisdiction. The right of commanding in the last resort can be possessed only by one body of people inhabiting the same territory, and can be executed only by those intrusted with the execution of such authority.”

What detractors are trying to do is deceive you, because they are confusing federal “States” described in federal statutes with states of the Union mentioned in the Constitution. These two types of entities are mutually exclusive and “foreign” with respect to each other.

"The earliest case is that of Hepburn v. Ellzey, 2 Cranch, 445, 2 L.Ed. 332, in which this court held that, under that clause of the Constitution limiting the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States to controversies between citizens of different states, a citizen of the District of Columbia could not maintain an action in the circuit court of the United States. It was argued that the word 'state,' in that connection, was used simply to denote a distinct political society. But, said the Chief Justice, 'as the act of Congress obviously used the word 'state,' in reference to that term as used in the Constitution, it becomes necessary to inquire whether Columbia is a state in the sense
The definition of “State” for the purposes of federal income taxes confirms that states of the Union are NOT included within the definitions used in the Internal Revenue Code, and that only federal territories are. This is no accident, but proof that there really is a separation of powers and of legislative jurisdiction between states of the Union and the Federal government:

TITLE 4 - FLAG AND SEAL, SEAT OF GOVERNMENT, AND THE STATES
CHAPTER 4 - THE STATES
Sec. 110. Same: definitions
(d) The term "State" includes any Territory or possession of the United States.

We like to think of the word “sovereignty” in the context of government as the combination of “exclusive authority” with “exclusive responsibility”. The Constitution in effect very clearly divides authority and responsibility for specific matters between the states and federal government based on the specific subject matter, and ensures that the functions of each will neither overlap or conflict. It delegates certain powers to each of the two sovereigns and keeps the two sovereigns from competing with each other so that public peace, tranquility, security, and political harmony have the most ideal environment in which to flourish.

If we therefore examine the Constitution and the Supreme court cases interpreting it, we find that the complex division of authority that it makes between the states and the federal government accomplishes the following objectives:

1. Delegates primarily internal matters to the states. These matters involve mainly public health, morals, and welfare and require exclusive legislative authority within the state.
“Thus, Congress having power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes, may, without doubt, provide for granting coasting licenses, licenses to pilots, licenses to trade with the Indians, and any other licenses necessary or proper for the exercise of that great and extensive power; and the same observation is applicable to every other power of Congress, to the exercise of which the granting of licenses may be incident. All such licenses confer authority, and give rights to the licensee.

But very different considerations apply to the internal commerce or domestic trade of the States. Over this commerce and trade Congress has no power of regulation nor any direct control. This power belongs exclusively to the States. No interference by Congress with the business of citizens transacted within a State is warranted by the Constitution, except such as is strictly incidental to the exercise of powers clearly granted to the legislature. The power to authorize a business within a State is plainly repugnant to the exclusive power of the State over the same subject. It is true that the power of Congress to tax is a very extensive power. It is given in the Constitution, with only one exception and only two qualifications. Congress cannot tax exports, and it must impose direct taxes by the rule of apportionment, and indirect taxes by the rule of uniformity. Thus limited, and thus only, it reaches every subject, and may be exercised at discretion. But, it reaches only existing subjects.
Congress cannot authorize a trade or business within a State in order to tax it.”

[License Tax Cases, 72 U.S. 462, 18 L.Ed. 497, 5 Wall. 462, 2 A.F.R. 2224 (1866)]

2. Delegates primarily external matters to the federal government, including diplomatic and military and postal and commerce matters. These include such things as:

2.1. Article 1, Section 8, Clause 3 of the constitution authorizes the feds to tax and regulate foreign commerce and interstate commerce, but not intrastate commerce.

2.2. Article 1, Section 8, Clauses 11-16 authorize the establishment of a military and the authority to make war.

2.3. Article 1, Section 8, Clause 4 allows the fed to determine uniform rules for naturalization and immigration from outside the country. However, it does not take away the authority of states to naturalize as well.

3. Ensures that the same criminal offense is never prosecuted or punished twice or simultaneously under two sets of laws.

“Consequently no State court will undertake to enforce the criminal law of the Union, except as regards the arrest of persons charged under such law. It is therefore clear, that the same power cannot be exercised by a State court as is exercised by the courts of the United States, in giving effect to their criminal laws....”

“There is no principle better established by the common law, none more fully recognized in the federal and State constitutions, than that an individual shall not be put in jeopardy twice for the same offense. This, it is ture, applies to the respective governments; but its spirit applies with equal force against a double punishment, for the same act, by a State and the federal government....

Nothing can be more repugnant or contradictory than two punishments for the same act. It would be a mockery of justice and a reproach to civilization. It would bring our system of government into merited contempt.”

4. Ensures that the two sovereigns never tax the same objects or activities, because then they would be competing for revenues.

“Two governments acting independently of each other cannot exercise the same power for the same object.”

As far as the last item above goes, which is that of taxation, however, the U.S. Supreme Court has stated:

“The States, after they formed the Union, continued to have the same range of taxing power which they had before, barring only duties affecting exports, imports, and on tonnage. 2 Congress, on the other hand, to lay taxes in order ‘to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defence and general Welfare of the United States’, Art. 1, Sec. 8, U.S.A.Const., can reach every person and every dollar in the land with due regard to Constitutional limitations as to the method of laying taxes.”

[Graves v. People of State of New York, 306 U.S. 466 (1939)]

“The difficulties arising out of our dual form of government and the opportunities for differing opinions concerning the relative rights of state and national governments are many; but for a very long time this court has steadfastly adhered to the doctrine that the taxing power of Congress does not extend to the states or their political subdivisions. The same basic reasoning which leads to that conclusion, we think, requires like limitation upon the power which springs from the bankruptcy clause. United States v. Butler, supra.”

The grant of the power to lay and collect taxes is, like the power to regulate commerce, made in general terms, and has never been understood to interfere with the exercise of the same power by the State; and hence has been drawn an argument which has been applied to the question under consideration. But the two grants are not, it is conceived, similar in their terms or their nature. Although many of the powers formerly [22 U.S. 1, 199] exercised by the States, are transferred to the government of the Union, yet the State governments remain, and constitute a most important part of our system. The power of taxation is indispensable to their existence, and is a power which, in its own nature, is capable of residing in, and being exercised by, different authorities at the same time. We are accustomed to see it placed, for different purposes, in different hands. Taxation is the simple operation of taking small portions from a perpetually accumulating mass, susceptible of almost infinite division; and a power in one to take what is necessary for certain purposes, is not, in its nature, incompatible with a power in another to take what is necessary for other purposes. Congress is authorized to lay and collect taxes, and to pay the debts, and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States. This does not interfere with the power of the States to tax [internally] for the support of their own governments; nor is the exercise of that power by the States [to tax INTERNALLY], an exercise of any portion of the power that is granted to the United States [to tax EXTERNALLY]. In imposing taxes for State purposes, they are not doing what Congress is empowered to do. Congress is not empowered to tax for those purposes which are within the exclusive province of the States. When, then, each government exercises the power of taxation, neither is exercising the power of the other. But, when a State proceeds to regulate commerce with foreign nations, or among the several States, it is exercising the very power that is granted to Congress, [22 U.S. 1, 200] and is doing the very thing which Congress is authorized to do. There is no analogy, then, between the power of taxation and the power of regulating commerce.

"In Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 62, it was said that the police power is, from its nature, incapable of any exact definition or limitation; and in Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U.S. 618 , that it is 'easier to determine whether particular cases come within the general scope of the power than to give an abstract definition of the power itself, which will be in all respects accurate.' That there is a power, sometimes called the police power, which has never been surrendered by the states, in virtue of which they may, within certain limits, control everything within their respective territories, and upon the proper exercise of which, under some circumstances, may depend the public health, the public morals, or the public safety, is conceded in all the cases. Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 203. In its broadest sense, as sometimes defined, it includes all legislation and almost every function of civil government. Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U.S. 27, 31. [. . .] Definitions of the police power must, however, be taken subject to the condition that the state cannot, in its exercise, for any purpose whatever, encroach upon the powers of the general [federal] government, or rights granted or secured by the supreme law of the land.

"Illustrations of interference with the rightful authority of the general government by state legislation-which was defended upon the ground that it was enacted under the police power-are found in cases where enactments concerning the introduction of foreign paupers, convicts, and diseased persons were held to be unconstitutional as conflicting, by their necessary operation and effect, with the paramount authority of congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states. In Henderson v. Mayor of New York, 92 U.S. 265, the court, speaking by Mr. Justice MILLER, while declining to decide whether in the absence of congressional action the states can, or how far they may, by appropriate legislation protect themselves against actual paupers, vagrants, criminals, [115 U.S. 650, 662] and diseased persons, arriving from foreign countries, said, that no definition of the police power, and 'no urgency for its use, can authorize a state to exercise it in regard to a subject-matter which has been confined exclusively to the discretion of congress by the constitution.' Chy Lung v. Freeman, 92 U.S. 276. And in Railroad Co. v. Husen, 95 U.S. 474 , Mr. Justice STRONG, delivering the opinion of the court, said that 'the police power of a state cannot obstruct foreign commerce or interstate commerce beyond the necessity for its exercise; and, under color of it, objects not within its scope cannot be secured at the expense of the protection afforded by the federal constitution.'"

[New Orleans Gas Company v. Louisiana Light Company, 115 U.S. 650 (1885)]

And the Federalist Paper # 45 confirms this view in regards to taxation:

"It is true, that the Confederacy is to possess, and may exercise, the power of collecting internal as well as external taxes throughout the States; but it is probable that this power will not be resorted to, except for supplemental purposes of revenue; that an option will then be given to the States to supply their quotas by
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

The introduction of the Sixteenth Amendment did not change any of the above, because Subtitle A income taxes only apply to persons domiciled within the federal United States, or federal zone, including persons temporarily abroad per 26 U.S.C. §911. Even the Supreme Court agreed in the case of Stanton v. Baltic Mining that the Sixteenth Amendment “conferred no new powers of taxation”, and they wouldn’t have said it and repeated it if they didn’t mean it. We’ll explain this fact more thoroughly later in the chapter, starting in section 5.2.11. Whether or not the Sixteenth Amendment was properly ratified is inconsequential and a nullity, because of the limited applicability of Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A primarily to persons domiciled in the federal zone no matter where resident. The Sixteenth Amendment authorized that:

Sixteenth Amendment

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration.

And in fact, the above described amendment is exactly what an income tax under Subtitle A that only operates against persons domiciled within the federal zone does: collect taxes on incomes without apportionment. Furthermore, because the federal zone is not protected by the Constitution or the Bill of Rights (see Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U.S. 244 (1901)), then there can be no violation of constitutional rights from the enforcement of the I.R.C. there. As a matter of fact, since due process of law is a requirement only of the Bill of Rights, and the Bill of Rights doesn’t apply in the federal zone, then technically, Congress doesn’t even need a law to legitimately collect taxes in these areas! The federal zone, recall, is a totalitarian socialist democracy, not a republic, and the legislature and the courts can do anything they like there without violating the Bill of Rights or our Constitutional rights.

The question of whether the federal government has lawful authority to institute direct taxes inside the Union states is a rather simple one. Every power that it claims in respect to the internal affairs of states must have a Constitutional origin:

“The Government of the United States, therefore, can claim no powers which are not [explicitly] granted to it by the Constitution, and the powers actually granted must be such as are expressly given, or given by necessary implication.”

[Buffington v. Day, 11 Wall. 113, 78 U.S. 122 (1871)]

Under what circumstances the federal government can collect Subtitle A income taxes is a simple question of where, in the Constitution is the power explicitly granted to institute indirect excise taxes on natural “persons” domiciled inside the 50 union states who are not domiciled in federal enclaves? All excise taxes are taxes on privileges and ordinarily can only be enforced against artificial corporations and not natural persons. All such taxes against natural persons must be voluntary.
because consent is required in a free country and all just powers derive from consent. The Sixteenth Amendment, by the repeated admission of the Supreme court, didn’t authorize enforcement actions against other than corporations and before we had a Sixteenth Amendment, the Supreme Court said that the federal government didn’t have that authority in the case of Pollock v. Farmers’ Loan & Trust Co., 157 U.S. 429 (1895) to enforce income taxes on natural persons. It’s a simple question of where in the Constitution does the authority come from if the Supreme Court said it didn’t come from the Sixteenth Amendment? Absent an answer, any act by the federal government to collect an indirect excise tax is unlawful and illegal, because not explicitly authorized by the Constitution:

Unlawful. That which is contrary to, prohibited, or unauthorized by law. That which is not lawful. The acting contrary to, or in defiance of the law; disobeying or disregarding the law. Term is equivalent to “without excuse or justification.” State v. Noble, 90 N.M. 360, 563 P.2d. 1153, 1157. While necessarily not implying the element of criminality, it is broad enough to include it. [Black’s Law Dictionary, Sixth Edition, p. 1536]

Illegal. Against or not authorized by law.” [Black’s Law Dictionary, Sixth Edition, p. 747]

Without constitutional authority directly from the states somewhere in the Constitution, it cannot be claimed that taxes laid on activities or individuals inside the union states are consensual or voluntary, and if they aren’t consensual, then the people in the states are a conquered people and the federal government is at war with them by means of financial terrorism instituted at the hands of the IRS. In that scenario, the District of Columbia becomes a haven for financial terrorists and a “federal mafia”, who are protected from legal accountability for their abuses by sovereign immunity and the complicity of a corrupted and treasonous federal judiciary!

Let’s summarize what we have learned so far by breaking down all the various taxes by state and federal sovereignties and allocating them between internal and external classifications. A picture is worth a thousand words to reveal our research:

The location where a crime is committed controls. If it is committed on state property, then the state prosecutes. When a crime is committed inside a federal area within a Union state, however, the crime can be tried under either state or federal jurisdiction in many cases because of a thing called the Assimilated Crimes Act found in 18 U.S.C. §13. You cannot be tried under both jurisdictions because that would be double-jeopardy, which is prohibited by the Constitution. However, if the federal government fails to convict you in a federal court for a crime in a federal area situated inside a state, then sometimes the state will then try to prosecute you under federal law in a state court instead.

With all the above in mind, let’s return to the original Supreme Court cites we referred to at the beginning of the section. The Constitution and the Bill of Rights, which are the “laws” of the United States, apply equally to both the union states AND the federal government, as the cites explain. That is why either state or federal officers both have to take an oath to support and defend the Constitution before they take office. However, the statutes or legislation passed by Congress, which are called...
“Acts of Congress” have much more limited jurisdiction inside the Union states, and in most cases, do not apply at all. For example:

TITLE 18  >  PART III  >  CHAPTER 301  >  Sec. 4001.
Sec. 4001. - Limitation on detention; control of prisons

(a) No citizen shall be imprisoned or otherwise detained by the United States except pursuant to an Act of Congress.

The reason for the above is because the federal government has no police powers inside the states because these are reserved by the Tenth Amendment to the state governments. Likewise, the feds have no territorial jurisdiction for most subject matters inside the states either. See U.S. v. Bevans, 16 U.S. 336 (1818).

Now if we look at the meaning of “Act of Congress”, we find such a definition in Rule 54(c) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure prior to Dec. 2002, wherein is defined "Act of Congress." Rule 54(c) states:

Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 54(c) prior to Dec. 2002

"Act of Congress" includes any act of Congress locally applicable to and in force in the District of Columbia, in Puerto Rico, or in a territory or in an insular possession."

Keep in mind, the Internal Revenue Code is an “Act of Congress.” The reason such “Acts of Congress” cannot apply within the sovereign states is because the federal government lacks what is called “police powers” inside the union states, and the Internal Revenue Code requires police powers to implement and enforce. THEREFORE, THE QUESTION IS, ON WHICH OF THE FOUR LOCATIONS NAMED IN RULE 54(c) IS THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT ASSERTING JURISDICTION WHEN THE U.S. ATTORNEY HAULS YOUR ASS IN COURT ON AN INCOME TAX CRIME? Hint, everyone knows what and where the District of Columbia is, and everyone knows where Puerto Rico is, and territories and insular possessions are defined in Title 48 of the U.S. Code, happy hunting!

The preceding discussion within this section is also confirmed by the content of 4 U.S.C. §72. Subtitle A is primarily a “privilege” tax upon a “trade or business”, as you will learn later starting in section 5.6.12 and following. A “trade or business” is defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(26) as “the functions of a public office”:

§ 7701. Definitions

(a) When used in this title, where not otherwise distinctly expressed or manifestly incompatible with the intent thereof—

(26) Trade or business

"The term 'trade or business' includes the performance of the functions of a public office."

Title 4 of the U.S. Code then says that all “public offices” MUST exist ONLY in the District of Columbia and no place else, except as expressly provided by law:

TITLE 4  >  CHAPTER 3  >  § 72
§ 72. Public offices; at seat of Government

All offices attached to the seat of government shall be exercised in the District of Columbia, and not elsewhere, except as otherwise expressly provided by law.

If the we then search all the titles of the U.S. Code electronically, we find only one instance where “public offices” are “expressly provided” by law to a place other than the seat of government in connection with the Internal Revenue Code. That reference is found in 48 U.S.C. §1612, which expressly provides that public offices for the U.S. Attorney are extended to the Virgin Islands to enforce the provisions of the Internal Revenue Code.

Moving on, we find in 26 U.S.C. §7601 that the IRS has enforcement authority for the Internal Revenue Code only within what is called “internal revenue districts”. 26 U.S.C. §7621 authorizes the President to establish these districts. Under Executive Order 10289, the President delegated the authority to define these districts to the Secretary of the Treasury in 1952.
We then search the Treasury Department website for Treasury Orders documenting the establishment of these internal revenue districts:

http://www.ustreas.gov/regs/

The only orders documenting the existence of “internal revenue districts” is Treasury Orders 150-01 and 150-02. Treasury Order 150-01 established internal revenue districts that included federal land within states of the Union, but it was repealed in 1998 as an aftermath of the IRS Restructuring and Reform Act and replaced with Treasury Order 150-02. Treasury Order 150-02 says that all IRS administration must be conducted in the District of Columbia. Therefore, pursuant to 26 U.S.C. §7601, the IRS is only authorized to enforce the I.R.C. within the District of Columbia, which is the only remaining internal revenue district. This leads us full circle right back to our initial premise, which is:

1. The definition of the term “United States” found in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) and (a)(10), which is defined as the District of Columbia, means what it says and says what it means.
2. Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A may only be enforced within the only remaining internal revenue district, which is the District of Columbia.
3. There is no provision of law which “expressly extends” the enforcement of the Internal Revenue Code to any land under exclusive state jurisdiction.
4. The Separation of Powers Doctrine therefore does not allow anyone in a state of the Union to partake of the federal “privilege” known as a “trade or business”, which is the main subject of tax under I.R.C., Subtitle A This must be so because it involves a public office and all public offices must exist ONLY in the District of Columbia.
5. The only source of federal jurisdiction to tax is foreign commerce because the Constitution does not authorize any other type of tax internal to a state of the Union other than a direct, apportioned tax. Since the I.R.C., Subtitle A tax is not apportioned and since it is upon a privileged “trade or business” activity, then it is indirect and therefore need not be apportioned.

Q.E.D.-Quod Ero demonstrandum (proven beyond a shadow of a doubt)

We will now provide an all-inclusive list of subject matters for which the federal government definitely does have jurisdiction within a state, and the Constitutional origin of that power:

1. Foreign commerce pursuant to Article 1, Section 8, Clause 3 of the United States Constitution. This jurisdiction is described within 9 U.S.C. §1 et seq.
2. Counterfeiting pursuant to Article 1, Section 8, Clause 5 of the United States Constitution.
3. Postal matters pursuant to Article 1, Section 8, Clause 7 of the United States Constitution.
4. Treason pursuant to Article 4, Section 2, Clause 2 of the United States Constitution.
5. Federal contracts, franchises, and property pursuant to Article 4, Section 3, Clause 2 of the United States Constitution. This includes federal employment, which is a type of contract or franchise, wherever conducted, including in a state of the Union.

In relation to that last item above, which is federal contracts and franchises, Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A fits into that category, because it is a franchise and not a “tax”, which relates primarily to federal employment and contracts. The alleged “tax” in fact is a kickback scheme that can only lawfully affect federal contractors and employers, but not private persons. Those who are party to this contract or franchise are called “effectively connected” really means that they consented to the contract explicitly in writing or implicitly by their conduct. To enforce the “trade or business” franchise as a contract in a place where the federal government has no territorial jurisdiction requires informed, voluntary consent in some form from the party who is the object of the enforcement of the contract. The courts call this kind of consent “comity”. To wit:

"Judge Story, in his treatise on the Conflicts of Laws, lays down, as the basis upon which all reasonings on the law of comity must necessarily rest, the following maxims: First 'that every nation possesses an exclusive sovereignty and jurisdiction within its own territory'; secondly, 'that no state or nation can by its laws directly affect or bind property out of its own territory, or bind persons not resident therein, whether they are natural born subjects or others.' The learned judge then adds: 'From these two maxims or propositions there follows a third, and that is that whatever force and obligation the laws of one country have in another depend solely upon the laws and municipal regulation of the latter; that is to say, upon its own proper jurisdiction and polity, and upon its own express or tacit consent.' Story on Conflict of Laws §23."

When the federal government wishes to enforce one of its contracts or franchises in a place where it has no territorial jurisdiction, such as in China, it would need to litigate in the courts in China just like a private person. However, if the contract is within a state of the Union, the Separation of Powers Doctrine requires that all “federal questions”, including federal contracts, which are “property” of the United States, must be litigated in a federal court. This requirement was eloquently explained by the U.S. Supreme Court in Alden v. Maine, 527 U.S. 706 (1999). Consequently, even though the federal government enjoys no territorial jurisdiction within a state of the Union for other than the above subject matters explicitly authorized by the Constitution itself, it still has subject matter jurisdiction within federal court over federal property, contracts and franchises, which are synonymous. Since the Internal Revenue Code is a federal contract or franchise, then the federal courts have jurisdiction over this issue with persons who participate in the “trade or business” franchise. This concept is further explained later in sections 5.4 and 5.4.6.6.

Finally, below is a very enlightening U.S. Supreme Court case that concisely explains the constitutional relationship between the exclusive and plenary internal sovereignty of the states or the Union and the exclusive external sovereignty of the federal government:

“It will contribute to the elucidation of the question if we first consider the differences between the powers of the federal government in respect of foreign or external affairs and those in respect of domestic or internal affairs. That there are differences between them, and that these differences are fundamental, may not be doubted.

The two classes of powers are different, both in respect of their origin and their nature. The broad statement that the federal government can exercise no powers except those specifically enumerated in the Constitution, and such implied powers as are necessary and proper to carry into effect the enumerated powers, is categorically true only in respect of our internal affairs. In that field, the primary purpose of the Constitution was to carve from the general mass of legislative powers then possessed by the states such portions as it was thought desirable to vest in the federal government, leaving those not included in the enumeration still in the states.

As a result of the separation from Great Britain by the colonies, acting as a unit, the powers of external sovereignty passed from the Crown not to the colonies severally, but to the colonies in their collective and corporate capacity as the United States of America. Even before the Declaration, the colonies were a unit in foreign affairs, acting through a common agency-namely, the Continental Congress, composed of delegates from the thirteen colonies. That agency exercised the powers of war and peace, raised an army, created a navy, and finally adopted the Declaration of Independence. Rulers come and go; governments end and forms of government change; but sovereignty survives. A political society cannot endure without a supreme will somewhere. Sovereignty is never held in suspense. When, therefore, the external sovereignty of Great Britain in respect of the colonies ceased, it immediately passed to the Union. See Penhallow v. Doane, 3 Dall. 54, 80, 81, Fed.Cas. No. 10925. That fact was given practical application almost at once. The treaty of peace, made on September 3, 1783, was concluded between his Britannic Majesty and the ‘United States of America’ declared the United (not the several) Colonies to be free and independent states, and as such to have ‘full Power to levy War, conclude Peace, contract Alliances, establish Commerce and to do all other Acts and Things which Independent States may of right do.’

The Union existed before the Constitution, which was ordained and established among other things to form ‘a more perfect Union.’ Prior to that event, it is clear that the Union, declared by the Articles of Confederation to be ‘perpetual,’ was the sole possessor of external sovereignty, and in the Union it remained without change save in so far as the Constitution in express terms qualified its exercise. The Framers’ Convention was called and exerted its powers upon the irrefutable postulate that though the states were several their people in respect of foreign affairs were one. Compare The Chinese Exclusion Case, 150 U.S. 581, 604, 606 S., 9 S.Ct. 623. In that convention, the entire absence of state power to deal with those affairs was thus forcefully stated by Rufus King:

‘The states were not ‘sovereigns’ in the sense contended for by some. They did not possess the peculiar features of [external] sovereignty—that they could not make war, nor peace, nor alliances, nor treaties. Considering them as political beings, they were dumb, for they could not speak to any foreign sovereign whatever. They were deaf, for they could not hear any propositions from such sovereign. They had not even the organs or faculties of defence or offence, for they could not of themselves raise troops, or equip vessels, for war.’ 3 Elliot’s Debates, 212.1 [299 U.S. 304, 317] It results that the investment of the federal government with the powers of external sovereignty did not depend upon the affirmative grants of the Constitution. The powers to declare and wage war, to conclude peace, to make treaties, to maintain diplomatic relations with other sovereignties, if they had never been mentioned in the Constitution, would have vested in the federal government as necessary concomitants of nationality. Neither the Constitution nor the laws passed in pursuance of it have any force in foreign territory unless in respect of our own citizens (see American Banana Co. v. United Fruit Co., 213 U.S. 347, 356, 29 S.Ct. 513, 16 Ann.Cas. 1947), and operations of the nation in such territory must be governed by treaties, international understandings and compacts, and the principles of international law. As a member of the family of nations, the right and power of the United States in that field are equal to the right and power of the other members of the international family. Otherwise, the United States is not completely sovereign. The power to acquire territory by discovery and occupation (Jones v. United States, 137 U.S. 202, 212, 11 S.Ct. 80), the power to expel undesirable aliens (Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U.S. 698, 705 et seq., 13 S.Ct. 1016), the power to make such international agreements as do not constitute treaties in the constitutional sense (Altman & Co. v. United States, 224 U.S. 583, 600, 601 S., 32 S.Ct. 593; Crandall, Treaties, Their Making and Enforcement (2d Ed.) p. 302 and note 1), none of which is expressly affirmed by the Constitution, nevertheless exist as inherently inseparable from the conception of nationality. This the court recognized, and in each of the cases cited found the warrant for its conclusions not in the provisions of the Constitution, but in the law of nations.

In Burnet v. Brooks, 288 U.S. 378, 396, 53 S.Ct. 457, 461, 86 A.L.R. 747, we said, 'As a nation with all the attributes of sovereignty, the United States is vested with all the powers of government necessary to maintain an effective control of international relations.' Cf. Carter v. Carter Coal Co., supra, 298 U.S. 228, at page 295, 56 S.Ct. 855, 865. [299 U.S. 304, 319] Not only, as we have shown, is the federal power over external affairs in origin and essential character different from that over internal affairs, but participation in the exercise of the power is significantly limited. In this vast external realm, with its important, complicated, delicate and manifold problems, the President alone has the power to speak or listen as a representative of the nation. He makes treaties with the advice and consent of the Senate; but he alone negotiates; into the field of negotiation the Senate cannot intrude; and Congress itself is powerless to invade it. As Marshall said in his great argument of March 7, 1800, in the House of Representatives, The President is the sole organ of the nation in its external relations, and its sole representative with foreign nations: 'Annals, 6th Cong., col. 413. The Senate Committee on Foreign Relations at a very early day in our history (February 15, 1816), reported to the Senate, among other things, as follows:

'The President is the constitutional representative of the United States with regard to foreign nations. He manages our concerns with foreign nations and must necessarily be most competent to determine when, how, and upon what subjects negotiation may be urged with the greatest prospect of success. For his conduct he is responsible to the Constitution. The committee considers this responsibility the surest pledge for the faithful discharge of his duty. They think the interference of the Senate in the direction of foreign negotiations calculated to diminish that responsibility and thereby to impair the best security for the national safety. The nature of transactions with foreign nations, moreover, requires caution and unity of design, and their success frequently depends on secrecy and dispatch.' 8 U.S. En.Reports Comm. on Foreign Relations, p. 24.

It is important to bear in mind that we are here dealing not alone with an authority vested in the President by an [299 U.S. 304, 320] exertion of legislative power, but with such an authority plus the very delicate, plenary and exclusive power of the President as the sole organ of the federal government in the field of international relations-a power whose basis for its exercise is not a written provision of the Constitution, but that of the origins of our government. Like every other governmental power, must be exercised in subordination to the applicable provisions of the Constitution. It is quite apparent that if, in the maintenance of our international relations, embarrassment—perhaps serious embarrassment—is to be avoided and success for our aims achieved, congressional legislation which is to be made effective through negotiation and inquiry within the international field must often accord to the President a degree of discretion and freedom from statutory restriction which would not be admissible were domestic affairs alone involved. Moreover, he, not Congress, has the better opportunity of knowing the conditions which prevail in foreign countries, and especially is this true in time of war. He has his confidential sources of information. He has his agents in the form of diplomatic, consular and other officials. Secrecy in respect of information gathered by them may be highly necessary, and the premature disclosure of it productive of harmful results. Indeed, so clearly is this true that the first President refused to accede to a request to lay before the House of Representatives the instructions, correspondence and documents relating to the negotiation of the Jay Treaty—a refusal the wisdom of which was recognized by the House itself and has never since been doubted. In his reply to the request, President Washington said:

The nature of foreign negotiations requires caution, and their success must often depend on secrecy; and even when brought to a conclusion a full disclosure of all the measures, demands, or eventual concessions which may have been proposed or contemplated would be extremely [299 U.S. 304, 321] impolitic; for this might have a pernicious influence on future negotiations, or produce immediate inconveniences, perhaps danger and mischief, in relation to other powers.

The necessity of such caution and secrecy was one cogent reason for vesting the power of making treaties in the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, the principle on which that body was formed confining it to a small number of members. To admit, then, a right in the House of Representatives to demand and to have as a matter of course all the papers respecting a negotiation with a foreign power would be to establish a dangerous precedent.' 1 Messages and Papers of the Presidents, p. 194.

The marked difference between foreign affairs and domestic affairs in this respect is recognized by both houses of Congress in the very form of their requisitions for information from the executive departments. In the case of every department except the Department of State, the resolution directs the official to furnish the information. In the case of the State Department, dealing with foreign affairs, the President is requested to furnish the information ‘if not incompatible with the public interest.’ A statement that to furnish the information is not compatible with the public interest rarely, if ever, is questioned. “

If you would like to learn more about the relationship between federal and state sovereignty exercised within states of the Union, we recommend an excellent, short, succinct book on the subject as follows:

http://west.thomson.com/product/22088447/product.asp

5.2.6 The TWO Sources of Federal Civil Jurisdiction: “Domicile” and “Contract”

An often misunderstood subject by freedom advocates is federal jurisdiction. None of the freedom advocates we have talked to completely or accurately understand federal jurisdiction, which is why many of them lose when litigating in defense of their rights in federal court. This section will reveal some very important, fundamental, and often overlooked facts about federal jurisdiction that will allow many of you to be successful in court when litigating to protect your Constitutional rights.

The Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 17(b) describes the two sources of federal civil jurisdiction for all subject matters, which are “domicile” and “Contracts/Agency”. Here is that section:

IV. PARTIES > Rule 17.
   Rule 17. Parties Plaintiff and Defendant; Capacity

(b) Capacity to Sue or be Sued.

Capacity to sue or be sued is determined as follows:

(1) for an individual who is not acting in a representative capacity, by the law of the individual’s domicile;

(2) for a corporation[the “United States”, in this case, or its officers on official duty representing the corporation], by the law under which it was organized; and

(3) for all other parties, by the law of the state where the court is located, except that:

(A) a partnership or other unincorporated association with no such capacity under that state’s law may sue or be sued in its common name to enforce a substantive right existing under the United States Constitution or laws; and

(B) 28 U.S.C. §§754 and 959(a) govern the capacity of a receiver appointed by a United States court to sue or be sued in a United States court.

Notice the first sentence, which we emphasized. It basically says that civil liability can only be created by either a “domicile” within the general/exclusive jurisdiction of the state in question, or by the existence of “agency” or “employment” of some kind. When one acts in a “representative capacity” as identified above, they are exercising “agency” through the authority of a consensual contract of some kind. An example of such agency might be that of a “Trustee” within a trust indenture, or a “corporate officer”, who is an officer of a legal fiction called a corporation. You will learn later starting in section 5.4 through 5.4.6.6 that all “agency” is created mainly through the operation of “private law”, which in turn is created through the operation of your private right to contract.

“Private law. That portion of the law which defines, regulates, enforces, and administers relationships among individuals, associations, and corporations. As used in contradistinction to public law, the term means all that part of the law which is administered between citizen and citizen, o which is concerned with the definition, regulation, and enforcement of rights in cases where both the person in whom the right inheres and the person upon whom the obligation is incident are private individuals. See also Private bill; Special law. Compare Public Law.”

Therefore, there are only two sources of federal jurisdiction, which are:

1. Domicile in the exclusive legislative jurisdiction of the forum state. When the source of jurisdiction is “domicile”, the domicile must occur within the exclusive, general jurisdiction of the forum state and must derive only from “positive law” that is applicable within that jurisdiction. Domicile is based on “allegiance”:

The Great IRS Hoax: Why We Don’t Owe Income Tax, version 4.54

TOP SECRET: For Official Treasury/IRS Use Only (FOUO) Copyright Family Guardian Fellowship http://famguardian.org/
Thus the Court has frequently held that domicile or residence, more substantial than mere presence in transit or sojourn, is an adequate basis for taxation, including income, property, and death taxes. Since the Fourteenth Amendment makes one a citizen of the state wherein he resides, the fact of residence creates universally reciprocal duties of protection by the state and of allegiance and support by the citizen. The latter obviously includes a duty to pay taxes, and their nature and measure is largely a political matter. Of course, the situs of property may tax it regardless of the citizenship, domicile, or residence of the owner, the most obvious illustration being a tax on realty laid by the state in which the realty is located."

Since domicile is based on “allegiance” and all “allegiance” is territorial in nature, then the operation of this type of jurisdiction is exclusively territorial in nature and usually has as its goal the only legitimate purpose of government, which is public protection and the police powers that implement it.

"Yet, it is to be remembered, and that whether in its real origin, or in its artificial state, allegiance, as well as fealty, rests upon lands, and it is due to persons. Not so, with respect to Citizenship, which has arisen from the dissolution of the feudal system and is a substitute for allegiance, corresponding with the new order of things. Allegiance and citizenship, differ, indeed, in almost every characteristic. Citizenship is the effect of compact [contract]; allegiance is the offspring of power and necessity. Citizenship is a political tie; allegiance is a territorial tenure [. . .]. The doctrine is, that allegiance cannot be due to two sovereigns; and taking an oath of allegiance to a new, is the strongest evidence of withdrawing allegiance from a previous, sovereign."

A state may not enforce its positive or public laws outside of its own plenary/exclusive territorial jurisdiction. Below is how the U.S. Supreme Court describes it:

"Judge Story, in his treatise on the Conflicts of Laws, lays down, as the basis upon which all reasonings on the law of comity must necessarily rest, the following maxims: First 'that every nation possesses an exclusive sovereignty and jurisdiction within its own territory'; secondly, 'that no state or nation can by its laws directly affect or bind property out of its own territory, or bind persons not resident therein, whether they are natural born subjects or others.' The learned judge then adds: 'From these two maxims or propositions there follows a third, and that is that whatever force and obligation the laws of one country have in another depend solely upon the laws and municipal regulation of the latter; that is to say, upon its own proper jurisdiction and polity, and upon its own express or tacit consent.' Story on Conflict of Laws §23."

Therefore, laws based on domicile may not be enforced outside of the territory to which they apply. Below is a definition of “territory” from the Corpus Juris Secundum legal encyclopedia to make our meaning perfectly clear. Note that a state of the Union is NOT “territory” of the federal government, and therefore federal laws may not be enforced there:

"§1. Definitions, Nature, and Distinctions

"The word 'territory,' when used to designate a political organization has a distinctive, fixed, and legal meaning under the political institutions of the United States, and does not necessarily include all the territorial possessions of the United States, but may include only the portions thereof which are organized and exercise governmental functions under act of congress."

"While the term 'territory' is often loosely used, and has even been construed to include municipal subdivisions of a territory, and 'territories of the' United States is sometimes used to refer to the entire domain over which the United States exercises dominion, the word 'territory,' when used to designate a political organization, has a distinctive, fixed, and legal meaning under the political institutions of the United States, and the term 'territory' or 'territories' does not necessarily include only a portion or the portions thereof which are organized and exercise government functions under acts of congress. The term 'territories' has been defined to be political subdivisions of the outlying dominion of the United States, and in this sense the term 'territory' is not a description of a definite area of land but of a political unit governing and being governed as such. The question whether a particular subdivision or entity is a territory is not determined by the particular form of government with which it is, more or less temporarily, invested.

"Territories' or 'territory' as including 'state' or 'states.'" While the term 'territories of the' United States may, under certain circumstances, include the states of the Union, as used in the federal Constitution and in ordinary acts of congress "territory" does not include a foreign state.

"As used in this title, the term 'territories' generally refers to the political subdivisions created by congress, and not within the boundaries of any of the several states."

2. Private contract, which creates “agency” and liability of specific individuals through their voluntary, usually written, uncoerced, and informed consent. This type of jurisdiction requires the individual, informed, usually written but sometimes implied consent of all those affected by it. It is a different type of jurisdiction from “domicile” because it is not primarily territorial in nature. In fact, your right to contract knows no geographical boundaries:

"Debitum et contractus non sunt nullus loci. Debt and contract are of no particular place."

[Bouvier’s Maxims of Law, 1856; SOURCE: http://famguardian.org/Publications/BouvierMaximsOfLaw/BouviersMaxims.htm]

For instance, the government can contract with anyone, including people in foreign countries. How these private contracts are “arbitrated” or “litigated” is determined by the contract itself. An example would be government employment, which creates agency and a “contract” and “fiduciary duty” between the government and its “employees”. The terms of this contract are documented in Title 5 of the U.S. Code entitled “Government Organization and Employees” and Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A. Even though federal employment essentially is a “private contract” and “private law” that could theoretically be enforced in any court, Title 5 says that all federal “employees” engaged in a dispute with their contracted “employer” have to use the federal courts only and cannot use a state court. This approach is dictated by the Constitution itself, which says that state and federal governments enjoy “sovereign immunity” with respect to each other because of what is called the “Separation of Powers Doctrine”. See Alden v. Maine, 527 U.S. 706 (1999).

The implications of this separation of powers are that:

2.1. The federal government may not be sued in a state court.

2.2. A state government may not be sued in any federal District or Circuit court and can ONLY be sued in the U.S. Supreme Court. See the Eleventh Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

Of the two distinct sources of federal civil jurisdiction documented above, the second one is completely and almost universally overlooked and misunderstood by nearly every freedom fighter we have met. We assert that this supreme oversight, in fact, is the main “loophole” in the income tax deception that has kept it alive all these years since the Sixteenth Amendment was fraudulently ratified in 1913. It is quite common for people like Irwin Schiff, Larry Becraft, Jeffrey Dickstein, and other famous freedom fighter personalities who litigate often in federal court to over-emphasize the lack of federal territorial jurisdiction in item 1 above and to falsely presume that it is the ONLY source of federal jurisdiction. The result of this false “presumption” is that when they decry the lack of territorial jurisdiction and claim that the federal government has no jurisdiction to impose an income tax upon them or their clients, the federal courts rightly label their arguments as “frivolous and without merit”. The only way we will ever get anywhere in federal courts over freedom and sovereignty and taxation issues, folks, is to have a much better understanding of federal jurisdiction than what has been demonstrated in federal courts to date by well-intentioned but misinformed freedom advocates. This is not intended as a personal criticism of any specific individual by any means, but simply a statement of fact intended to help us to collectively focus on more fruitful approaches to litigation so as to end the illegal enforcement of the Internal Revenue Code by the IRS once and for all during our lifetime.

Most of the rest of section 5.2 will focus on item 1 above, which is “domicile”, and so we won’t beat a dead horse further by expanding upon that treatment here. Instead, we will focus the rest of this section upon the latter source of jurisdiction, which is item 2 above, or “private contract” as the source of federal jurisdiction because treatment of this subject is so sparse elsewhere on the Internet.

First of all, the foundation of our sovereignty as Americans is our right to contract. The United States Constitution, in fact, is a contract, and its purpose is to protect our right to contract. The U.S. Supreme Court calls it a “compact”.

"The people of the United States erected their Constitutions, or forms of government, to establish justice, to promote the general welfare, to secure the blessings of liberty; and to protect their persons and property from violence. The purposes for which men enter into society will determine the nature and terms of the social compact; and as they are the foundation of the legislative power, they will decide what are the proper objects of it: The nature, and ends of legislative power will limit the exercise of it."

[Calder v. Bull, 3 U.S. 386, 1798 WL 587 (1798)]

"In Europe, the executive is synonymous with the sovereign power of a state...where it is too commonly acquired by force or fraud, or both...In America, however the case is widely different. Our government is founded upon compact [consent expressed in a written contract called a Constitution or in positive law]. Sovereignty was, and is, in the people [as individuals: that's you]."
A “compact” is a contract or agreement:

“Compact. n. An agreement or contract between persons, nations, or states. Commonly applied to working agreements between and among states concerning matters of mutual concern. A contract between parties, which creates obligations and rights capable of being enforced and contemplated as such between the parties, in their distinct and independent characters. A mutual consent of parties concerned respecting some property or right that is the object of the stipulation, or something that is to be done or forbore. See also Compact clause; Confederacy; Interstate compact; Treaty.”

This right to contract is an extension of the whole notion of the system of government described in the Declaration of Independence:

Our system of government is based on “consent of the governed”. In a society populated by sovereigns, the only way a person can lose their rights is to voluntarily contract them away. In that respect, America is what we call “the land of the kings”:

“...at the Revolution, the sovereignty devolved on the people; and they are truly the sovereigns of the country, but they are sovereigns without subjects...with none to govern but themselves; the citizens of America are equal as fellow citizens, and as joint tenants in the sovereignty.”

“Soeverignty itself is, of course, not subject to law, for it is the author and source of law; but in our system, while sovereign powers are delegated to the agencies of government, sovereignty itself remains with the people [WE THE PEOPLE!], by whom and for whom all government exists and acts.”

[Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356, 6 S.Ct. 1064 (1886)]

“In common usage, the term 'person' does not include the sovereign, and statutes employing the word are ordinarily construed to exclude it.”

[Wilson v. Omaha Indian Tribe, 442 U.S. 653, 667 (1979)]

“Since in common usage the term 'person' does not include the sovereign, statutes employing that term are ordinarily construed to exclude it.”

[U.S. v. Cooper, 312 U.S. 600, 604, 61 S.Ct. 742 (1941)]

“In common usage, the term 'person' does not include the sovereign and statutes employing it will ordinarily not be construed to do so.”

What the government has done to undermine our sovereignty and thereby plunder our assets is learned how to very deviously and secretly cause us to contract away our rights by:

1. Creating government application forms that are actually “agreements” and “contracts” but which do not identify themselves as such. Some examples:

   1.1. IRS Form W-4: This form is identified in the regulations at 26 C.F.R. §31.3402(p)-1 and 26 C.F.R. §31.3401(a)-3(a) as a “voluntary withholding agreement”. Your public servants didn’t tell you that this was a contract and the form doesn’t say it either. The reason they commit this “sin of omission” is because they simply don’t want you to know that they need your consent in some form to take your money. That is how they keep the plunder flowing into their checking account and bilk you.

   1.2. Bank account applications. These applications state that you will be subject to the Federal Reserve regulations. These regulations, in turn, make you into a statutory “U.S. citizen” subject to federal jurisdiction. When you ask the bank for a copy of the REST of what you are agreeing to, the Federal Reserve regulations, they won’t help you because they simply don’t want you knowing what you are agreeing to.

2. Making and enforcing invisible and undocumented false “presumptions” relating to citizenship and domicile within federal courts. These presumptions create what is called “quasi-contracts” or “constructive contracts” that are invisible and undocumented. See section 5.4.4 later, which shows how income taxes are a form of “quasi-contract”, which is a contract enforced without explicit written consent of the “victim”.

3. Using “words of art” that lead us to misunderstand our sovereign status so as to cause us to believe that we have no rights to give up to begin with. We covered this earlier starting in section 3.12.1. For instance, if everyone domiciled in states of the Union falsely believes that they are statutory “U.S. citizens” under 8 U.S.C. §1401 who are instead domiciled in the federal zone where the Constitution and the Bill of Rights does not apply, then they will gladly and willingly give away our sovereignty on every government form we prepare if it asks us whether we are a statutory “U.S. citizen” or “resident”. When they do this, they won’t even realize that they will be giving away for absolutely nothing the very reason for which the Constitution was written in the first place.

If you would like to learn more about the many “invisible contracts” that your public servants have concocted over the years to essentially STEAL your sovereignty, we refer you to George Mercier’s wonderful series below available for free on our website at:

Invisible Contracts, George Mercier
http://famguardian.org/PublishedAuthors/Indiv/MercierGeorge/GeorgeMercier.htm

Now let’s look at how “contracts” and “private law” are implemented in the U.S. Code so as to make them falsely appear to be “mandatory”. The U.S. Supreme Court has admitted that federal income taxation is a type of “quasi-contract”, which means they admit that it is implemented through private law:

“Even if the judgment is deemed to be colored by the nature of the obligation whose validity it establishes, and we are free to re-examine it, and, if we find it to be based on an obligation penal in character, to refuse to enforce it outside the state where rendered, see Wisconsin v. Pelican Insurance Co., 127 U.S. 265, 292, et seq. 8 S.Ct. 1370, compare Fauntleroy v. Lum, 210 U.S. 230, 28 S.Ct. 641, still the obligation to pay taxes is not penal. It is a statutory liability, quasi contractual in nature, enforceable, if there is no exclusive statutory remedy, in the civil courts by the common-law action of debt or indebitatus assumpsit. United States v. Chamberlin, 219 U.S. 250, 31 S.Ct. 155; Price v. United States, 269 U.S. 492, 46 S.Ct. 190; Dollar Savings Bank v. United States, 19 Wall. 227; and see Stockwell v. United States, 13 Wall. 531, 542; Meredith v. United States, 13 Pet. 486, 493. This was the rule established in the English courts before the Declaration of Independence. Attorney General v. Weeks, Bunbury’s Exch. Rep. 223; Attorney General v. Jewers and Batty, Bunbury’s Exch. Rep. 225; Attorney General v. Hatton, Bunbury’s Exch. Rep. [296 U.S. 268, 272] 262; Attorney General v. _ _ _, 2 Ans.Rep. 558; see Comyn’s Digest (Title ‘Dett,’ A, 9); 1 Chitty on Pleading, 123; cf. Attorney General v. Sewell, 4 M.&W. 77. “
[Milwaukee v. White, 296 U.S. 268 (1935)]

As you will learn later in section 5.4.2.1, contracts and even some codes (notice we didn’t says “laws”) passed by Congress are a type of proposed “private law”. When a law is formally enacted by a legislative body, it is called a “statute”:

“Statute. A formal written enactment of a legislative body, whether federal, state, city, or county. An act of the legislature declaring, commanding, or prohibiting something; a particular law enacted and established by the will of the legislative department of government; the written will of the legislature, solemnly expressed according to the forms necessary to constitute it the law of the state. Such may be public or private, declaratory, mandatory, directory, or enabling, in nature. For mandatory and directory statutes, see Directory; Mandatory statutes.”

Statutes can be of two main types: “mandatory” and “directory”, as shown above. A “directory” statute is “voluntary” whereas a “mandatory” statute is not and does not require consent of the subject:

Mandatory statutes. Generic term describing statutes which require and not merely permit a course of action. They are characterized by such directives as “shall” and not “may.”

A “mandatory” provision in a statute is one the omission to follow which renders the proceedings to which it relates void, while a “directory” provision is one the observance of which is not necessarily to validity of the proceeding. It is also said that when the provision of a statute is the essence of the thing required to be done, it is mandatory, Kavanaugh v. Fash, C.C.A.Okl., 74 F.2d. 435, 437; otherwise, when it relates to form and manner, and where an act is incident, or after jurisdiction acquired, it is directory merely.
Mandatory provision is one which must be observed, as distinguished from “directory” provision, which leaves it optional with department or officer to which addressed to obey it or not. State ex rel Dworken v. Court of Common Pleas of Cuyahoga County, 131 Ohio.St. 23, 1 N.E.2d. 138, 139, 5 O.O. 291

Compare “mandatory statutes” above with their opposite, which is “directory”:

Directory, adj. A provision in a statute, rule of procedure, or the like, which is a mere direction or instruction of no obligatory force, and involving no invalidating consequence for its disregard, as opposed to an imperative or mandatory provision, which must be followed. The general rule is that the prescriptions of a statute relating to the performance of a public duty are so far directory that, though neglect of them may be punishable, yet it does not affect the validity of the acts done under them, as in the case of a statute requiring an officer to prepare and deliver a document to another officer on or before certain day.

A “directory” provision in a statute is one, the observance of which is not necessary to the validity of the proceeding to which it relates; one which leaves it optional with the department or officer to which it is addressed to obey or not as he may see fit. Generally, statutory provisions which do not relate to essence of thing to be done, and as to which compliance is a matter of convenience rather than substance are “directory,” while provisions which relate to essence of thing to be done, that is, matters of substance, are “mandatory.” Rodgers v. Meredith, 274 Ala. 179, 146 So.2d. 308, 310.

Under general classification, statutes are either “mandatory” or “directory,” and, if mandatory, they prescribe, in addition to requiring the doing of the things specified, the result that will follow if they are not done, whereas, if directory, their terms are limited to what is required to be done. A statute is mandatory when the provision of the statute is the essence of the thing required to be done; otherwise, when it relates to form and manner, and where an act is incident, or after jurisdiction acquired, it is directory merely.

In order to deceive a sovereign American into signing what amounts to an “invisible contract”, all that a legislator or lawmaker has to do is to deceive the reader by the following devious means:

1. Making a “directory” statute “appear” as a “mandatory” statute.
2. By using “words of art” to disguise who the true audience is for the statute. For instance:
   2.1. Using the phrase “all persons” to refer to the audience and then defining “person” as a federal “employee”.
   2.2. Using the word “United States” and either not defining it. Title 42 of the U.S. Code uses this word in the context of Social Security, but its definition does not appear in Title 42. It is in the original Social Security Act, which most Americans do not have access or skills to locate. The “United States” they are referring to in the act is the federal United States, consisting of the territory and possessions of the United States and excluding states of the Union.
3. By adding indirection to the statute so that two or three places in the code must be examined and simultaneously applied in order to understand the true audience. This makes it more difficult to discern who the proper subject is for the statute.
4. By persecuting and terrorizing all those who point out that the provision of law in question are “voluntary” without entertaining or explaining why these people are wrong. Instead, they are simply and conveniently labeled as “frivolous” without a thoughtful, public rebuttal to what they are saying.
5. When questioned about whether a “directory” statute is “mandatory” or “directory”, refusing to answer the question or lying by telling the questioner that it is “mandatory”.
6. By telling the truth about the distinctions but then warning people that the courts don’t agree with that view. This scares people who are inclined to avoid risk into obeying the statute anyway.
7. By gagging judges from making declaratory judgments about the meaning of words in statutes relating to taxes. The Declaratory Judgments Act, 28 U.S.C. §2201(a) prohibits federal judges from making declaratory judgments in relation to “taxes”:

United States Code
TITLE 28 - JURISDICTION AND JUDICIAL PROCEDURE
PART VI - PARTICULAR PROCEEDINGS
CHAPTER 151 - DECLARATORY JUDGMENTS
Sec. 2201. Creation of remedy

(a) In a case of actual controversy within its jurisdiction, except with respect to Federal taxes other than actions brought under section 7428 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, a proceeding under section 505 or 1146 of title 11, or in any civil action involving an antidumping or countervailing duty proceeding regarding a class or kind of merchandise of a free trade area country (as defined in section 516A(f)(10) of the Tariff Act of 1930), as determined by the administering authority, any court of the United States, upon the filing of an appropriorate pleading, may declare the rights and other legal relations of any interested party seeking such declaration, whether or not further relief is or could be sought. Any such declaration shall have the force and effect of a final judgment or decree and shall be reviewable as such.

Specifically, Rowen seeks a declaratory judgment against the United States of America with respect to “whether or not the plaintiff is a taxpayer pursuant to, and/or under determination of due process, and propaganda, few

S. citizen”, brought under section 7428 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, a code section that is not at issue in the instant action. See 28 U.S.C. §2201; see also Hughes v. United States, 953 F.2d. 531, 536-537 (9th Cir. 1991) (affirming dismissal of claim for declaratory relief under § 2201 where claim concerned question of tax liability).

Accordingly, defendant’s motion to dismiss is hereby GRANTED, and the instant action is hereby DISMISSED.

[Rowen v. U.S. 05-3766MMC. (N.D.Cal. 11/02/2005)]

8. By publishing government forms and publications which:

8.1. Use vague or ambiguous words that are not defined on the form or even in the statutes such as “U.S. citizen”, “United States”, “State”, “employee”, “income”, “citizen”.

8.2. Do not reveal the voluntary nature of the law in question and portray it instead as “mandatory”. An example is the IRS publications. The federal courts positively refuse to hold the IRS for anything the IRS publishes or writes, and even the IRS’ own Internal Revenue Manual (I.R.M.), Section 4.10.7.2.9.8 admits that IRS publications cannot be relied upon to sustain a position. See also:

http://famguardian.org/Subjects/Taxes/Articles/IRSNotResponsible.htm

The above mechanisms constitute legal terrorism. Their goal is to enslave those who do not know or read the law. They accomplish the purpose opposite that of the purpose for organized government and law, which is to protect. The Code of Federal Regulations proves this:

Title 28: Judicial Administration
PART 0—ORGANIZATION OF THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE
§0.85 General functions.

(1) Exercise Lead Agency responsibility in investigating all crimes for which it has primary or concurrent jurisdiction and which involve terrorist activities or acts in preparation of terrorist activities within the statutory jurisdiction of the United States. Within the United States, this would include the collection, coordination, analysis, management and dissemination of intelligence and criminal information as appropriate. If another Federal agency identifies an individual who is engaged in terrorist activities or in acts in preparation of terrorist activities, that agency is requested to promptly notify the FBI. Terrorism includes the unlawful use of force and violence against persons or property to intimidate or coerce a government, the civilian population, or any segment thereof, in furtherance of political or social objectives.

[Emphasis added]

We might add that the main purpose of this book is to fight such legal and government terrorism. The Bible also describes this type of terrorism. Notice the phrase “...which devises evil by law...”. There is only one organization or group that can “devise evil by law”, and that is lawmakers, politicians, and government employees:

“Shall the throne of iniquity, which devises evil by law, have fellowship with You? They gather together against the life of the righteous, and condemn innocent blood. But the Lord has been my defense, and my God the rock of my refuge. He has brought on them their own iniquity, and shall cut them off in their own wickedness; the Lord our God shall cut them off.”
[Psalm 94:20-23, Bible, NKJV]

After being victimized by the above types of state-sponsored terrorism, violation of due process, and propaganda, few Americans are likely to go any further in challenging the legality of illegal IRS enforcement actions. This happens mainly because they are deliberately under-informed about legal subjects in public school so they will make docile sheep for the wolves who run our government to devour. Law, in fact, is one of the few subjects that you simply CAN’T and AREN’T allowed to study in public grammar and high school, leading to dysfunctional citizens who make easy prey for the legal profession and government later in life.

Now that we understand how “directory” statutes are misrepresented by the government to maliciously expand their jurisdiction over sovereign Americans, let us now state some hypotheses that the rest of this chapter will forcefully prove beyond a shadow of any doubt:
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

1. I.R.C., Subtitles A and C is “private”/contract law that only applies to those who individually consent in some way.
2. For those who do not explicitly and individually consent, I.R.C., Subtitles A and C are merely “directory” in nature.
3. The method of providing consent for the above taxable activities is a combination of the following:
   3.1. Specifying a “domicile” within the “United States”, which is defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) and (a)(10) as the District of Columbia, on a government form. Since declaring a legal domicile is a voluntary act requiring individual consent, then it essentially creates a contract between the individual and the government. The purpose of that contract is essentially to procure “police protection” and public services:

   “This right to protect persons having a domicile, though not native-born or naturalized citizens, rests on the firm foundation of justice, and the claim to be protected is earned by considerations which the protecting power is not at liberty to disregard. Such domiciled citizen pays the same price for his protection as native-born or naturalized citizens pay for theirs. He is under the bonds of allegiance to the country of his residence, and, if he breaks them, incurs the same penalties. He owes the same obedience to the civil laws. His property is, in the same way and to the same extent as theirs, liable to contribute to the support of the Government. In nearly all respects, his and their condition as to the duties and burdens of Government are undistinguishable.”

   [Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U.S. 698 (1893)]

3.2. Making an application for any kind of government benefit, such as Medicare, Social Security, FICA, etc. This makes the applicant into a federal “employee” exercising agency on behalf of the federal government. I.R.C., Subtitle A is part of the employment agreement for that position. This is proved in the pamphlet:

   Why Your Government is Either a Thief or You are a “Public Officer” for Income Tax Purposes, Form #05.008

   http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

3.3. Engaging in an excise taxable activity called a “trade or business”, which is defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(26) as “the functions of a public office”. A “public office” is then defined as a position of authority and sovereignty within the federal government as an “employee”. That makes you subject to federal jurisdiction, and payment of I.R.C., Subtitle A then becomes a part of your implied employment agreement.

The implication we are trying to convey here is that if you want to be “sovereign” and not subject in any way to federal jurisdiction, then you cannot engage in any of the contracts with the government that are documented in item 3 above. That means:

1. You can’t declare a “domicile” within the jurisdiction of any earthly government.
   1.1. You cannot file the IRS Form 1040, because IRS Document 7130, the IRS Published Products Catalog, under the description of form 1040 says that only “citizens” and “residents” can use the form. What these two groups have in common is a “domicile” in the “United States”, which is defined as the District of Columbia in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) and (a)(10). All earnings from within the District of Columbia are “effectively connected with a trade or business in the United States”, as revealed by 26 U.S.C. §864(c)(3).
   1.2. On any government form that requires you to declare a “permanent address” or “domicile” or “residence”, you must fill in “None.” This includes IRS Form W-8BEN, all driver’s license applications, the passport application, and all voter registration forms, for instance.
2. You can’t sign up for or participate in any social insurance program of any kind and must completely support yourself. Doing so makes you into an “employee” who comes
3. You cannot use an SSN or any other government issued or controlled number on any government form for any purpose.
   20 C.F.R. §422.103 says that Social Security Numbers are government property. The only people who can use government/public property are those involved in an official government function, which is called a “public purpose”.
   When you are using public property, you are presumed to be exercising the agency of the federal government as an “employee”. You cannot lawfully abuse public property for private or personal use. It is a CRIME and you are a THIEF and a CRIMINAL if you do otherwise.

“Public purpose. In the law of taxation, eminent domain, etc., this is a term of classification to distinguish the objects for which, according to settled usage, the government is to provide, from those which, by the like usage, are left to private interest, inclination, or liberality. The constitutional requirement that the purpose of any tax, police regulation, or particular exertion of the power of eminent domain shall be the convenience, safety, or welfare of the entire community and not the welfare of a specific individual or class of persons (such as, for instance, federal benefit recipients as individuals) “Public purpose” that will justify expenditure of public money generally means such an activity as will serve as benefit to community as a body and which at same time is directly related function of government. Pack v. Southwestern Bell Tel. & Tel. Co., 215 Tenn. 503, 387 S.W.2d. 789, 794.

The term is synonymous with governmental purpose. As employed to denote the objects for which taxes may be levied, it has no relation to the urgency of the public need or to the extent of the public benefit which is to follow; the essential requisite being that a public service or use shall affect the inhabitants as a community, and not

The last nagging question we must deal with is how can we identify the existence of these invisible contracts designed to destroy and undermine our sovereignty by making “directory statutes” look like “mandatory statutes”? The answer is:

1. Read the law frequently and carefully, looking for subtle use of words that might confuse the distinctions between “mandatory” and “directory” statutes. For instance
   1.1. Look at the definition of key words, such as “tax”, “person”, “United States”, “State”, “employee”, “includes”, “income”, “taxpayer”, and “trade or business”. Nearly all the deceit is usually hidden in the definitions, which are usually at the end in hopes that you won’t read them.
   1.2. Search for the word “consent”. Anything requiring either “consent” or “intent” is voluntary. “Domicile”, for instance, has as a prerequisite “intent”, which is simply a synonym for “consent”.

   “domicile. A person’s legal home. That place where a man has his true, fixed, and permanent home and principal establishment, and to which whenever he is absent he has the intention of returning. Smith v. Smith, 206 Pa.Super. 310, 213 A.2d. 94. Generally, physical presence within a state and the intention to make it one's home are the requisites of establishing a “domicile” therein. The permanent residence of a person or the place to which he intends to return even though he may actually reside elsewhere. A person may have more than one residence but only one domicile. The legal domicile of a person is important since it, rather than the actual residence, often controls the jurisdiction of the taxing authorities and determines where a person may exercise the privilege of voting and other legal rights and privileges.” [Black’s Law Dictionary, Sixth Edition, p. 485]

1.3. Look for the words “agreement” or “contract” and find out what the implications of signing such an agreement are.
1.4. Looking for the word “liable” in a statutes. If it is not to be found, then the code containing it is a “directory” statute and requires consent usually procured by some other means to be enforceable.

2. Look at the enforcement provisions of the law and who they apply to. This will reveal who the real audience is for the statute.

3. Read the document from George Mercier above entitled “Invisible Contracts” and thoroughly understand what you should be on the lookout for available at:
   http://famguardian.org/PublishedAuthors/Indiv/MercierGeorge/GeorgeMercier.htm

4. Look at what happens to those who refuse to sign any agreements or forms with the government, such as W-4, SS-5 applications, or tax returns. Are they left alone? If they are, then you know it’s voluntary.

5. Ask the authorities that be why your signature is necessary on a government form in order to comply, if in fact the tax or desired behavior is “mandatory” and not “voluntary”. How come they don’t just compute the tax for you and send you a bill, rather than requiring you to sign something under penalty of perjury signifying consent and then mail it in?

On the subject of the first item in the list above, allow us to present a table that shows a few examples of exactly what you are looking for in your reading of the Internal Revenue Code (26 U.S.C.) and Treasury Regulations (26 C.F.R.) in order to prove that it is “directory” rather than “mandatory” statute in relation to a person who has no contracts or agency, constructive or otherwise, with the federal government:

That contract is the federal employment contract called the SS-4 or W-4, which identifies the signator as a “public officer” engaged in a business partnership with the federal government called a “trade or business.”</td>

The last very important thing we must do in this section is to show you how the government and legal profession use propaganda and lies to disguise the voluntary, consensual nature of Subtitle A federal income taxes from the American public. Below is a table containing government and legal profession propaganda relating to taxation along with an explanation of the deliberate deception the reveal:
Welch v. Henry, 305 U.S. 134, 146 (1938)

"Taxation is neither a penalty imposed on the taxpayer nor a liability which he assumes by contract. It is but a way of apportioning the cost of government among those who in some measure are privileged to enjoy its benefits and must bear its burdens. [305 U.S. 134, 147] Since no citizen enjoys immunity from that burden, its retroactive imposition does not necessarily infringe due process, and to challenge the present tax it is not enough to point out that the taxable event, the receipt of income, antedated the statute."

They are absolutely right because a taxpayer is already party to and subject to the “directory statute” called Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A, but what about the person who is not? For instance, the following statement is similar but would be untrue because it uses a different choice of words and a different subject:

"Taxation is neither a penalty imposed on the nontaxpayer nor a liability which he assumes by contract."

In fact, it is a penalty for a “nontaxpayer” because he doesn’t owe the tax to begin with and is not subject to that law. To force him to pay a tax he doesn’t owe is not only a penalty, but organized extortion. The only way to make a “nontaxpayer” into a “taxpayer” is for him to voluntarily choose a domicile within the forum state and to voluntarily engage in excise taxable activities such as a “trade or business” that would make him liable. In that sense, for the “nontaxpayer”, some type of voluntary and therefore consensual action is required in order to change his status to that of a “taxpayer.” The consent required to institute those voluntary activities is the essence of the “contract” required to change his status into that of a “taxpayer.”

A “citizen” is a person who maintains a “domicile” within the forum or jurisdiction in question. The coincidence of legal domicile and the excise taxable activities one engages in within that jurisdiction are the two main factors that make a person a “taxpayer.”

"Thus, the Court has frequently held that domicile or residence, more substantial than mere presence in transit or sojourn, is an adequate basis for taxation, including income, property, and death taxes. Since the Fourteenth Amendment makes one a citizen of the state wherein he resides, the fact of residence creates universally reciprocal duties of protection by the state and of allegiance and support by the citizen. The latter obviously includes a duty to pay taxes, and their nature and measure is largely a political matter. Of course, the situs of property may tax it regardless of the citizenship, domicile, or residence of the owner, the most obvious illustration being a tax on realty laid by the state in which the realty is located.”

The fact of being a “citizen” is the condition of voluntarily declaring a domicile and thereby becoming liable to taxation. A person who started out as a “citizen” and chooses not to either have no earthly domicile or to have a permanent domicile in a foreign country outside of the state in question becomes a “national” but not a “citizen” and also a “nontaxpayer.” In that sense, income taxes for him are voluntary and result from his choice of domicile. Since the decision to declare a domicile is voluntary, then income taxes are voluntary. One who does not want to participate in the tax system simply becomes a “transient foreigner” which is a person with no legal domicile anywhere.
"A tax is not regarded as a debt in the ordinary sense of that term, for the reason that a tax does not depend upon the consent of the taxpayer and there is no express or implied contract to pay taxes. Taxes are not contracts between party and party, either express or implied; but they are the positive acts of the government, through its various agents, binding upon the inhabitants, and to the making and enforcing of which their personal consent individually is not required."

As we said in the previous explanation, taxes result from "domicile". Selecting a "domicile" within the country in which a person was born changes their status from that of simply a "national" to that of a "citizen". The Supreme Court defines "citizenship" as a type of contract called a "compact":

"Allegiance and citizenship, differ, indeed, in almost every characteristic. Citizenship is the effect of compact [contract]; allegiance is the offspring of power and necessity. Citizenship is a political tie; allegiance is a territorial tenure."

[Talbot v. Janson, 3 U.S. 133 (1795); From the syllabus but not the opinion; SOURCE: http://www.law.cornell.edu/supct/search/display.html?terms=choice%20or%20conflict%20and%20law&url=/supct/html/historics/USSC_CR_0003_0133_ZS.html]

A "citizen", which is simply a "national" who owes allegiance to a political community, becomes a "citizen" when he selects a domicile within the exclusive legislative jurisdiction of that community. The court uses the word "inhabitant", which is legally defined as follows:

"Inhabitant. One who reside actually and permanently in a given place, and has his domicile there. Ex parte Shaw, 145 U.S. 444, 12 S.Ct. 935, 36 L.Ed. 768."

Note the key word "resides actually and permanently". That means they are once again talking about a person who has a "domicile" in the exclusive jurisdiction of the state. Notice the use of the word "permanent" in the definition of "domicile":

"domicile. A person's legal home. That place where a man has his true, fixed, and permanent home and principal establishment, and to which whenever he is absent he has the intention of returning. Smith v. Smith, 206 Pa.Super. 310, 213 A.2d. 94. Generally, physical presence within a state and the intention to make it one's home are the requisites of establishing a "domicile" therein. The permanent residence of a person or the place to which he intends to return even though he may actually reside elsewhere. A person may have more than one residence but only one domicile. The legal domicile of a person is important since it, rather than the actual residence, often controls the jurisdiction of the taxing authorities and determines where a person may exercise the privilege of voting and other legal rights and privileges."

Once again, a person cannot be a "taxpayer" without voluntarily choosing a domicile within the forum state. By choosing a domicile within that state, one is making a choice of political association in which the person nominates a "protector" and in essence contracts with that government sovereign to provide protection. In return, he owes allegiance and the duty to support the cost of providing the protection. In that sense, taxation absolutely and unequivocally are "contractual" and the contract is between the individual, and the government that has jurisdiction over the physical place that he voluntarily identifies and consents to make into his "domicile".

You will note that the key means of deception in the preceding tabular list of government and legal profession propaganda are the following:

1. Use of the word “taxpayer” instead of “every American” or “every person”. A “taxpayer” is, by definition found in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(14), a person who is “subject to” and “liable for” tax.

   26 U.S.C. Sec. 7701: Definitions

   (a) When used in this title, where not otherwise distinctly expressed or manifestly incompatible with the intent thereof—

   (14) Taxpayer

   The term “taxpayer” means any person subject to any internal revenue tax.

A “taxpayer” therefore is already party to the Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A by virtue of consenting to it and consenting to act and be treated as a “taxpayer”. Consenting to be a “taxpayer” even though no liability statute makes him one is how he becomes subject to it to begin with! He is a “taxpayer” usually because he ALREADY signed a W-4 or 1040 or SSA Form SS-5. To say that is deceptive, because he already has the liability based on the status of being a “taxpayer”. A “taxpayer” incapable of assuming more than that liability in regards to the tax in question than he already has. On the other hand, the following statement would be completely false, and all we did was add three letters:

Forcing a “nontaxpayer” to pay anything is a penalty and extortion, and the only way it wouldn’t be illegal extortion would be if he had a domicile within the forum state and was engaging in excise taxable activities that made him legally liable to pay.

2. Use of “citizen”, which is a person with a “domicile” within the forum state and therefore liable to taxation, instead of “person”. For instance, a “transient foreigner”, even if he was born in the forum state and physically present there, is not a “citizen” because he does not have a domicile. Therefore, he is a “nontaxpayer”. We cover this later in section 5.4.8.

   Transient foreigner. One who visits the country, without the intention of remaining,”

3. Avoiding revealing what aspect of voluntary behavior made a person a “taxpayer”. For instance, none of the above cites mention the true behaviors that make one into a “taxpayer”, such as “domicile” or excise taxable activities. Instead, they refer to the party liable simply as a “taxpayer”, “inhabitant”, or “citizen”, all three of which are synonymous with a person who maintain a “domicile” within the jurisdiction in question and therefore are “liable”: Here is the proof:

   “This right to protect persons having a domicile, though not native-born or naturalized citizens, rests on the firm foundation of justice, and the claim to be protected is earned by considerations which the protecting power is not at liberty to disregard. Such domiciled citizen pays the same price for his protection as native-born or naturalized citizens pay for theirs. He is under the bonds of allegiance to the country of his residence, and, if he breaks them, incurs the same penalties. He owes the same obedience to the civil laws. His property is, in the same way and to the same extent as theirs, liable to contribute to the support of the Government. In nearly all respects, his and their condition as to the duties and burdens of Government are undistinguishable.”

None of the above cases or quotes mention the real voluntary and consensual “activities” that make one a “taxpayer” such as choosing a legal “domicile” or volunteering to engage in privileged, excise taxable activities, because the sources cited simply do not want to give the audience any information about how to avoid the tax in question. If everyone knew that “domicile” and a “trade or business” were the main legal basis for volunteering or consenting to become a taxpayer, for instance, then they would simply change their domicile and quit associating themselves with the activity that they never were involved in to begin with. This would lawfully deprive the government of revenues, and leave them with no lawful means of replacing said revenues. Instead, those authoring the above specious propaganda want you to believe that taxation does not require consent, that it is compelled, that no aspect of it is voluntary, and that they instead of you are the “sovereigns” who must be obeyed. They want tax slaves to govern in their legislatively created federal plantation in the District of Columbia, not sovereigns which law obligates them to respect, obey, and leave alone. Do you see how insidious this deception is?

5.2.7 “Public” v. “Private” employment: You will be ILLEGALLY Treated as a Public Officer if you Apply for or Receive Government “Benefits”

“All systems either of preference or of restraint, therefore, being thus completely taken away, the obvious and simple system of natural liberty establishes itself of its own accord. Every man, as long as he does not violate the laws of justice, is left perfectly free to pursue his own interest his own way, and to bring both his industry and capital into competition with those of any other man or order of men. The sovereign is completely discharged from a duty, in the attempting to perform which he must always be exposed to innumerable delusions, and for the proper performance of which no human wisdom or knowledge could ever be sufficient: the duty of superintending the industry of private people.”

The U.S. Supreme Court has said many times that the ONLY purpose for lawful, constitutional taxation is to collect revenues to support ONLY the machinery and operations of the government and its “employees”. This purpose, it calls a “public use” or “public purpose”:

“The power to tax is, therefore, the strongest, the most pervading of all powers of government, reaching directly or indirectly to all classes of the people. It was said by Chief Justice Marshall, in the case of McCulloch v. Md., 4 Wheat. 431, that the power to tax is the power to destroy. A striking instance of the truth of the proposition is seen in the fact that the existing tax of ten per cent, imposed by the United States on the circulation of all other banks than the National Banks, drove out of existence every state bank of circulation within a year or two after its passage. This power can be readily employed against one class of individuals and in favor of another, so as to ruin the one class and give unlimited wealth and prosperity to the other, if there is no implied limitation of the uses for which the power may be exercised.

To lay, with one hand, the power of the government on the property of the citizen, and with the other to bestow it upon favored individuals to aid private enterprises and build up private fortunes, is none the less a robbery because it is done under the forms of law and is called taxation. This is not legislation. It is a decree under legislative forms.

Nor is it taxation. ‘A tax,’ says Webster’s Dictionary, ‘is a rate or sum of money assessed on the person or property of a citizen by government for the use of the nation or State.’ ‘Taxes are burdens or charges imposed by the Legislature upon persons or property to raise revenue for public purposes,’ Cooley, Const. Lim., 479.

Coulter, J., in Northern Liberties v. St. John’s Church, 13 Pa.St., 104 says, very forcibly, ‘I think the common mind has everywhere taken in the understanding that taxes are a public imposition, levied by authority of the government for the purposes of carrying on the government in all its machinery and operations—that they are imposed for a public purpose.’ See, also Pray v. Northern Liberties, 31 Pa.St., 69; Matter of Mayor of N.Y., 11 Johns., 77; Camden v. Allen, 2 Dutch., 398; Sharpless v. Mayor, supra; Hansson v. Vernon, 27 Ia., 47; Whiting v. Fond du Lac, supra.”

[Loan Association v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655 (1874)]

“A tax, in the general understanding of the term and as used in the constitution, signifies an exaction for the support of the government. The word has never thought to connote the expropriation of money from one group for the benefit of another.”

[U.S. v. Butler, 297 U.S. 1 (1936)]
Black’s Law Dictionary defines the word “public purpose” as follows:

"Public purpose. In the law of taxation, eminent domain, etc., this is a term of classification to distinguish the objects for which, according to settled usage, the government is to provide, from those which, by the like usage, are left to private interest, inclination, or liberality. The constitutional requirement that the purpose of any tax, police regulation, or particular exertion of the power of eminent domain shall be the convenience, safety, or welfare of the entire community and not the welfare of a specific individual or class of persons (such as, for instance, federal benefit recipients as individuals). “Public purpose” that will justify expenditure of public money generally means such an activity as will serve as benefit to community as a body and which at same time is directly related function of government. Pack v. Southwestern Bell Tel. & Tel. Co., 215 Tenn. 503, 387 S.W.2d. 789, 794.

The term is synonymous with governmental purpose. As employed to denote the objects for which taxes may be levied, it has no relation to the urgency of the public need or to the extent of the public benefit which is to follow; the essential requisite being that a public service or use shall affect the inhabitants as a community, and not merely as individuals. A public purpose or public business has for its objective the promotion of the public health, safety, morals, general welfare, security, prosperity, and contentment of all the inhabitants or residents within a given political division, as, for example, a state, the sovereign powers of which are exercised to promote such public purpose or public business.” [Black’s Law Dictionary, Sixth Edition, p. 1231, Emphasis added]

A related word defined in Black’s Law Dictionary is “public use”:

Public use. Eminent domain. The constitutional and statutory basis for taking property by eminent domain. For condemnation purposes, "public use" is one which confers some benefit or advantage to the public; it is not confined to actual use by public. It is measured in terms of right of public to use proposed facilities for which condemnation is sought and, as long as public has right of use, whether exercised by one or many members of public, a "public advantage" or "public benefit" accrues sufficient to constitute a public use. Montana Power Co. v. Bokma, Mont., 457 A.2d. 769, 772, 773.

Public use, in constitutional provisions restricting the exercise of the right to take property in virtue of eminent domain, means a use concerning the whole community distinguished from particular individuals. But each and every member of society need not be equally interested in such use, or be personally and directly affected by it; if the object is to satisfy a great public want or exigency, that is sufficient. Ringe Co. v. Los Angeles County, 262 U.S. 700, 43 S.Ct. 689, 692, 67 L.Ed. 1186. The term may be said to mean public usefulness, utility, or advantage, or what is productive of general benefit. It may be limited to the inhabitants of a small or restricted locality, but must be in common, and not for a particular individual. The use must be a needful one for the public, which cannot be surrendered without obvious general loss and inconvenience. A "public use" for which land may be taken defies absolute definition for it changes with varying conditions of society, new appliances in the sciences, changing conceptions of scope and functions of government, and other differing circumstances brought about by an increase in population and new modes of communication and transportation. Katz v. Brandon, 156 Conn. 521, 245 A.2d. 579, 586.

See also Condemnation; Eminent domain. [Black’s Law Dictionary, Sixth Edition, p. 1232]

Black’s Law Dictionary also defines the word “tax” as follows:

"Tax. A charge by the government on the income of an individual, corporation, or trust, as well as the value of an estate or gift. The objective in assessing the tax is to generate revenue to be used for the needs of the public.

A pecuniary [relating to money] burden laid upon individuals or property to support the government, and is a payment exacted by legislative authority. In re Mytinger, D.C.Tex. 31 F.Supp. 977,978,979. Essential characteristics of a tax are that it is NOT A VOLUNTARY PAYMENT OR DONATION, BUT AN ENFORCED CONTRIBUTION, EXACTED PURSUANT TO LEGISLATIVE AUTHORITY. Michigan Employment Sec. Commission v. Patt, 4 Mich.App. 228, 144 N.W.2d. 663, 665. ...” [Black’s Law Dictionary, Sixth Edition, p. 1457]

So in order to be legitimately called a “tax” or “taxation”, the money we pay to the government must fit all of the following criteria:

1. The money must be used ONLY for the support of government.
2. The subject of the tax must be “liable”, and responsible to pay for the support of government under the force of law.
3. The money must go toward a “public purpose” rather than a “private purpose”.
4. The monies paid cannot be described as wealth transfer between two people or classes of people within society
5. The monies paid cannot aid one group of private individuals in society at the expense of another group, because this violates the concept of equal protection of law for all citizens found in section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment.

If the monies demanded by government do not fit all of the above requirements, then they are being used for a “private” purpose and cannot be called “taxes” or “taxation”, according to the Supreme Court. Actions by the government to enforce the payment of any monies that do not meet all the above requirements can therefore only be described as:

1. Theft and robbery by the government in the guise of “taxation”
2. Government by decree rather than by law
4. Tyranny
5. Socialism
6. Mob rule and a tyranny by the “have-nots” against the “haves”
7. 18 U.S.C. §241: Conspiracy against rights. The IRS shares tax return information with states of the union, so that both of them can conspire to deprive you of your property.
8. 18 U.S.C. §242: Deprivation of rights under the color of law. The Fifth Amendment says that people in states of the Union cannot be deprived of their property without due process of law or a court hearing. Yet, the IRS tries to make it appear like they have the authority to just STEAL these people’s property for a fabricated tax debt that they aren’t even legally liable for.
9. 18 U.S.C. §247: Damage to religious property; obstruction of persons in the free exercise of religious beliefs
11. 18 U.S.C. §876: Mailing threatening communications. This includes all the threatening notices regarding levies, liens, and idiotic IRS letters that refuse to justify why government thinks we are “liable”.
12. 18 U.S.C. §880: Receiving the proceeds of extortion. Any money collected from Americans through illegal enforcement actions and for which the contributors are not “liable” under the law is extorted money, and the IRS is in receipt of the proceeds of illegal extortion.
13. 18 U.S.C. §1581: Peonage, obstructing enforcement. IRS is obstructing the proper administration of the Internal Revenue Code and the Constitution, which require that they respect those who choose NOT to volunteer to participate in the federal donation program identified under I.R.C., Subtitle A
14. 18 U.S.C. §1583: Enticement into slavery. IRS tries to enlist “nontaxpayers” to rejoin the ranks of other peons who pay taxes they aren’t demonstrably liable for, which amount to slavery.
15. 18 U.S.C. §1589: Forced labor. Being forced to expend one’s personal time responding to frivolous IRS notices and pay taxes on my labor that I am not liable for.

The U.S. Supreme Court has further characterized all efforts to abuse the tax system in order to accomplish “wealth transfer” as “political heresy” that is a denial of republican principles that form the foundation of our Constitution, when it issued the following strong words of rebuke. Incidentally, the case below also forms the backbone of reasons why the Internal Revenue Code can never be anything more than private law that only applies to those who volunteer into it:

“The Legislature may enjoin, permit, forbid, and punish; they may declare new crimes; and establish rules of conduct for all its citizens in future cases; they may command what is right, and prohibit what is wrong; but they [the government] cannot change innocence [a “nontaxpayer”] into guilt [a “taxpayer”]; or punish innocence as a crime [criminally prosecute a “nontaxpayer” for violation of the tax laws]; or violate the right of an antecedent lawful private contract; or the right of private property. To maintain that our Federal, or State, Legislature possesses such powers [of THEFT and FRAUD], if they had not been expressly restrained, would, in my opinion, be a political heresy, altogether inadmissible in our free republican governments.”

We also cannot assume or suppose that our government has the authority to make “gifts” of monies collected through its taxation powers, and especially not when paid to private individuals or foreign countries because:

1. The Constitution DOES NOT authorize the government to “gift” money to anyone within states of the Union or in foreign countries, and therefore, this is not a Constitutional use of public funds, nor does unauthorized expenditure of such funds produce a tangible public benefit, but rather an injury, by forcing those who do not approve of the gift to subsidize it and yet not derive any personal benefit whatsoever for it.
2. The Supreme Court identifies such abuse of taxing powers as “robbery in the name of taxation” above.
Based on the foregoing analysis, we are then forced to divide the monies collected by the government through its taxing powers into only two distinct classes. We also emphasize that every tax collected and every expenditure originating from the tax paid MUST fit into one of the two categories below:

The U.S. Supreme Court also helped to clarify how to distinguish the two above categories when it said:

“It is undoubtedly the duty of the legislature which imposes or authorizes municipalities to impose a tax to see that it is not to be used for purposes of private interest instead of a public use, and the courts can only be justified in interposing when a violation of this principle is clear and the [87 U.S. 665] reason for interference cogent. And in deciding whether, in the given case, the object for which the taxes are assessed falls upon the one side or the other of this line, they must be governed mainly by the course and usage of the government, the objects for which taxes have been customarily and by long course of legislation levied, what objects or purposes have been considered necessary to the support and for the proper use of the government, whether state or municipal. Whatever lawfully pertains to this and is sanctioned by time and the acquiescence of the people may well be held to belong to the public use, and proper for the maintenance of good government, though this may not be the only criterion of rightful taxation.”

If we give our government the benefit of the doubt by “assuming” or “presuming” that it is operating lawfully and consistent with the model on the left above, then we have no choice but to conclude that everyone who lawfully receives any kind of federal payment MUST be either a federal “employee” or “federal contractor” on official duty, and that the compensation received must be directly connected to the performance of a sovereign or Constitutionally authorized function of government.
Any other conclusion or characterization of a lawful tax other than this is irrational, inconsistent with the rulings of the U.S. Supreme Court on this subject, and an attempt to deceive the public about the role of limited Constitutional government based on Republican principles. This means that you cannot participate in any of the following federal social insurance programs WITHOUT being a federal “employee”, and if you refuse to identify yourself as a federal employee, then you are admitting that your government is a thief and a robber that is abusing its taxing powers:

2. Social Security.
3. Unemployment compensation.
4. Medicare.

An examination of the Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. §552a(a)(13), in fact, identifies all those who participate in the above programs as “federal personnel”, which means federal “employees”. To wit:

Title 5 > Part I > Chapter 5 > Subchapter II > § 552a

1. (a) Definitions.— For purposes of this section—

   (13) the term “Federal personnel” means officers and employees of the Government of the United States, members of the uniformed services (including members of the Reserve Components), individuals entitled to receive immediate or deferred retirement benefits under any retirement program of the Government of the United States (including survivor benefits).

The “individual” they are talking about above is further defined in 5 U.S.C. §552a(a)(2) as follows:

Title 5 > Part I > Chapter 5 > Subchapter II > § 552a

1. (a) Definitions.— For purposes of this section—

   (2) the term “individual” means a citizen of the United States or an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence;

The “citizen of the United States” they are talking above is based on the STATUTORY rather than CONSTITUTIONAL definition of the “United States”, which means it refers to “national and citizen of the United States at birth” under 8 U.S.C. §1401 rather than a CONSTITUTIONAL or Fourteenth Amendment “Citizen” or “citizen of the United States respectively born in and domiciled in states of the Union. We cover this in:

Why You are a “national”, “state national”, and Constitutional but not Statutory Citizen, Form #05.006

http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

Also, note that both of the two preceding definitions are found within Title 5 of the U.S. Code, which is entitled “Government Organization and Employees”. Therefore, it refers ONLY to government “employees” and excludes private employees. There is no definition of the term “individual” anywhere in Title 26 (I.R.C.) of the U.S. Code or any other title that refers to private natural humans, because Congress cannot legislative for them. Notice the use of the phrase “private business” in the U.S. Supreme Court ruling below:

"The individual may stand upon his constitutional rights as a citizen. He is entitled to carry on his private business in his own way [unregulated by the government]. His power to contract is unlimited. He owes no duty to the State or to his neighbor to divulge his business, or to open his doors to an investigation, so far as it may tend to criminate him. He owes no such duty to the State, since he receives nothing therefrom, beyond the protection of his life and property. His rights are such as existed by the law of the land long antecedent to the organization of the State, and can only be taken from him by due process of law, and in accordance with the Constitution. Among his rights are a refusal to incriminate himself, and the immunity of himself and his property from arrest or seizure except under a warrant of the law. He owes nothing to the public [including so-called “taxes” under Subtitle A of the I.R.C.] so long as he does not trespass upon their rights.

The purpose of the Constitution and the Bill of Rights instead is to REMOVE authority of the Congress to legislate for private persons and thereby protect their sovereignty and dignity. That is why the U.S. Supreme Court ruled the following:

"The makers of our Constitution undertook to secure conditions favorable to the pursuit of happiness. They recognized the significance of man's spiritual nature, of his feelings and of his intellect. They knew that only a part of the pain, pleasure and satisfactions of life are to be found in material things. They sought to protect Americans in their beliefs, their thoughts, their emotions and their sensations. They conferred, as against the Government, the right to be let alone - the most comprehensive of rights and the right most valued by civilized men."

QUESTIONS FOR DOUBTERS: If you aren’t a federal statutory “employee” as a person participating in Social Security and the Internal Revenue Code, then why are all of the Social Security Regulations located in Title 20 of the Code of Federal Regulations under parts 400-499, entitled “Employee Benefits”? See for yourself:

Below is the definition of “employee” for the purposes of the above:

26 C.F.R. §31.3401(c)-(1) Employee:

"...the term [employee] includes officers and employees, whether elected or appointed, of the United States, a [federal] State, Territory, Puerto Rico or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, or any agency or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing. The term 'employee' also includes an officer of a corporation."

26 U.S.C. §3401(c) Employee

For purposes of this chapter, the term "employee" includes [is limited to] an officer, employee, or elected official of the United States, a State, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, or any agency or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing. The term "employee" also includes an officer of a corporation.

Another very important point to make here is that the purpose of nearly all federal law is to regulate “public conduct” rather than “private conduct”. Congress must write laws to regulate and control every aspect of the behavior of its employees so that they do not adversely affect the rights of private individuals like you, who they exist exclusively to serve and protect. Most federal statutes, in fact, are exclusively for use by those working in government and simply do not apply to private citizens in the conduct of their private lives. This fact is exhaustively proven with evidence in:

Why Statutory Civil Law is Law for Government and Not Private Persons, Form #05.037
http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

Franchises of the National (not federal but national) government cannot apply to the private public at large because the Thirteenth Amendment says that involuntary servitude has been abolished. If involuntary servitude is abolished, then they can't use, or in this case “abuse” the authority of law to impose ANY kind of duty against anyone in this saying, namely, “You shall love your neighbor as yourself.”

For the commandments, “You shall not commit adultery,” “You shall not murder,” “You shall not steal,” “You shall not bear false witness,” “You shall not covet,” and if there is any other commandment, are all summed up in this saying, namely, “You shall love your neighbor as yourself.”

Love does no harm to a neighbor; therefore love is the fulfillment of [the ONLY requirement of] the law which is to avoid hurting your neighbor and thereby love him.
[Romans 13:9-10, Bible, NKJV]

“Do not strive with a man without cause, if he has done you no harm.”
[Prov. 3:30, Bible, NKJV]

Thomas Jefferson, our most revered founding father, summed up this singular duty of government to LEAVE PEOPLE ALONE and only interfere or impose a “duty” using the authority of law when and only when they are hurting each other in order to protect them and prevent the harm when he said:

“With all [our] blessings, what more is necessary to make us a happy and a prosperous people? Still one thing more, fellow citizens— a wise and frugal Government, which shall restrain men from injuring one another, shall leave them otherwise free to regulate their own pursuits of industry and improvement, and shall not take from the mouth of labor the bread it has earned. This is the sum of good government, and this is necessary to close the circle of our felicities.”
[Thomas Jefferson: 1st Inaugural, 1801. ME 3:320]

The U.S. Supreme Court confirmed this view, when it ruled:

[City of Boerne v. Flores, Archbishop of San Antonio, 521 U.S. 507 (1997)]
What the U.S. Supreme Court is saying above is that the government has no authority to tell you how to run your private life. This is contrary to the whole idea of the Internal Revenue Code, whose main purpose is to monitor and control every aspect of those who are subject to it. In fact, it has become the chief means for Congress to implement what we call “social engineering”. Just by the deductions they offer, people are incentivized into all kinds of crazy behaviors in pursuit of reductions in a liability that they in fact do not even have. Therefore, the only reasonable thing to conclude is that Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A which would “appear” to regulate the private conduct of all human beings in states of the Union, in fact:

1. Only applies to “public employees”, “public offices”, and federal instrumentalities in the official conduct of their duties on behalf of the municipal corporation located in the District of Columbia, which 4 U.S.C. §72 makes the “seat of government”.
2. Does not CREATE any new public offices or instrumentalities within the national government, but only regulates the exercise of EXISTING public offices lawfully created through Title 5 of the U.S. Code. The IRS abuses its forms to unlawfully CREATE public offices within the federal government. In payroll terminology, this is called “creating fictitious employees”, and it is not only quite common, but highly illegal and can get private workers FIRED on the spot if discovered.
3. Regulates PUBLIC and not PRIVATE conduct and therefore does not pertain to private human beings.
4. Constitutes a franchise and a “benefit” within the meaning of 5 U.S.C. §552a. Tax “refunds” and “deductions”, in fact, are the “benefit”, and 26 U.S.C. §162 says that all those who take deductions MUST, in fact, be engaged in a public office within the government, which is called a “trade or business”:

   TITLE 5 > PART I > CHAPTER 5 > SUBCHAPTER II > § 552a
   § 552a. Records maintained on individuals

   (a) Definitions.—For purposes of this section—

   (12) the term “Federal benefit program” means any program administered or funded by the Federal Government, or by any agent or State on behalf of the Federal Government, providing cash or in-kind assistance in the form of payments, grants, loans, or loan guarantees to individuals.

5. Has the job of concealing all the above facts in thousands of pages and hundreds of thousands of words so that the average American is not aware of it. That is why they call it the “code” instead of simply “law”: Because it is private law you have to volunteer for and an “encryption” and concealment device for the truth. Now we know why former Treasury Secretary Paul O’Neil called the Internal Revenue Code “9500 pages of gibberish” before he quit his job in disgust and went on a campaign to criticize government.

The I.R.C. therefore essentially amounts to a part of the job responsibility and the “employment contract” of EXISTING “public employees”, “public officers”, and federal instrumentalities. This was also confirmed by the House of Representatives, who said that only those who take an oath of “public office” are subject to the requirements of the personal income tax. See:

The total lack of authority of the government to regulate or tax private conduct explains why, for instance:

1. The vehicle code in your state cannot be enforced on PRIVATE property. It only applies on PUBLIC roads owned by the government
2. The family court in your state cannot regulate the exercise of unlicensed and therefore PRIVATE CONTRACT marriage. Marriage licenses are a franchise that make those applying into public officials. Family court is a franchise court and the equivalent of binding arbitration that only applies to fellow statutory government “employees”.
3. City conduct ordinances such as those prohibiting drinking by underage minors only apply to institutions who are licensed, and therefore PUBLIC institutions acting as public officers of the government.

Within the Internal Revenue Code, those legal “persons” who work for the government are identified as engaging in a “public office”. A “public office” within the Internal Revenue Code is called a “trade or business”, which is defined below. We emphasize that engaging in a privileged “trade or business” is the main excise taxable activity that in fact and in deed is what REALLY makes a person a “taxpayer” subject to the Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A:
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

Below is the definition of “public office”:

Public office

“Essential characteristics of a ‘public office’ are:

1. Authority conferred by law,
2. Fixed tenure of office, and
3. Power to exercise some of the sovereign functions of government.
4. Key element of such test is that ‘officer is carrying out a sovereign function’.
5. Essential elements to establish public position as ‘public office’ are:
   a. Position must be created by Constitution, legislature, or through authority conferred by legislature.
   b. Portion of sovereign power of government must be delegated to position,
   c. Duties and powers must be defined, directly or implied, by legislature or through legislative authority.
   d. Duties must be performed independently without control of superior power other than law, and
   e. Position must have some permanency.”

Those who are fulfilling the “functions of a public office” are under a legal, fiduciary duty as “trustees” of the “public trust”, while working as “volunteers” for the “charitable trust” called the “United States Government Corporation”, which we affectionately call “U.S. Inc.”:

“As expressed otherwise, the powers delegated to a public officer are held in trust for the people and are to be exercised in behalf of the government or of all citizens who may need the intervention of the officer. Furthermore, the view has been expressed that all public officers, within whatever branch and whatever level of government, and whatever be their private vocations, are trustees of the people, and accordingly labor under every disability and prohibition imposed by law upon trustees relative to the making of personal financial gain from a discharge of their trusts. That is, a public officer occupies a fiduciary relationship to the political entity on whose behalf he or she serves, and owes a fiduciary duty to the public. It has been said that the fiduciary responsibilities of a public officer cannot be less than those of a private individual. Furthermore, it has been stated that any enterprise undertaken by the public official which tends to weaken public confidence and undermine the sense of security for individual rights is against public policy.”

“U.S. Inc.” is a federal corporation, as defined below:

“Corporations are also of all grades, and made for varied objects: all governments are corporations, created by usage and common consent, or grants and charters which create a body politic for prescribed purposes; but whether they are private, local or general, in their objects, for the enjoyment of property, or the exercise of power, they are all governed by the same rules of law, as to the construction and the obligation of the instrument by which the incorporation is made. One universal rule of law protects persons and property. It is a fundamental principle of the common law of England, that the term freemen of the kingdom, includes all persons, ecclesiastical and temporal, incorporate, politic or natural; it is a part of their magna charta (2 Inst. 4), and is incorporated into our institutions. The persons of the members of corporations are on the same footing of protection as other persons, and their corporate property secured by the same laws which protect that of individuals. 2 Inst. 46-7. ’No man shall be taken,’ ’no man shall be disseised,’ without due process of law, is a principle taken from magna charta, infused into all our state constitutions, and is made inviolable by the federal government, by the amendments to the constitution.”

[Proprietors of Charles River Bridge v. Proprietors of Warren Bridge, 36 U.S. 420 (1837)]

Those who are acting as “public officers” for “U.S. Inc.” have essentially donated their formerly private property to a “public use”. In effect, they have joined the SOCIALIST collective and become partakers of money STOLEN from people, most of whom, do not wish to participate and who would quit if offered an informed choice to do so.

“My son, if sinners [socialists, in this case] entice you,

Do not consent [do not abuse your power of choice]
If they say, “Come with us,
Let us lie in wait to shed blood [of innocent "nontaxpayers"];
Let us lurk secretly for the innocent without cause;
Let us swallow them alive like Sheol,
And whole, like those who go down to the Pit:
We shall fill our houses with spoil [plunder];
Cast in your lot among us,
Let us all have one purse [share the stolen LOOT]”--

My son, do not walk in the way with them [do not ASSOCIATE with them and don’t let the government FORCE you to associate with them either by forcing you to become a "taxpayer"/government whore or a statutory "U.S. citizen"],
Keep your foot from their path;
For their feet run to evil,
And they make haste to shed blood.
Surely, in vain the net is spread
In the sight of any bird;
But they lie in wait for their own blood.
They lurk secretly for their own lives.
So are the ways of everyone who is greedy for gain [or unearned government benefits];
It takes away the life of its owners.”
[Proverbs 1:10-19, Bible, NKJV]

Below is what the U.S. Supreme Court says about those who have donated their private property to a “public use”. The ability to volunteer your private property for “public use”, by the way, also implies the ability to UNVOLUNTEER at any time, which is the part no government employee we have ever found was willing to talk about. I wonder why….DUHHHH!!:

"Men are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, 'life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness'; and to 'secure,' not grant or create, these rights, governments are instituted. That property [or income] which a man has honestly acquired he retains full control of, subject to these limitations: First, that he shall not use it to his neighbor's injury, and that does not mean that he must use it for his neighbor's benefit; second, that if he devotes it to a public use, he gives to the public a right to control that USE; and third, that whenever the public needs require, the public may take it upon payment of due compensation.
[Budd v. People of State of New York, 143 U.S. 517 (1892)]

The reason governments are created, according to the Declaration of Independence, is exclusively to protect PRIVATE rights.
The only thing MENTIONED in the Declaration, in fact, as the object of protection is HUMANS, not GOVERNMENTS.
Government did not CREATE these PRIVATE, UNALIENABLE rights and therefore, they do not OWN them. They can only tax or regulate that which the CREATE, and the place they do the creating is in the definition section of franchise agreements. See:
The VERY first step in protecting PRIVATE rights held exclusively by HUMANS is to prevent them from being converted to PUBLIC rights or franchises without the EXPRESS written VOLUNTARY consent of those who have the legal capacity to consent. Governments should not be using word games, equivocation, or other forms of legal treachery to compel the conversion from PRIVATE to PUBLIC. If you would like to know the legal boundaries for this separation between PRIVATE and PUBLIC and how it is illegally circumvented by covetous public servants, see:

Hierarchy of Sovereignty: The Power to Create is the Power to Tax, Family Guardian Fellowship
http://famguardian.org/Subjects/Taxes/Remedies/PowerToCreate.htm

Now some rules for how PUBLIC and PRIVATE must be kept separated or else the government has violated its fiduciary duty to protect PRIVATE property. These rules derive from the above document:

1. The PRIVATE constitutional rights of human beings are UNALIENABLE according to the Declaration of Independence.
   1.1. Hence, you aren’t even allowed to give them away, even WITH your consent.
   1.2. The only place that consent can lawfully be given is on federal territory where private or constitutional or unalienable rights DO NOT exist in the first place.
   1.3. The rights created by the consent can be enforced on federal territory not within a state of the Union. All law is prima facie territorial. That is why all public offices are REQUIRED by 4 U.S.C. §72 to be exercised IN the “District of Columbia” and "NOT elsewhere".
2. Statutory "persons" are PUBLIC fictions of law, agents, and/or offices created in civil statutes by government as a civil franchise. All civil franchises are contracts between the government grantor and the participant. Hence PRIVATE human beings whose rights are unalienable are UNABLE to consent to a franchise contract if standing on land protected by the Constitution and must do so on federal territory AT THE TIME consent is given.
3. A civil or statutory or legal "person", whether it be a natural person, a corporation, or a trust, may ADD to its duties or join specific franchises through consent. HOWEVER:
   3.1. Licensing and franchises may not be used to CREATE new public offices.
   3.2. If licensing or franchises are abused to create NEW public offices, then those who engage in said offices outside the place "expressly authorized" to do so by Congress are criminally impersonating a public officer in violation of 18 U.S.C. §912.
   3.3. A subset of those engaging in a “public office” are federal “employees”, but the term “public office” or “trade or business” encompass more than just government “employees”. Corporations, for instance, are public offices and instrumentalities of the government grantor.
4. In law, when a human being volunteers to accept the legal duties of a “public office”, it therefore becomes a “trustee”, an agent, and fiduciary (as defined in 26 U.S.C. §690) acting on behalf of the federal government by the operation of private contract/franchise law. It becomes essentially a “franchisee” of the federal government carrying out the provisions of the franchise agreement, which is found in:
   4.1. Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A, in the case of the federal income tax.
   4.2. The Social Security Act, in the case of the federal income tax.

Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

The IRS Form 1042-S Instructions confirm that all those who use Social Security Numbers are engaged in the “trade or business” franchise:

Box 14, Recipient’s U.S. Taxpayer Identification Number (TIN)

You must obtain and enter a U.S. taxpayer identification number (TIN) for:

- Any recipient whose income is effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business in the United States.

[IRS Form 1042-S Instructions, p. 14]

Engaging in a “trade or business” therefore implies a “public office”. All those who USE “Taxpayer Identification Numbers” are therefore treated, USUALLY ILLEGALLY IF THEY ARE OTHERWISE PRIVATE, as public officers in the national government. All property associated with the number then is treated effectively as “private property donated to a public use to procure the benefits of a government franchise”. At that point, the person in control of said property is treated as a de facto manager and trustee over public property created by that donation process. That public property includes his/her formerly private time and services. The “employment agreement” for managing this newly, and in most cases ILLEGALLY created public property is the Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A and the Social Security Act found in Title 42 of the U.S. Code.

The Social Security Number is therefore the equivalent of a “de facto license number” to act as a “public officer” for the federal government, who is a fiduciary or trustee subject to the plenary legislative jurisdiction of the federal government pursuant to 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(39), 26 U.S.C. §7408(c ), and Federal Rule of Civil Procedure Rule 17(b), regardless of where he might be found geographically, including within a state of the Union. The franchise agreement governs “choice of law” and where it’s terms may be litigated, which is the District of Columbia, based on the agreement itself.

The invisible process of essentially consenting to become a public officer of the national and not state government is a FRAUD because:

1. They don’t protect your right to NOT volunteer.
2. They refuse to prosecute the fraud once discovered and respond with silence to criminal complaints directed at stopping it. Remember: It is a maximum of law that such gross negligence is in essence and substance, FRAUD itself.
3. They don’t recognize even the EXISTENCE of a “non-resident non-person”, who is someone who DID NOT volunteer. To do so would mean a surrender of their “plausible deniability” in front of a legally ignorant jury.
4. They call those who insist that the withholdings and/or reportings associated with the fraudulently created public office “frivolous”, and yet refuse to address the content of this section or to address specifically how your property was LAWFULLY converted from PRIVATE to PUBLIC WITHOUT your consent. Even the taxation process requires, as a bare minimum, CONSENT to become a public officer.

Now let’s apply what we have learned to your employment situation. God said you cannot work for two companies at once. You can only serve one company, and that company is the federal government if you are receiving federal benefits:

“No one can serve two masters [two employers, for instance]: for either he will hate the one and love the other, or else he will be loyal to the one and despise the other. You cannot serve God and mammon [government].”

[Luke 16:13, Bible, NKJV. Written by a tax collector]

Everything you make while working for your slave master, the federal government, is their property over which you are a fiduciary and “public officer”.

“THE” + “IRS” = “THEIRS”

A federal “public officer” has no rights in relation to their master, the federal government:

“The restrictions that the Constitution places upon the government in its capacity as lawmaker, i.e., as the regulator of private conduct, are not the same as the restrictions that it places upon the government in its capacity as employer. We have recognized this in many contexts, with respect to many different constitutional guarantees. Private citizens perhaps cannot be prevented from wearing long hair, but policemen can. Kelley v. Johnson, 425 U.S. 238, 247 (1976). Private citizens cannot have their property searched without probable cause, but in many circumstances government employees can. O’Connor v. Ortega, 480 U.S. 709, 723 (1987) (plurality opinion); id., at 732 (SCALIA, J., concurring in judgment). Private citizens cannot be punished for refusing to provide the... government information that may incriminate them, but government employees can be dismissed when the incriminating information that they refuse to provide relates to the performance of their job. Gardner v.
Private citizens cannot be punished for speech of merely private concern, but government employees can be fired political activity, but federal and state employees can be dismissed and otherwise punished for that reason. Public Workers v. Mitchell, 330 U.S. 75, 101 (1947); Civil Service Comm’n v. Letter Carriers, 413 U.S. 548, 556 (1973); Broaderick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601, 616-617 (1973).”

Your existence and your earnings as a federal “public officer” and “trustee” and “fiduciary” are entirely subject to the whim and pleasure of corrupted lawyers and politicians, and you must beg and grovel if you expect to retain anything:

“In the general course of human nature, A POWER OVER A MAN’S SUBSISTENCE AMOUNTS TO A POWER OVER HIS WILL.”
[Alexander Hamilton, Federalist Paper No. 79]

You will need an “exemption” from your new slave master specifically spelled out in law to justify anything you want to keep while working on the federal plantation. The 1040 return is a profit and loss statement for a federal business corporation called the “United States”. You are in partnership with your slave master and they decide what scraps they want to throw to you in your legal “cage” AFTER they figure out whatever is left in financing their favorite pork barrel project and paying off interest on an ever-expanding and endless national debt. Do you really want to reward this type of irresponsibility and surety?

The W-4 therefore essentially is being deceptively and illegally MISUSED as a federal employment application. It is your badge of dishonor and a tacit admission that you can’t or won’t trust God and yourself to provide for yourself. Instead, you need a corrupted “protector” to steal money from your neighbor or counterfeit (print) it to help you pay your bills and run your life. Furthermore, if your private employer forced you to fill out the W-4 against your will or instituted any duress to get you to fill it out, such as threatening to fire or not hire you unless you fill it out, then he/she is:

1. Engaging in criminal identity theft. See: Government Identity Theft, Form #05.046
http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm
2. Acting as an employment recruiter for the federal government.
4. Involved in a conspiracy to commit grand theft by stealing money from you to pay for services and protection you don’t want and don’t need.
6. Involved in money laundering for the federal government, by sending in money stolen from you to them, in violation of

The higher ups at the IRS probably know the above, and they certainly aren’t going to tell private employers or their underlings the truth, because they aren’t going to look a gift horse in the mouth and don’t want to surrender their defense of “plausible deniability”. They will NEVER tell a thief who is stealing for them that they are stealing, especially if they don’t have to assume liability for the consequences of the theft. No one who practices this kind of slavery, deceit, and evil can rightly claim that they are loving their neighbor and once they know they are involved in such deceit, they have a duty to corrected it or become an “accessory after the fact” in violation of 18 U.S.C. §3. This form of deceit is also the sin most hated by God in the Bible. Below is a famous Bible commentary on Prov. 11:1:

‘As religion towards God is a branch of universal righteousness (he is not an honest man that is not devout), so righteousness towards men is a branch of true religion, for he is not a godly man that is not honest, nor can he expect that his devotion should be accepted; for, 1. Nothing is more offensive to God than deceit in commerce.
A false balance is here put for all manner of unjust and fraudulent practices [of our public dis-serve-ants] in dealing with any person [within the public], which are all an abomination to the Lord, and render those abominable [hated] to him that allow themselves in the use of such accursed arts of thriving. It is an affront to justice, which God is the patron of, as well as a wrong to our neighbour, whom God is the protector of. Men [in the IRS and the Congress] make light of such frauds, and think there is no sin in that which there is money to be got by, and, while it passes undiscovered, they cannot blame themselves for it; a blot is no blot till it is hit, Hos. 12:7; 8. But they are not the less an abomination to God, who will be the avenger of those that are defrauded by their brethren. 2. Nothing is more pleasing to God than fair and honest dealing, nor more necessary to make us and our devotions acceptable to him: A just weight is his delight. He himself goes by a just weight, and holds the scale of judgment with an even hand, and therefore is pleased with those that are herein followers of him. A balance cheats, under pretence of doing right most exactly, and therefore is the greater abomination to God.”

[Matthew Henry’s Commentary on the Whole Bible; Henry, M., 1996, c1991, under Prov. 11:1]

The Bible also says that those who participate in this kind of “commerce” with the government are practicing harlotry and idolatry. The Bible book of Revelation describes a woman called “Babylon the Great Harlot”.

“And I saw a woman sitting on a scarlet beast which was full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns. The woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet, and adorned with gold and precious stones and pearls, having in her hand a golden cup full of abominations and the filthiness of her fornication. And on her forehead a name was written:

Mystery, Babylon the Great, the Mother of Harlots and of the Abominations of the Earth.

I saw the woman, drunk with the blood of the saints and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus. And when I saw her, I marveled with great amazement.”

[Rev. 17:3-6, Bible, NKJV]

This despicable harlot is described below as the “woman who sits on many waters”.

“Come, I will show you the judgment of the great harlot [Babylon the Great Harlot] who sits on many waters, with whom the kings of the earth [politicians and rulers] committed fornication, and the inhabitants of the earth were made drunk [indulged] with the wine of her fornication.”

[Rev. 17:1-2, Bible, NKJV]

These waters are simply symbolic of a democracy controlled by mobs of atheistic people who are fornicating with the Beast and who have made it their false, man-made god and idol:

“The waters which you saw, where the harlot sits, are peoples, multitudes, nations, and tongues.”

[Rev. 17:15, Bible, NKJV]

The Beast is then defined in Rev. 19:19 as “the kings of the earth”, which today would be our political rulers:

“And I saw the beast, the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together to make war against Him who sat on the horse and against His army.”

[Rev. 19:19, Bible, NKJV]

Babylon the Great Harlot is “fornicating” with the government by engaging in commerce with it. Black’s Law Dictionary defines “commerce” as “intercourse”:

“Commerce... Intercourse by way of trade and traffic between different peoples or states and the citizens or inhabitants thereof, including not only the purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities, but also the instrumentalities [governments] and agencies by which it is promoted and the means and appliances by which it is carried on...”

If you want your rights back people, you can’t pursue government employment in the context of your private job. If you do, the Bible, not us, says you are a harlot and that you are CONDEMNED to hell!

“In summary, it ought to be very clear from reading this section then, that:

1. It is an abuse of the government’s taxing power, according to the U.S. Supreme Court, to pay public monies to private persons or to use the government’s taxing power to transfer wealth between groups of private individuals.
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

2. Because of these straight jacket constraints of the use of “public funds” by the government, the government can only lawfully make payments or pay “benefits” to persons who have contracted with them to render specific services that are authorized by the Constitution to be rendered.

3. The government had to create an intermediary called the “straw man” that is a public office or agent within the government and therefore part of the government that they could pay the “benefit” to in order to circumvent the restrictions upon the government from abusing its powers to transfer wealth between private individuals. That “straw man” is exhaustively described in:

- Proof That There Is a “Straw Man”, Form #05.042
  http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

4. The straw man is a “public office” within the U.S. government. It is a creation of Congress and an agent and fiduciary of the government subject to the statutory control of Congress. It is therefore a public entity and not a private entity which the government can therefore lawfully pay public funds to without abusing its taxing powers.

5. Those who sign up for government contracts, benefits, franchises, or employment agree to become surety for the straw man or public office and agree to act in a representative capacity on behalf of a federal corporation in the context of all the duties of the office pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 17(b).

6. Because the straw man is a public office, you can’t be compelled to occupy the office. You and not the government set the compensation or amount of money you are willing to work for in order to consensually occupy the office. If you don’t think the compensation is adequate, you have the right to refuse to occupy the office by refusing to connect your assets to the office using the de facto license number for the office called the Taxpayer Identification Number.

If you would like to know more about why Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A only applies to federal instrumentalities and payments to or from the federal government, we refer you to the free memorandum of law below:

5.2.8 Social Security: The legal vehicle for extending Federal Jurisdiction outside the federal zone using Private/contract law

In previous sections, we have demonstrated the proper very limited application of the Internal Revenue Code using the code itself and showing why its definitions are entirely consistent with the Separation of Powers Doctrine that is the foundation of the United States Constitution. See the link below for details on the Separation of Powers Doctrine:

- http://famguardian.org/Subjects/LawAndGovt/Articles/SeparationOfPowersDoctrine.htm

In this section, we will further expand these important legal concepts to show how the reach of the I.R.C. is extended outside the federal zone using the Social Security program, which is private law, and how this is done perfectly legally and constitutionally. The concepts in this section are very important and often go completely overlooked even by the most seasoned freedom researchers. So please read carefully.

We must always remember that there are TWO sources of jurisdiction: public law or private law. Public law is confined to the territory of the sovereign while private law may operate “extraterritorially” because it is a product of your right to contract. This is hinted at by Bouvier’s Maxims of Law, which say on this subject:

> “Debitum et contractus non sunt nullius loci.
  Debt and contract are of no particular place.”

[Bouvier’s Maxims of Law, 1856;
SOURCE: http://famguardian.org/Publications/BouvierMaximsOfLaw/BouviersMaxims.htm]

Congress sometimes enacts special law that is the equivalent of a “proposed private contract” that “activates” when we consent to its provisions. This type of an enactment is called a “special law” or a “private law”. Social Security and the Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A are examples of private law. For details, see:

- Requirement for Consent, Form #05.003
  http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm
A section of the code, such as the Internal Revenue Code or the Social Security Act, which is quoted in court can only be cited as “prima facie” evidence, according to 1 U.S.C. §204 and the legislative notes thereunder. “Prima facie” evidence is presumptive evidence. Below are some important limitations relating to the abuse of “presumption” in federal courts relating to income tax issues.

1. Based on the Supreme Court in Vlandis v. Kline, 412 U.S. 441 (1973), presumption that prejudices any constitutionally protected right is unconstitutional and may not be used in any court of law against a party protected by the Bill of Rights.
2. A “statutory presumption”, such as that found in 1 U.S.C. §204, relating to admission into evidence of anything that is not positive law, may only be used against a party who is not protected by the Bill of Rights.
3. Those domiciled inside the federal zone and who therefore are not parties to the Constitution, may not therefore exclude “prima facie” evidence or statutes that are not “positive law” from evidence. Such a person has no Constitutional rights that can be prejudiced. Therefore, he is not entitled to “due process of law”.
4. A person who is protected by the Constitution and the Bill of Rights should have the right to exclude “prima facie” evidence in his or her trial because it prejudices his or her constitutional rights.
5. A court which allows any statute from the Internal Revenue Code, Title 26, into evidence in any federal court in a trial involving a person who maintains a domicile in an area covered by the Constitution is:
   5.1. Engaging in kidnapping, by moving the domicile of the party to an area that has no rights, in violation of 18 U.S.C. §1201.

Based on the above, it is VERY important to know which codes within the U.S. Code are positive law and which are not. Those that are not “positive law” may not be cited in a trial involving a person domiciled in a state of the Union and not on federal property, because such a person is covered by the Bill of Rights. The U.S. Code provides a list of Titles of the U.S. Code that are not “positive law” within the legislative notes section of 1 U.S.C. §204. Among the titles of the U.S. Code that are NOT “positive law” include:

1. Title 26: Internal Revenue Code.
2. Title 42: Social Security
3. Title 50: The Military Selective Service Act (military draft)

Yes, folks, that’s right: Americans domiciled in states of the Union may not have any sections of the above titles of the U.S. Code cited in any trial involving them in a federal court, because it violates due process. They may also not have any ruling of a federal court below the Supreme Court cited as authority against them PROVIDED, HOWEVER that they:

1. Provide proof of their domicile within a state of the Union. See: Affidavit of Citizenship, Domicile, and Tax Status, Form #02.001
   http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm
3. Do not implicated themselves as statutory “taxpayers” by citing anything from the Internal Revenue code in their own pleading, which would be an indirect admission that they are subject to it. See: http://famguardian.org/Subjects/Taxes/Articles/TaxpayerVNontaxpayer.htm
4. Have not filled out and sign any government forms that create any employment or agency between them and the federal government, such as the W-4, 1040, or SSA Form SS-5.
5. Send in and admit into evidence the following:
   Resignation of Compelled Social Security Trustee, Form #06.002
   http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

The most prevalent occasion where the above requirements are violated with most Americans is applying for the Social Security program using the SSA Form SS-5. Completing, signing, and submitting that form creates an agency and employment with the federal government. The submitter becomes a Trustee and a federal “employee” under federal law, and therefore accepts federal jurisdiction from that point forward. We have written an exhaustive free pamphlet that analyzes all the reasons why this is the case, which may be found at:

Resignation of Compelled Social Security Trustee, Form #06.002
http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren't Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

The above pamphlet also serves the double capacity of an electronically fillable form you can send in to eliminate this one important source of federal jurisdiction and restore your sovereignty so that the Internal Revenue Code may not be cited as authority against you in a court of law.

The reason why signing up for Social Security creates a nexus for federal jurisdiction and a means to cite it against a person is that:

1. Signing up for Social Security makes one into a “Trustee”, agent, and fiduciary of the United States government under 26 U.S.C. §6903. The United States government is a foreign corporation with respect to a state of the Union, but it becomes a “domestic” corporation when you are acting as an “employee” and agent.

   [N.Y. v. re Merriam 36 N.E. 505; 141 N.Y. 479; affirmed 16 S.Ct. 1073; 41 L.Ed. 287] [underlines added]
   [19 Corpus Juris Secundum (C.J.S.), Corporations, 8884 (2003)]

2. The United States Government is defined as a “federal corporation” in 28 U.S.C. §3002(15)(A):

   TITLE 28 - JUDICARY AND JUDICIAL PROCEDURE
   PART VI - PARTICULAR PROCEEDINGS
   CHAPTER 176 - FEDERAL DEBT COLLECTION PROCEEDURE
   SUBCHAPTER A - DEFINITIONS AND GENERAL PROVISIONS
   Sec. 3002. Definitions

   (15) "United States" means -
   (A) a federal corporation;
   (B) an agency, department, commission, board, or other entity of the United States; or
   (C) an instrumentality of the United States.

3. The Trust you are acting as a Trustee for is an “employee” of the United States government within the meaning of the Internal Revenue Code under 26 C.F.R. §31.3401(c)-1.

4. You, when acting as a Trustee, are an “officer or employee” of a federal corporation called the “United States”.

5. The legal “domicile” of the Trust you are acting on behalf of is the “District of Columbia”. This is where the “res” or “corpus” of the Social Security Trust has its only legal existence as a “person”. See:

   http://famguardian.org/Subjects/Taxes/Articles/DomicileBasisForTaxation.htm

6. The Social Security Number is the “Trustee License Number”. Whenever you write your name anywhere on a piece of paper, and especially in conjunction with your all caps name, such as “JOHN SMITH”, you are indicating that you are acting in a Trustee capacity. The only way to remove such a presumption is to black out the number or not put it on the form, and then to correct whoever sent you the form or notice to clarify that you are not acting as a Trustee or government employee, but instead are acting as a natural person. See:

   http://sedm.org/Forms/05-MemLaw/AboutSSNsAndTINs.pdf

7. As an “officer or employee of a corporation”, you are the proper subject of the penalty and criminal provisions of the Internal Revenue Code under:

   7.1. 26 U.S.C. §6671(b)
   7.2. 26 U.S.C. §7343

8. The requirement to file federal income tax returns by the Social Security Trustee originates not from any liability statute, but from his or her status as a “public officer” and “trustee” of the government:

   I. DUTY TO ACCOUNT FOR PUBLIC FUNDS

   § 909. In general. “It is the duty of the public officer, like any other agent or trustee, although not declared by express statute, to faithfully account for and pay over to the proper authorities all moneys which may come into his hands upon the public account, and the performance of this duty may be enforced by proper actions against the officer himself, or against those who have become sureties for the faithful discharge of his duties.
   [Treatise on the Law of Public Offices and Officers, §909, Floyd Mechem, 1890, p. 609;
   SOURCE: http://books.google.com/books?id=g-fHAAAQAAJ&printsec=titlepage]

9. The Internal Revenue Code becomes enforceable against you without the need for implementing regulations. The following statutes say that implementing regulations published in the Federal Register are not required in the case of federal employees, agencies, or contractors:

   9.2. 5 U.S.C. §553(a)(2)
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

10. As a Trustee over the Social Security Trust, you are a “public officer” engaged in a “trade or business” as defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(26). Consequently, the earnings of the federal corporation you preside over as Trustee are taxable under the Internal Revenue Code. You are exercising the functions of a “public office” because you are exercising fiduciary duty over payments paid to the Federal Government. You are in business with Uncle Sam and essentially become a “Kelly Girl”. Income taxes are really just the “profits” of the Social Security trust created when you signed up for the program, which are “kicked back” to the mother corporation called the “United States”.

11. All items that you take deductions on under 26 U.S.C. §162, earned income credit under 26 U.S.C. §32, or a graduated rate of tax under 26 U.S.C. §1 become “effectively connected with a trade or business”, which is a code word for saying that they are public property, because a “trade or business” is a “public office”. This “trade or business” then becomes a means of earning you “revenue” or “profit” as a private individual, because it serves to reduce your tax liability as a Trustee filing 1040 returns for the Social Security Trust. What the government won’t tell you, however, is that the best way to reduce your federal tax liability is simply to either not sign up for Social Security to begin with, or to quit immediately, nor are they going to show you how to quit! See the following article for more details on “The trade or business scam” for further details: http://famguardian.org/Subjects/Taxes/Articles/TradeOrBusinessScam.htm

12. Below is what the Supreme Court said about all property you donated for “public use” by the Trust in acquiring reduced tax liability:

   “Surely the matters in which the public has the most interest are the supplies of food and clothing; yet can it be that by reason of this interest the state may fix the price at which the butcher must sell his meat, or the vendor of boots and shoes his goods? Men are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, -life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; and to 'secure,' not grant or create, these rights, governments are instituted. That property which a man has honestly acquired he retains full control of, subject to these limitations: First, that he shall not use it to his neighbor's injury, and that does not mean that he must use it for his neighbor's benefit; second, that if he devotes it to a public use, he gives to the public a right to control that use; and third, that whenever the public needs require, the public may take it upon payment of due compensation. [Build v. People of State of New York, 143 U.S. 517 (1892)]

Therefore, whatever you take deductions on comes under the jurisdiction of the Internal Revenue Code, which is the vehicle by which the “public” controls the use of your formerly private property. Every benefit has a string attached, and in this case, the string is that you as Trustee, and all property you donate for temporary use by the Trust then comes under the jurisdiction of the Internal Revenue Code and the Social Security Act.

13. Your Trust employer, the “United States” foreign corporation, is your new boss and the beneficiary of the Social Security Trust you work for as an officer. As your new boss, it does not need territorial jurisdiction over you. All it needs is “in rem” jurisdiction over the property you donated to the trust, which includes all your earnings. That jurisdiction derives from Article 4, Section 3, Clause 2 of the Constitution. All this property, while it is donated to a public use, becomes federal property under government management. That is why the Slave Surveillance Number is assigned to all accounts: to track government property, contracts, employees.

14. Because the property already is government property while you are using it in connection with a “trade or business”, then you implicitly have already given the government permission to repossess that which always was theirs. That is why they can issue a “Notice of Levy” without any judicial process and immediately and conveniently take custody of your bank accounts, personal property, and retirement funds: Because they have the mark of the Beast, the Slave Surveillance Number on them, which means you already gave them to your new benefactor and caretaker, the United States Government.

15. The United States Government does not need territorial jurisdiction over you in order to drag you into federal court while you are acting as one of its Trustees and fiduciaries under 26 U.S.C. §6903. Any matter relating to federal contracts, whether they are federal government franchises, Trust Contracts or federal employment contracts (with the “Trustee”), may ONLY be heard in a federal court. It is a violation of the separation of powers doctrine for a state to hear a matter which might affect the federal government. See Alden v. Maine, 527 U.S. 706 (1999). Federal Jurisdiction over Trustees is indeed “subject matter jurisdiction”, but it doesn’t derive primarily from the Internal Revenue Code. Instead it derives from the agency and contract you maintain as a “Trustee”:

   American Jurisprudence, 2d
   United States
   § 42 Interest on claim [77 Am Jur 2d UNITED STATES]

   The interest to be recovered as damages for the delayed payment of a contractual obligation to the United States is not controlled by state statute or local common law. 75 In the absence of an applicable federal statute, the
16. The U.S. Supreme Court has always given wide latitude to the Legislative and Executive branches of the government to manage their own “employees” and officers, which includes both its Social Security Trusts and the Trustees who are exercising agency over the Trust and its corpus or property. You better bow down and worship your new boss: Uncle Sam!

A few authorities supporting why the Federal Government may not cite federal statutes or caselaw against those who are not its employees or contractors follows:

1. Federal courts are administrative courts which have jurisdiction only over the following:
   1.1. Plenary/General jurisdiction over federal territory: Implemented primarily through “public law” and applies generally to all persons and things. This is a requirement of “equal protection” found in 42 U.S.C. §1981. Operates upon:
      1.1.1. The District of Columbia under Article 1, Section 8, Clause 17 of the U.S. Constitution.
      1.1.2. Federal territories and possessions under Article 4, Section 3, Clause 3 of the U.S. Constitution.
      1.1.3. Special maritime jurisdiction (admiralty) in territorial waters under the exclusive jurisdiction of the general/federal government.
      1.1.4. Federal areas within states of the Union ceded to the federal government. Federal judicial districts consist entirely of the federal territory within the exterior boundaries of the district, and do not encompass land not ceded to the federal government as required by 40 U.S.C. §3112. See section 6.4 of the Tax Fraud Prevention Manual, Form #06.008 et seq for further details.
   1.2. Subject matter jurisdiction:
      1.2.1. “Public laws” which operate throughout the states of the Union upon the following subjects:
         1.2.1.1. Postal fraud. See Article 1, Section 8, Clause 7 of the U.S. Constitution...
         1.2.1.2. Counterfeiting under Article 1, Section 8, Clause 6 of the U.S. Constitution.
         1.2.1.3. Treason under Article 4, Section 2, Clause 3 of the U.S. Constitution.
         1.2.1.4. Interstate commercial crimes under Article 1, Section 8, Clause 3 of the U.S. Constitution.

1.2.2. “Private law” or “special law” pursuant to Article 4, Section 3, Clause 2 of the U.S. Constitution. Applies only to persons and things who individually consent through private agreement or contract. Note that this jurisdiction also includes contracts with states of the Union and private individuals in those states. Includes, but is not limited exclusively to the following:
   1.2.2.1. Federal franchises.
   1.2.2.2. Federal employees, as described in Title 5 of the U.S. Code.
   1.2.2.3. Federal contracts and “public offices”.
   1.2.2.4. Federal chattel property.
   1.2.2.5. Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A.

3. Internal Revenue Manual (I.R.M.), Section 4.10.7.2.9.8 says that the IRS cannot cite rulings below the Supreme Court to apply to more than the specific person who litigated:

Internal Revenue Manual
4.10.7.2.9.8 (05-14-1999)
Importance of Court Decisions
1. Decisions made at various levels of the court system are considered to be interpretations of tax laws and may be used by either examiners or taxpayers to support a position.

2. Certain court cases lend more weight to a position than others. A case decided by the U.S. Supreme Court becomes the law of the land and takes precedence over decisions of lower courts. The Internal Revenue Service must follow Supreme Court decisions. For examiners, Supreme Court decisions have the same weight as the Code.

3. Decisions made by lower courts, such as Tax Court, District Courts, or Claims Court, are binding on the Service only for the particular taxpayer and the years litigated. Adverse decisions of lower courts do not require the Service to alter its position for other taxpayers.

4. There is no federal common law within states of the Union, according to the Supreme Court in Erie Railroad v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64 (1938). Consequently, the rulings of federal district and circuit courts have no relevancy to state citizens domiciled in states of the Union who do not declare themselves to be “U.S. citizens” under 8 U.S.C. §1401 and who would litigate under diversity of citizenship, pursuant to Article III, Section 2 of the Constitution but NOT 28 U.S.C. §1332.

   "There is no Federal Common Law, and Congress has no power to declare substantive rules of Common Law applicable in a state. Whether they be local or general in their nature, be they commercial law or a part of the Law of Torts"
   Erie Railroad v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64 (1938)

"Common law. As distinguished from statutory law created by the enactment of legislatures, the common law comprises the body of those principles and rules of action, relating to the government and security of persons and property, which derive their authority solely from usages and customs of immemorial antiquity, or from the judgments and decrees of the courts recognizing, affirming, and enforcing such usages and customs and, in this sense, particularly the ancient unwritten law of England. In general, it is a body of law that develops and derives through judicial decisions, as distinguished from legislative enactments. The 'common law' is all the statutory and case law background of England and the American colonies before the American revolution. People v. Rehman, 253 C.A.2d 119, 61 Cal.Rptr. 65, 85. It consists of those principles, usage and rules of action applicable to government and security of persons and property which do not rest for their authority upon any express and positive declaration of the will of the legislature. Bishop v. U.S., D.C.Tex., 334 F.Supp. 415, 418.

   "California Civil Code, Section 22.2, provides that the "common law of England, so far as it is not repugnant to or inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States, or the Constitution or laws of this State, is the rule of decision in all the courts of this State."

   "In a broad sense, "common law" may designate all that part of the positive law, juristic theory, and ancient custom of any state or nation which is of general and universal application, thus marking off special or local rules or customs.

   "For federal common law, see that title.

   "As a compound adjective "common-law" is understood as contrasted with or opposed to "statutory," and sometimes also to "equitable" or to "criminal."
   Black’s Law Dictionary, Sixth Edition, p. 276

5. The Rules of Decision Act, 28 U.S.C. §1652, requires that the laws of the states of the Union are the only rules of decision in federal courts. This means that federal courts MUST cite state law and not federal law in all tax cases and MAY NOT cite federal caselaw.

6. The Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 17(b) say that the capacity to sue or be sued is determined by the law of the individual’s domicile. This means that if a person is domiciled in a state and not within an enclave, then state law are the rules of decision rather than federal law. Since state income tax liability in nearly every state is dependent on a federal liability first, this makes an income tax liability impossible for those domiciled outside the federal.

   Therefore, the private citizen who has:

1. Provided proof of their domicile within a state of the Union. See: Affidavit of Citizenship, Domicile, and Tax Status

Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

3. Not implicated themselves as “taxpayers” by citing anything from the Internal Revenue code in their own pleading, which would be an indirect admission that they are subject to it. See: http://famguardian.org/Subjects/Taxes/Articles/TaxpayerVNontaxpayer.htm

4. Not filled out and sign any government forms that create any employment or agency between them and the federal government, such as the W-4, 1040, or SSA Form SS-5.

. . . is unconditionally Sovereign and may not lawfully be dragged into a federal court for an income tax matter or any other federal employment or contract or civil matter. All parties wishing to litigate against them must instead do so in a state, not federal court. The federal courts may not therefore be used to destroy or undermine their sovereignty without violating the Constitution and the separation of powers doctrine. Below is the reason why, in the context of States of the Union, but the justification is equally pertinent to the people they were created to serve and protect, at least in the context of their own right to self-governance and self-determination:

Although the Constitution grants broad powers to Congress, our federalism requires that Congress treat the States in a manner consistent with their status as residuary sovereigns and joint participants in the governance of the Nation. See, e.g., United States v. Lopez, 514 U. S., at 583 (concurring opinion); Printz, 521 U. S., at 935; New York, 505 U. S., at 188. The founding generation thought it “neither becoming nor convenient that the several States of the Union, invested with that large residuum of sovereignty which had not been delegated to the United States, should be summoned as defendants to answer the complaints of private persons.” In re Ayers, 123 U.S., at 517. The principle of sovereign immunity preserved by constitutional design “thus accords the States the respect owed them as members of the federation.” Puerto Rico Aqueduct and Sewer Authority, 506 U. S., at 146; accord, Coeur d’Alene Tribe, supra, at 268 (recognizing “the dignity and respect accorded a State, which the immunity is designed to protect”).

Petitioners contend that immunity from suit in federal court suffices to preserve the dignity of the States. Private suits against nonconsenting States, however, present “the indignity of subjecting a State to the coercive process of judicial tribunals at the instance of private parties,” In re Ayers, supra, at 505; accord, Seminole Tribe, 517 U. S., at 517, regardless of the forum. Not only must a State defend or default but also it must face the prospect of being thrust, by federal fiat and against its will, into the disfavored status of a debtor, subject to the power of private citizens to levy on its treasury or perhaps even government buildings or property which the State administers on the public’s behalf.

In some ways, of course, a congressional power to authorize private suits against nonconsenting States in their own courts would be even more offensive to state sovereignty than a power to authorize the suits in a federal forum. Although the immunity of one sovereign in the courts of another has often depended in part on comity or agreement, the immunity of a sovereign in its own courts has always been understood to be within the sole control of the sovereign itself. See generally Hull, 440 U. S., at 414, 418. A power to press a State’s own courts into federal service to coerce the other branches of the State, furthermore, is the power first to turn the State against itself and ultimately to commandeer the entire political machinery of the State against its will and at the behest of individuals. Cf. Coeur d’Alene Tribe, supra, at 276. Such plenary federal control of state governmental processes denigrates the separate sovereignty of the States.

It is unquestioned that the Federal Government retains its own immunity from suit not only in state tribunals but also in its own courts. In light of our constitutional system recognizing the essential sovereignty of the States, we are reluctant to conclude that the States are not entitled to a reciprocal privilege.

Underlying constitutional form are considerations of great substance. Private suits against nonconsenting States—especially suits for money damages—may threaten the financial integrity of the States. It is indisputable that, at the time of the founding, many of the States could have been forced into insolvency but for their immunity from private suits for money damages. Even today, an unlimited congressional power to authorize suits in state court to levy upon the treasuries of the States for compensatory damages, attorney’s fees, and even punitive damages could create staggering burdens, giving Congress a power and a leverage over the States that is not contemplated by our constitutional design. The potential national power would pose a severe and notorious danger to the States and their resources.

A congressional power to strip the States of their immunity from private suits in their own courts would pose more subtle risks as well. “The principle of immunity from litigation assures the states and the nation from unanticipated intervention in the processes of government,” Great Northern Life Ins. Co. v. Read, 322 U. S., at 53. “When the States’ immunity from private suits is disregarded, “the course of their public policy and the administration of their public affairs” may become “subject to and controlled by the mandates of judicial tribunals without their consent, and in favor of individual interests.” In re Ayers, supra, at 505. While the States have relinquished their immunity from suit in some special contexts—at least as a practical matter—see Part III, infra, this surrender carries with it substantial costs to the autonomy, the decisionmaking ability, and the sovereign capacity of the States.

A general federal power to authorize private suits for money damages would place unwarranted strain on the States' ability to govern in accordance with the will of their citizens. Today, as at the time of the founding, the allocation of scarce resources among competing needs and interests lies at the heart of the political process.
While the judgment creditor of the State may have a legitimate claim for compensation, other important needs and worthwhile ends compete for access to the public fisc. Since all cannot be satisfied in full, it is inevitable that difficult decisions involving the most sensitive and political of judgments must be made. If the principle of representative government is to be preserved to the States, the balance between competing interests must be reached after deliberation by the political process established by the citizens of the State, not by judicial decree mandated by the Federal Government and invoked by the private citizen. "It needs no argument to show that the political power cannot be thus ousted of its jurisdiction and the judiciary set in its place."

By "splitting the atom of sovereignty," the founders established "two orders of government, each with its own direct relationship, its own privity, its own set of mutual rights and obligations to the people who sustain it and are governed by it." Suen v. Roe, 526 U.S. ___ (1999), quoting U.S. Term Limits, Inc. v. government will represent and remain accountable [only] to its own citizens [and not to the federal government]."
Printz, 523 U.S. at 920. When the Federal Government asserts authority over a State's most fundamental political processes, it strikes at the heart of the political accountability so essential to our liberty and republican form of government.

The asserted authority would blur not only the distinct responsibilities of the State and National Governments but also the separate duties of the judicial and political branches of the state governments, displacing "state decisions entitled to order the processes of its own governance, assigning to the political branches, rather than the courts, the responsibility for directing the payment of debts. See id., at 460 ("Through the structure of its government, and the character of those who exercise government authority, a State defines itself as a sovereign"). If Congress could displace a State's allocation of governmental power and responsibility, the judicial branch of the State, whose legitimacy derives from fidelity to the law, would be compelled to assume a role not only foreign to its experience but beyond its competence as defined by the very constitution from which its existence derives.

Congress cannot abrogate the States' sovereign immunity in federal court; were the rule to be different here, the National Government would wield greater power in the state courts than in its own judicial instrumentalities. Cf.
Howlett, 496 U.S., at 365 (noting the anomaly that would arise if "a State might be forced to entertain in its own courts suits from which it was immune in federal court"); Hilton, 502 U.S., at 206 (recognizing the "federalismrelated concerns that arise when the National Government uses the state courts as the exclusive forum to permit recovery under a congressional statute").

[Alden v. Maine, 527 U.S. 706 (1999)]

Furthermore, any government representative, and especially who is from the Dept. of Justice or the IRS, who cites a case below the Supreme Court or any section from the Internal Revenue Code or Title 42 of the U.S. Code in the case of a person who is a “national” but not a “citizen” under federal law, who maintains a domicile in a state of the Union and not within federal jurisdiction, and who is not a “Trustee” or federal “employee” or contractor, is:

1. Abusing caselaw for political purposes, usually with willful intent to deceive the hearer.
2. Violating Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 17(b), which establishes that the only law and case law that may be cited in any federal civil trial is the law that derives from the domicile of the party

Federal courts, incidentally, are NOT allowed to involve themselves in such “political questions”, and therefore should not allow this type of abuse of caselaw, but judges with a conflict of interest and who are fond of increasing their retirement benefits often will acquiesce if you don’t call them on it as an informed American. This kind of bias on the part of federal judges, incidentally, is highly illegal under 28 U.S.C. §144 and 28 U.S.C. §455. Below is what the Supreme Court said about the authority of itself, and by implication all other federal courts, to involve itself in strictly political matters:

"But, fortunately for our freedom from political excitements in judicial duties, this court [the U.S. Supreme Court] can never with propriety be called on officially to be the umpire in questions merely political. The adjustment of these questions belongs to the people and their political representatives, either in the State or general government. These questions relate to matters not to be settled on strict legal principles, They are adjusted rather by inclination, or prejudice or compromise, often.

Another evil, alarming and little foreseen, involved in regarding these as questions for the final arbitrament of judges would be that, in such an event, all political privileges and rights would, in a dispute among the people, depend on our decision finally. We would possess the power to decide against, as well as for, them, and, under a prejudiced or arbitrary judiciary, the public liberties and popular privileges might thus be much perverted, if not entirely prostrated. But, allowing the people to make constitutions and unmake them, allowing their representatives to make laws and unmake them, and without our interference as to their principles or policy in doing it, yet, when constitutions and laws are made and put in force by others, then the courts, as empowered by the State or the Union, commence their functions and may decide on the rights which conflicting parties can legally set up under them, rather than about their formation itself. Our power begins after theirs [the Sovereign People] ends. Constitutions and laws precede the judiciary, and we act only under and after them, and as to disputed rights beneath them, rather than disputed points in making them. We speak what is the law, jus dicere, we speak or construe what is the constitution, after both are made, but we make, or revise, or control neither. The disputed rights beneath constitutions already made are to be governed by precedents, by sound legal principles, by positive legislation (e.g., "positive law"); clear contracts, moral duties, and fixed rules; they are par se questions of law, and are well suited to the education and habits of the bench, but the other disputed points in making constitutions, depending often, as before shown, on policy, inclination, popular resolves and popular will and arising not in respect to private rights, not what is meum and tuum, but in relation to politics, they belong to politics, and they are settled by political tribunals, and are too dear to a people bred in the school of Sydney and Russel for them ever to intrust their final decision, when disputed, to a class of men who are so far removed from them as the judiciary, a class also who might decide them erroneously, as well as right, and if in the former way, the consequences might not be able to be averted except by a revolution, while a wrong decision by a political forum can often be peacefully corrected by new elections or instructions in a single month; and if the people, in the distribution of powers under the constitution, should ever think of making judges supreme arbiters in political controversies when not selected by nor, frequently, amenable to them nor at liberty to follow such various considerations in their judgments as [48 U.S. 53] belong to mere political questions, they will dethrone themselves and lose one of their own invaluable birthrights: building up in this way — slowly, but surely — a new sovereign power in the republic, in most respects irresponsible and unchangeable for life, and one more dangerous, in theory at least, than the worst elective oligarchy in the worst of times. Again, instead of controlling the people in political affairs, the judiciary in our system was designed rather to control individuals, on the one hand, when encroaching, or to defend them, on the other, under the Constitution and the laws, when they are encroached upon. And if the judiciary at times seems to fill the important station of a check in the government, it is rather a check on the legislature, who may attempt to pass laws contrary to the Constitution, or on the executive, who may violate both the laws and Constitution, than on the people themselves in their primary capacity as makers and amenders of constitutions.”

[Luther v. Borden, 48 U.S. 1 (1849)]

We know that the content of this section may appear strange at first reading, but after you have gone back and read the Resignation of Compelled Social Security Trustee document, there is simply no other logical conclusion that a person can reach based on the overwhelming evidence presented there that so clearly describes how the Social Security program operates from a legal perspective.

A number of tax honesty advocates will attempt to cite 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) and (a)(10) as proof that federal jurisdiction does not extend outside the District of Columbia for the purposes of the Internal Revenue Code.

[TITLE 26 > Subtitle F > CHAPTER 79 > Sec. 7701. [Internal Revenue Code]]

(a) When used in this title, where not otherwise distinctly expressed or manifestly incompatible with the intent thereof—

(9) United States

The term “United States” when used in a geographical sense includes only the States and the District of Columbia.

(10) State

The term “State” shall be construed to include the District of Columbia, where such construction is necessary to carry out provisions of this title.

Federal district and circuit courts have been known to label such arguments based on these definitions in the Internal Revenue Code as “frivolous”. Their reasons for doing so have never been completely or truthfully revealed anywhere but here, to the best of our knowledge. Now that we know how the government ropes sovereign Americans into their jurisdiction based on the analysis in this section, we also know that it is indeed “frivolous” to state that federal jurisdiction does not extend outside the District of Columbia in the case of those who are “Trustees” or federal “employees” or federal contractors, such as those who participate in Social Security. Since we know that the legal domicile of the Trust is indeed the District of Columbia, we also know that anyone who litigates in a federal court and does not deny all of the following will essentially be presumed to be a federal “employee” and Trustee acting on behalf of the Social Security Trust:

1. The all caps name in association with him. His proper name is the lower case Christian Name. The all caps name is the name of the Social Security Trust that was created when you completed and submitted the SSA Form SS-5 to sign up for Social Security.

2. The Trustee license number called the Social Security Number associated with him. If you admit the number is yours, then you admit that you are acting as a Social Security Trustee. Only trustees can use the license number. Instead, all uses must be identified as compelled. Responsibility for a compelled act falls on the person instituting the compulsion, and not the actor. See:

   Why It is Illegal for Me to Request or Use a “Taxpayer Identification Number”. Form #04.205
   http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

3. The receipt of income connected to a “trade or business” on form 1099’s. All earnings identified on a 1099 are “presumed” to be “effectively connected with a trade or business”, which is a “public office” in the United States government as a “Trustee” and fiduciary over federal payments.

4. The receipt of “wage” income in connection with a W-4. Receipt of “wages” are evidence from 26 C.F.R. §31.3401(a)-3(a) that you consented to withhold and participate in Social Security.

5. The existence of consent in signing the SSA Form SS-5. The Trust contract created by this form cannot be lawful so long as it was either signed without your consent or was signed for you by your parents without your informed consent.

A very good way to fulfill all of the above is to avoid filling out government forms and when compelled to do so, to attach the following form:

5.2.9 Oaths of Allegiance: Source of Unjust government jurisdiction over people

   “But above all, my brethren, do not swear, either by heaven or by earth or with any other oath. But let your "Yes" be "Yes," and your "No," "No," lest you fall into judgment."

In all of history there has been but one successful protest against an income tax. It is little understood in that light, primarily because the remnants of protest groups still exist, but no longer wish to appear to be "anti-government." They don't talk much about these roots. Few even know them. We need to go back in time about 400 years to find this success. It succeeded only because the term "jurisdiction" was still well understood at that time as meaning "oath spoken." "Juris," in the original Latin meaning, is "oath." "Diction" as everyone knows, means "spoken." The protest obviously didn't happen here. It occurred in England. Given that the origins of our law are traced there, most of the relevant facts in this matter are still applicable in this country. Here's what happened.

The Bible had just recently been put into print. To that time, only the churches and nobility owned copies, due to the extremely high cost of paper. Contrary to what you've been taught, it was not the invention of movable type that led to printing this and other books. That concept had been around for a very long time. It just had no application. Printing wastes some paper. Until paper prices fell, it was cheaper to write books by hand than to print them with movable type. The handwritten versions were outrageously costly, procurable only by those with extreme wealth: churches, crowns and the nobility. The wealth of the nobility was attributable to feudalism. "Feud" is Old English for "oath." The nobility held the land under the crown. But unimproved land, itself, save to hunter/gatherers, is rather useless. Land is useful to farming. So that's how the nobility made their wealth. No, they didn't push a plow. They had servants to do it. The nobility wouldn't sell their land, nor would they lease it. They rented it.

Ever paid rent without a lease? Then you know that if the landlord raised the rent, you had no legal recourse. You could move out or pay. But what if you couldn't have moved out? Then you'd have a feel for what feudalism was all about.

A tenant wasn't a freeman. He was a servant to the (land)lord, the noble. In order to have access to the land to farm it, the noble required that the tenant kneel before him, hat in hand, swear an oath of fealty and allegiance and kiss his ring (extending that oath in that last act to the heirs of his estate). That oath established a servitude. The tenant then put his plow to the fields. The rent was a variable. In good growing years it was very high, in bad years it fell. The tenant was a subsistence farmer, keeping only enough of the produce of his labors to just sustain him and his family. Rent was actually an "income tax." The nobleman could have demanded 100% of the productivity of his servant except . . . under the common law, a servant was akin to livestock. He had to be fed. Not well fed, just fed, same as a horse or cow. And, like a horse or cow, one usually finds it to his benefit to keep it fed, that so that the critter is productive. Thus, the tenant was allowed to keep some of his own productivity. Liken it to a "personal and dependent deductions."

The freemen of the realm, primarily the tradesmen, were unsworn and unallieged. They knew it. They taught their sons the trade so they'd also be free when grown. Occasionally they took on an apprentice under a sworn contract of indenture from his father. His parents made a few coins. But the kid was the biggest beneficiary. He'd learn a trade. He'd never need to become a tenant farmer. He'd keep what he earned. He was only apprenticed for a term of years, most typically about seven. The tradesmen didn't need adolescents; they needed someone strong enough to pull his own weight. They did not take on anyone under 13. By age 21 he'd have learned enough to practice the craft. That's when the contract expired. He was then called a "journeyman." Had he made a journey? No. But, if you pronounce that word, it is "Jur-nee-man." He was a "man," formerly ("nee"), bound by oath ("jur").

He'd then go to work for a "master" (craftsman). The pay was established, but he could ask for more if he felt he was worth more. And he was free to quit. Pretty normal, eh? Yes, in this society that's quite the norm.

But 400 some years ago these men were the exceptions, not the rule. At some point, if the journeyman was good at the trade, he'd be recognized by the market as a "master" (craftsman) and people would be begging him to take their children as apprentices, so they might learn from him, become journeymen, and keep what they earned when manumitted at age 21! The oath of the tenant ran for life. The oath of the apprentice's father ran only for a term of years. Still, oaths were important on both sides. In fact, the tradesmen at one point established guilds (means "gold") as a protection against the potential of the government attempting to bind them into servitudes by compelled oaths.

When an apprentice became a journeyman, he was allowed a membership in the guild only by swearing a secret oath to the guild. He literally swore to "serve gold." Only gold. He swore he'd only work for pay! Once so sworn, any other oath of servitude would be a perjury of that oath. He bound himself for life to never be a servant, save to the very benevolent master: gold! (Incidentally, the Order of Free and Accepted Masons is a remnant of one of these guilds. Their oath is a secret. They'd love to have you think that the "G" in the middle of their logo stands for "God." The obvious truth is that it stands for "GOLD").

Then the Bible came to print. The market for this tome wasn't the wealthy. They already had a handwritten copy. Nor was it the tenants. They were far too poor to make this purchase. The market was the tradesmen - and the book was still so costly that it took the combined life savings of siblings to buy a family Bible. The other reason that the tradesmen were the market was that they'd also been taught how to read as part of their apprenticeship. As contractors they had to know how to do that! Other than the families of the super-rich (and the priests) nobody else knew how to read.

These men were blown away when they read Jesus' command against swearing oaths (Matt 5: 33-37). This was news to them. For well over a millennia they'd been trusting that the church - originally just the Church of Rome, but now also the Church of England - had been telling them everything they needed to know in that book. Then they found out that Jesus said, "Swear no oaths." Talk about an eye-opener.

Imagine seeing a conspiracy revealed that went back over 1,000 years. Without oaths there'd have been no tenants, laboring for the nobility, and receiving mere subsistence in return. The whole society was premised on oaths; the whole society claimed it was Christian, yet, it violated a very simple command of Christ! And the tradesmen had done it, too, by demanding sworn contracts of indenture for apprentices and giving their own oaths to the guilds. They had no way of knowing that was prohibited by Jesus! They were angry. "Livid" might be a better term. The governments had seen this coming. What could they do? Ban the book? The printing would have simply moved underground and the millennia long conspiracy would be further evidenced in that banning. They came up with a better scheme. You call it the "Reformation."

In an unprecedented display of unanimity, the governments of Europe adopted a treaty. This treaty would allow anyone the State-right of founding a church. It was considered a State right, there and then. The church would be granted a charter. It only had to do one very simple thing to obtain that charter. It had to assent to the terms of the treaty. Buried in those provisions, most of which were totally innocuous, was a statement that the church would never oppose the swearing of lawful oaths. Jesus said, "None." The churches all said (and still say), "None, except . . ." Who do you think was (is) right?
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

The tradesmen got even angrier! They had already left the Church of England. But with every new “reformed” church still opposing the clear words of Christ, there was no church for them to join - or found. They exercised the right of assembly to discuss the Bible. Some of them preached it on the street corners, using their right of freedom of speech. But they couldn’t establish a church, which followed Jesus’ words, for that would have required assent to that treaty which opposed what Jesus had commanded. To show their absolute displeasure with those who’d kept this secret for so long, they refused to give anyone in church or state any respect. It was the custom to doff one’s hat when he encountered a priest or official. They started wearing big, ugly black hats, just so that the most myopic of these claimed “superiors” wouldn’t miss the fact that the hat stayed atop their head. Back then the term “you” was formal English, reserved for use when speaking to a superior. “Thee” was the familiar pronoun, used among family and friends. So they called these officials only by the familiar pronoun “thee” or by their Christian names, “George, Peter, Robert, etc.” We call these folk “Quakers.” That was a nickname given to them by a judge. One of them had told the judge that he’d better “Quake before the Lord, God almighty.” The judge, in a display of irreverent disrespect replied, “Thee are the Quaker here.” They found that pretty funny, it being such a total misnomer (as you shall soon see), and the nickname stuck. With the huge membership losses from the Anglican Church - especially from men who’d been the more charitable to it in the past - the church was technically bankrupt. It wasn’t just the losses from the Quakers. Other people were leaving to join the new "Reformed Churches." Elsewhere in Europe, the Roman Church had amassed sufficient assets to weather this storm. The far newer Anglican Church had not.

But the Anglican Church, as an agency of the State, can’t go bankrupt. It becomes the duty of the State to support it in hard times. Parliament did so. It enacted a tax to that end. A nice religious tax, and by current standards a very low tax, a tithe (10%). But it made a deadly mistake in that. The Quakers, primarily as tradesmen, recognized this income tax as a tax "without jurisdiction," at least so far as they went. As men unsworn and unallieged, they pointed out that they didn't have to pay it, nor provide a return. Absent their oaths establishing this servitude, there was "no jurisdiction." And they were right. Despite laws making it a crime to willfully refuse to make a return and pay this tax, NONE were charged or arrested.

That caused the rest of the society to take notice. Other folk who'd thought the Quakers were "extremists" suddenly began to listen to them. As always, money talks. These guys were keeping all they earned, while the rest of the un-sworn society, thinking this tax applied to them, well; they were out 10%. The Quaker movement expanded significantly, that proof once made in the marketplace. Membership in the Anglican Church fell even further, as did charity to it. The taxes weren't enough to offset these further losses. The tithe (income) tax was actually counterproductive to the goal of supporting the church. The members of the government and the churchmen were scared silly. If this movement continued to expand at the current rate, no one in the next generation would swear an oath. Who'd then farm the lands of the nobility? Oh, surely someone would, but not as a servant working for subsistence. The land would need to be leased under a contract, with the payment for that use established in the market, not on the unilateral whim of the nobleman. The wealth of the nobility, their incomes, was about to be greatly diminished. And the Church of England, what assets it possessed, would need to be sold-off, with what remained of that church greatly reduced in power and wealth. But far worse was the diminishment of the respect demanded by the priests and officials. They'd always held a position of superiority in the society. What would they do when all of society treated them only as equals?

They began to use the term "anarchy." But England was a monarchy, not an anarchy. And that was the ultimate solution to the problem, or so those in government thought. There's an aspect of a monarchy that Americans find somewhat incomprehensible, or at least we did two centuries ago. A crown has divine right, or at least it so claims. An expression of the divine right of a crown is the power to rule by demand. A crown can issue commands. The king says, "jump." Everyone jumps. Why do they jump? Simple. It's a crime to NOT jump. To "willfully fail (hey, there's a couple of familiar terms) to obey a crown command" is considered to be a treason, high treason. The British crown issued a Crown Command to end the tax objection movement. Did the crown order that everyone shall pay the income tax? No, that wasn't possible. There really was "no jurisdiction." And that would have done nothing to cure the lack of respect. The crown went one better. It ordered that every man shall swear an oath of allegiance to the crown! Damned Christian thing to do, eh? Literally!

A small handful of the tax objectors obeyed. Most refused. It was a simple matter of black and white. Jesus said “swear not at all.” They opted to obey Him over the crown. That quickly brought them into court, facing the charge of high treason. An official would take the witness stand, swearing that he had no record of the defendant's oath of allegiance. Then the defendant was called to testify, there being no right to refuse to witness against one's self. He refused to accept the administered oath. That refusal on the record, the court instantly judged him guilty. Took all of 10 minutes. That expedience made in the marketplace. Membership in the Anglican Church fell even further, as did charity to it. The taxes weren't enough to offset these further losses. The tithe (income) tax was actually counterpr ceased to exist, starving to death. It was typical for a man convicted of a petty crime to have one of his kid's stand in for him for 30 or 90 days. That way he could continue to earn a living, keeping bread on the table, without the family having to rely on charity. However, a man convicted of more heinous crimes would usually find it impossible to convince his wife to allow his children to serve his time. The family would prefer to exist on charity rather than see him back in society. But in this case the family had no option. The family was churchless. The neighbors were all in the same situation. Charity was nonexistent for them. The family was destined to quick starvation unless one of the children stood-in for the breadwinner. Unfortunately, the rational choice of which child should serve the time was predicated on which child was the least productive to the family earnings.

That meant nearly the youngest, usually a daughter. Thus, the prisons of England filled with adolescent females, serving the life sentences for their dads. Those lives would be short. There was no heat in the jails. They were rife with tuberculosis and other deadly diseases. A strong man might last several years. A small girl measured her remaining time on earth in months. It was Christian holocaust, a true sacrifice of the unblemished lambs. (And, we must note, completely ignored in virtually every history text covering this era, lest the crown, government and church be duly embarrassed.) Despite the high mortality rate the jails still overflowed. There was little fear that the daughters would be raped or die at the brutality of other prisoners. The other prisoners, the real felons, had all been released to make room. Early release was promised on the severity of the crime. High treason was the highest crime. The murderers, thieves, arsonists, rapists, etc., had all been set free. That had a very profound effect on commerce. It stopped. There were highwaymen afoot on every road. Thugs and muggers ruled the city streets. The sworn subjects of the crown sat behind bolted doors, in cold, dark homes, wondering how they'd exist when the food and water ran out. They finally dared to venture out to attend meetings to address the situation. At those meetings they discussed methods to overthrow the crown to which they were sworn! Call that perjury. Call that sedition. Call it by any name, they were going to put their words into actions, and soon, or die from starvation or the blade of a thug. Here we should note that chaos (and nearly anarchy: "no crown") came to be, not as the result of the refusal to swear oaths, but as the direct result of the governmental demand that people swear them! The followers of Jesus’ words didn't bring that chaos, those who ignored that command of Christ brought it. The crown soon saw the revolutionary handwriting on the wall and ordered the release of the children and the recapture of the real felons, before the government was removed from office under force of arms. The courts came up with the odd concept of an "affirmation in lieu of oath." The Quakers accepted that as a victory. Given what they’d been through, that was understandable. However, Jesus also prohibited affirmations, calling the practice an oath "by thy head." Funny that He could foresee the legal concept of an affirmation 1600 years before it came to be. Quite a prophecy!

When the colonies opened to migration, the Quakers fled Europe in droves, trying to put as much distance as they could between themselves and crowds. They had a very rational fear of a repeat of the situation. That put a lot of them here, enough that they had a very strong influence on politics. They could have blocked the ratification of the Constitution had they opposed it. Some of their demands were incorporated into it, as were some of their concessions, in balance to those demands. Their most obvious influence found in the Constitution is the definition of treason, the only crime defined in that document. Treason here is half of what can be committed under a crown. In the United States treason may only arise out of an (overt) ACTION. A refusal to perform an action at the command of the government is not a treason, hence, NOT A CRIME. You can find that restated in the Bill of Rights, where the territorial jurisdiction of the courts to try a criminal act is limited to the place wherein the crime shall have been COMMITTED. A refusal or failure is not an act "committed" - it's the opposite, an act "omitted." In this country "doing nothing" can't be criminal, even when someone claims the power to command you do something. That concept in place, the new government would have lasted about three years. You see, if it were not a crime to fail to do something, then the officers of that government would have done NOTHING - save to draw their pay. That truth forced the Quakers to a concession.

Anyone holding a government job would need be sworn (or affirmed) to support the Constitution. That Constitution enabled the Congress to enact laws necessary and proper to control the powers vested in these people. Those laws would establish their duties. Should such an official "fail" to perform his lawful duties, he'd evidence in that omission that his oath was false. To swear a false oath is an ACTION. Thus, the punishments for failures would exist under the concept of perjury, not treason. But that was only regarding persons under oath of office, who were in office only by their oaths. And that's still the situation. It's just that the government has very cleverly obscured that fact so that the average man will pay it a rent, a tax on income. As you probably know, the first use of income tax here came well in advance of the 16th amendment. That tax was NEARLY abolished by a late 19th century Supreme Court decision (Pollock v. Farmers’ Loan & Trust Co., 157 U.S. 429 (1895)). The problem was that the tax wasn't apportioned, and couldn't be apportioned, that because of the fact that it rested on the income of each person earning it, rather than an up-front total, divided and meted out to the several States according to the census. But the income tax wasn't absolutely abolished. The court listed a solitary exception. The incomes of federal officers, derived as a benefit of office, could be so taxed. You could call that a "kick back" or even a "return." Essentially, the court said that what Congress gives, it can demand back. As that wouldn't be income derived within a State, the rule of apportionment didn't apply. Make sense?

Now, no court can just make up rulings. The function of a court is to answer the questions posed to it. And in order to pose a question, a person needs standing. The petitioner has to show that an action has occurred which affects him, hence, giving him that standing. For the Supreme Court to address the question of the income of officers demonstrates that the petitioner was such. Otherwise, the question couldn’t have come up.

Congress was taxing his benefits of office. But Congress was ALSO taxing his outside income, that from sources within a State. Could have been interest, dividends, rent, royalties, and even alimony. If he had a side job, it might have even been commissions or salary. Those forms of income could not be taxed. However, Congress could tax his income from the benefits he derived by being an officer.

That Court decision was the end of all income taxation. The reason is pretty obvious. Rather than tax the benefits derived out of office, it's far easier to just reduce the benefits up front! Saves time. Saves paper. The money stays in Treasury rather than going out, then coming back as much as 15 or 16 months later. So, even though the benefits of office could have been taxed, under that Court ruling, that tax was dropped by Congress. There are two ways to overcome a Supreme Court ruling. The first is to have the court reverse itself. That's a very strange concept at law. Actually, it's impossibility at law. The only way a court can change a prior ruling is if the statutes or the Constitution change, thus changing the premises on which its prior conclusion at law was derived. Because it was a Supreme Court ruling nearly abolishing the income tax, the second method, an Amendment to the Constitution, was used to overcome the prior decision. That was the 16th Amendment.

The 16th Amendment allows for Congress to tax incomes from whatever source derived, without regard to apportionment. Whose incomes? Hey, it doesn't say (nor do the statues enacted under it). The Supreme Court has stated (see Stanton v. Baltic Mining, 240 U.S. 103 (1916))that this Amendment granted Congress "no new powers." That's absolutely true. Congress always had the power to tax incomes, but only the incomes of corporations or officers of corporations and only their incomes derived out of a benefit or privilege of elected or corporate office. All the 16th Amendment did was extend that EXISTING POWER to tax officers' incomes (as benefits of office) to their incomes from other sources (from whatever source derived). The 16th Amendment and the statutes enacted thereunder don't have to say whose incomes are subject to this tax. The Supreme Court had already said that: officers. That's logical. If it could be a crime for a freeman to "willfully fail" to file or pay this tax, that crime could only exist as a treason by monarchical definition. In this country a crime of failure may only exist under the broad category of a perjury. Period, no exception.

Thus, the trick employed by the government is to get you to claim that you are an officer of that government. Yeah, you're saying, "Man, I'd never be so foolish as to claim that." I'll betcha $100 I can prove that you did it and that you'll be forced to agree. Did you ever sign a tax form, a W-4, a 1040? Then you did it.

Look at the fine print at the bottom of the tax forms you once signed. You declared that it was "true" that you were "under penalties of perjury." Are you? Were you? Perjury is a felony. To commit a perjury you have to FIRST be under oath (or affirmation). You know that. It's common knowledge. So, to be punished for a perjury you'd need to be under oath, right? Right. There's no other way, unless you pretend to be under oath. To pretend to be under oath is a perjury automatically. Would be no oath. Hence it's a FALSE oath. Perjury rests on making a false oath. So, to claim to be "under penalties of perjury" is to claim that you're under oath. That claim could be true, could be false. But if false, and you knowingly and willingly made that false claim, then you committed a perjury just by making that claim.

You've read the Constitution. How many times can you be tried and penalized for a single criminal act? Once? Did I hear you right? Did you say once; only once? Good for you. You know that you can't even be placed in jeopardy of penalty (trial) a second time. The term "penalties" is plural. More than one. Oops. Didn't you just state that you could only be tried once, penalized once, for a single criminal action? Sure you did. And that would almost always be true. There's a solitary exception. A federal official or employee may be twice tried, twice penalized. The second penalty, resulting out of a conviction of impeachment, is the loss of the benefits of office, for life. Federal officials are under oath, an oath of office. That's why you call them civil servants. That oath establishes jurisdiction (oath spoken), allowing them to be penalized, twice, for a perjury (especially for a perjury of official oath). You have been tricked into signing tax forms under the perjury clause. You aren't under oath enabling the commission of perjury. You can't be twice penalized for a single criminal act, even for a perjury. Still, because you trusted that the government wouldn't try to deceive you, you signed an income tax form, pretending that there was jurisdiction (oath spoken) where there was none.
Once you sign the first form, the government will forever believe that you are a civil servant. Stop signing those forms while you continue to have income and you'll be charged with "willful failure to file," a crime of doing nothing when commanded to do something!

Initially, the income tax forms were required to be SWORN (or affirmed) before a notary. A criminal by the name of Sullivan (U.S. v. Sullivan, 274 U.S. 259 (1927)) brought that matter all the way to the Supreme Court. He argued that if he listed his income from criminal activities, that information would later be used against him on a criminal charge. If he didn't list it, then swore that the form was "true, correct and complete," he could be charged and convicted of a perjury. He was damned if he did, damned if he didn't. The Supreme Court could only agree. It ruled that a person could refuse to provide any information on that form, taking individual exception to each line, and stating in that space that he refused to provide testimony against himself. That should have been the end of the income tax. In a few years everyone would have been refusing to provide answers on the "gross" and "net income" lines, forcing NO answer on the "tax due" line, as well. Of course, that decision was premised on the use of the notarized oath, causing the answers to have the quality of "testimony."

Congress then INSTANTLY ordered the forms be changed. In place of the notarized oath, the forms would contain a statement that they were made and signed "Under penalties of perjury." The prior ruling of the Supreme Court was made obsolete. Congress had changed the premise on which it had reached its conclusion. The verity of the information on the form no longer rested on a notarized oath. It rested on the taxpayer's oath of office. And, as many a tax protestor in the 1970s and early 1980s quickly discovered, the Supreme Court ruling for Sullivan had no current relevance.

There has never been a criminal trial in any matter under federal income taxation without a SIGNED tax form in evidence before the court. The court takes notice of the signature below the perjury clause and assumes the standing of the defendant is that of a federal official, a person under oath of office who may be twice penalized for a single criminal act of perjury (to his official oath). The court has jurisdiction to try such a person for a "failure." That jurisdiction arises under the concept of perjury, not treason.

However, the court is in an odd position here. If the defendant should take the witness stand, under oath or affirmation to tell the truth, and then truthfully state that he is not under oath of office and is not a federal officer or employee, that statement would contradict the signed statement on the tax form, already in evidence and made under claim of oath. That contradiction would give rise to a technical perjury. Under federal statutes, courtroom perjury is committed when a person willfully makes two statements, both under oath, which contradict one another.

The perjury clause claims the witness to be a federal person. If he truthfully says the contrary from the witness stand, the judge is then duty bound to charge him with the commission of a perjury! At his ensuing perjury trial, the two contradictory statements "(I'm) under penalties of perjury" and "I'm not a federal official or employee" would be the sole evidence of the commission of the perjury. As federal employment is a matter of public record, the truth of the last statement would be evidenced. That would prove that the perjury clause was a FALSE statement. Can't have that proof on the record, can we? About now you are thinking of some tax protestor trials for "willful failure" where the defendant took the witness stand and testified, in full truth, that he was not a federal person. This writer has studied a few such cases. Those of Irwin Schiff and F. Tupper Saussy come to mind. And you are right; they told the court that they weren't federal persons. Unfortunately, they didn't tell the court that while under oath. A most curious phenomenon occurs at "willful failure" trials where the defendant has published the fact, in books or newsletters, that he isn't a federal person. The judge becomes very absent-minded - at least that's surely what he'd try to claim if the issue were ever raised. He forgets to swear-in the defendant before he takes the witness stand. The defendant tells the truth from the witness stand, but does so without an oath. As he's not under oath, nothing he says can constitute a technical perjury as a contradiction to the "perjury clause" on the tax forms already in evidence. The court will almost always judge him guilty for his failure to file. Clever system. And it all begins when a person who is NOT a federal officer or employee signs his first income tax form, FALSELY claiming that he's under an oath which if perjured may bring him a duality of penalties. It's still a matter of jurisdiction (oath spoken). That hasn't changed in over 400 years. The only difference is that in this country, we have no monarch able to command us to action. In the United States of America, you have to VOLUNTEER to establish jurisdiction. Once you do, then you are subject to commands regarding the duties of your office. Hence the income tax is "voluntary," in the beginning, but "compulsory" once you volunteer. You volunteer when you sign your very first income tax form, probably a Form W-4 and probably at about age 15. You voluntarily sign a false statement, a false statement that claims that you are subject to jurisdiction. Gotcha! Oh, and when the prosecutor enters your prior signed income tax forms into evidence at a willful failure to file trial, he will always tell the court that those forms evidence that you knew it was your DUTY to make and file proper returns. DUTY! A free man owes no DUTY. A free man owes nothing to the federal government, as he receives nothing from it. But a federal official owes a duty. He receives something from that government - the benefits of office. In addition to a return of some of those benefits, Congress can also demand that he pay a tax on his other forms of income, now under the 16th Amendment, from whatever source they may be derived. If that were ever to be understood, the ranks of real, sworn federal officers would diminish greatly. And the ranks of the pretended federal officers (including you) would vanish to zero. It's still the same system as it was 400 years ago, with appropriate modifications, so you don't immediately realize it. Yes, it's a jurisdictional matter. An Oath-spoken matter. Quite likely you, as a student of the Constitution, have puzzled over the 14th Amendment. You've wondered who are persons "subject to the jurisdiction" of the United States and in the alternative, who are not. This is easily explained, again in the proper historical perspective. The claimed purpose of the 14th was to vest civil rights to the former slaves. A method was needed to convert them from chattel to full civil beings. The Supreme Court had issued rulings that precluded that from occurring. Hence, an Amendment was necessary. But it took a little more than the amendment. The former slaves would need to perform an act, subjecting themselves to the "jurisdiction" of the United States. You should now realize that an oath is the way that was/is accomplished.

After the battles of the rebellion had ceased, the manumitted slaves were free, but rightless. They held no electoral franchise - they couldn't vote. The governments of the Southern States were pretty peeved over what had occurred in the prior several years, and they weren't about to extend electoral franchises to the former slaves. The Federal government found a way to force that.

It ordered that voters had to be "registered." And it ordered that to become a registered voter, one had to SWEAR an oath of allegiance to the Constitution. The white folks, by and large, weren't about to do that. They were also peeved that the excuse for all the battles was an unwritten, alleged, Constitutional premise, that a "State had no right to secede." The former slaves had no problem swearing allegiance to the Constitution. The vast majority of them didn't have the slightest idea of what an oath was, nor did they even know what the Constitution was!

Great voter registration drives took place. In an odd historical twist, these were largely sponsored by the Quakers who volunteered their assistance. Thus, most of the oaths administered were administered by Quakers! Every former slave was sworn-in, taking what actually was an OATH OF OFFICE. The electoral franchise then existed almost exclusively among the former slaves, with the white folks in the South unanimously refusing that oath and denied their right to vote. For a while many of the Southern State governments were comprised of no one other than the former slaves. The former slaves became de jure (by oath) federal officials, "subject to the jurisdiction of the United States" by that oath. They were non-compensated officials, receiving no benefits of their office, save what was then extended under the 14th Amendment. There was some brief talk of providing compensation in the form of 40 acres and a mule, but that quickly faded.

Jurisdiction over a person (called "in personam jurisdiction") exists only by oath. Always has, always will. For a court to have jurisdiction, someone has to bring a charge or petition under an oath. In a criminal matter, the charge is forwarded under the oaths of the grand jurors (indictment) or under the oath of office of a federal officer (information). Even before a warrant may be issued, someone has to swear there is probable cause. Should it later be discovered that there was NOT probable cause, that person should be charged with a perjury. It's all about oaths. And the one crime for which immunity, even "sovereign immunity," cannot be extended is ... perjury.

You must understand "jurisdiction." That term is only understandable when one understands the history behind it. Know what "jurisdiction" means. You didn't WILLFULLY claim that you were "Under penalties of perjury" on those tax forms you signed. You may have done it voluntarily, but you surely did it ignorantly! You didn't realize the import and implications of that clause. It was, quite frankly, a MISTAKE. A big one. A dumb one. Still it was only a mistake. Willfulness rests on intent. You had no intent to claim that you were under an oath of office, a perjury of which could bring you dual penalties. You just didn't give those words any thought. What do you do when you discover you've made a mistake? As an honest man, you tell those who may have been affected by your error, apologize to them, and usually you promise to be more careful in the future, that as a demonstration that you, like all of us, learn by your mistakes. You really ought to drop the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States a short letter, cc it to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Explain that you never realized that the fine print on the bottom of all income tax forms meant that you were claiming to be "under oath" a perjury of which might be "twice" penalized. Explain that you've never sworn such an oath and that for reasons of conscience, you never will. You made this mistake on every tax form you'd ever signed. But now that you understand the words, you'll most certainly not make that mistake again! That'll be the end of any possibility that you'll ever be charged with "willful failure to file." Too simple? No, it's only as simple as it's supposed to be. Jurisdiction (oath spoken) is a pretty simple matter. Either you are subject to jurisdiction, by having really sworn an oath, or you are not. If you aren't under oath, and abolish all the pretenses, false pretenses you provided, on which the government assumed that you were under oath, then the jurisdiction fails and you become a freeman. A freeman can't be compelled to perform any act and threatened with a penalty, certainly not two penalties, should he fail to do so. That would constitute a treason charge by the part of the definition abolished here.

The Great IRS Hoax: Why We Don't Owe Income Tax, version 4.54

TOP SECRET: For Official Treasury/IRS Use Only (FOUO)

It's a matter of history. European history, American history, and finally, the history of your life. The first two may be hidden from you, making parts of them difficult to discover. But the last history you know. If you know that you've never sworn an oath of office, and now understand how that truth fits the other histories, then you are free. Truth does that. Funny how that works.

Jesus was that Truth. His command that His followers "Swear not at all." That was the method by which He set men free.
Israel was a feudal society. It had a crown; it had landlords; they had tenant farmers bound by oath to them. Jesus scared them silly. Who'd farm those lands in the next generation, when all of the people refused to swear oaths? Ring a bell? And what did the government do to Jesus? It tried to obtain jurisdiction on the false oath of a witness, charging Him with "sedition" for the out-of-context, allegorical statement that He'd "tear down the temple" (a government building). At that trial, Jesus stood mute, refusing the administered oath. That was unheard of!
The judge became so frustrated that he posed a trick question attempting to obtain jurisdiction from Jesus. He said, "I adjure you in the name of the Living God, are you the man (accused of sedition)." An adjuration is a "compelled oath." Jesus then broke his silence, responding, "You have so said."

He didn't "take" the adjured oath. He left it with its speaker, the judge! That bound the judge to truth. Had the judge also falsely said that Jesus was the man (guilty of sedition)? No, not out loud, not yet. But in his heart he'd said so. That's what this trial was all about. Jesus tossed that falsehood back where it belonged as well as the oath. In those few words, "You have so said," Jesus put the oath, and the PERJURY of it, back on the judge, where it belonged. The court couldn't get jurisdiction.

Israel was occupied by Rome at that time. The court then shipped Jesus off to the martial governor, Pontius Pilate, hoping that martial power might compel him to submit to jurisdiction. But Pilate had no quarrel with Jesus. He correctly saw the charge as a political matter, devoid of any real criminal act. Likely, Pilate offered Jesus the "protection of Rome." Roman law extended only to sworn subjects. All Jesus would need do is swear an oath to Caesar, then Pilate could protect him.
Otherwise, Jesus was probably going to turn up dead at the hands of "person or persons unknown" which would really be at the hands of the civil government, under the false charge of sedition. Pilate administered that oath to Caesar. Jesus stood mute, again refusing jurisdiction. Pilate "marveled at that." He'd never before met a man who preferred to live free or die.
Under Roman law the unsworn were considered to be unclean - the "great unwashed masses." The elite were sworn to Caesar.
When an official errantly extended the law to an unsworn person that "failure of jurisdiction" required that the official perform a symbolic act. To cleanse himself and the law, he would "wash his hands." Pilate did so. Under Roman law, the law to which he was sworn, he had to do so. The law, neither Roman law nor the law of Israel, could obtain jurisdiction over Jesus.
The law couldn't kill Him, nor could it prevent that murder. Jesus was turned over to a mob, demanding His death. How's that for chaos? Jesus was put to death because He refused to be sworn. But the law couldn't do that. Only a mob could do so, setting free a true felon in the process. Thus, Jesus proved the one failing of the law - at least the law then and there - the law has no ability to touch a truly free man. A mob can, but the result of that is chaos, not order.

In every situation where a government attempts to compel an oath, or fails to protect a man of conscience who refuses it, the result is chaos. That government proves itself incapable of any claimed powers as the result, for the only purpose of any government should be to defend the people establishing it - all of those people - and not because they owe that government any duty or allegiance, but for the opposite reason, because the government owes the people its duty and allegiance under the law. This country came close to that concept for quite a few decades. Then those in federal office realized that they could fool all of the people, some of the time. That "some of the time" regarded oaths and jurisdiction. We were (and still are) a Christian country, at least the vast majority of us claim ourselves to be Christian. But we are led by churchmen who still uphold the terms of that European treaty. They still profess that it is Christian to swear an oath, so long as it's a "lawful oath."
We are deceived. As deceived as the tenant in 1300, but more so, for we now have the Words of Jesus to read for ourselves.

Jesus said (in Matt. 5:33-37), "Swear no oaths," extending that even to oaths which don't name God. If His followers obeyed that command, the unscrupulous members of the society in that day would have quickly realized that they could file false lawsuits against Jesus' followers, suits that they couldn't answer (under oath). Thus, Jesus issued a secondary command, ordering His followers to sell all they had, making themselves what today we call "judgment proof." They owned only their shirt and a coat. If they were sued for their shirt, they were to offer to settle out-of-court (without oath) by giving the plaintiff their coat. That wasn't a metaphor. Jesus meant those words in the literal sense!

It's rather interesting that most income tax protestors are Christian and have already made themselves virtually judgment proof, perhaps inadvertently obeying one of Jesus' commands out of a self-preservation instinct. Do we sense something

5-218

...here? You need to take the final step. You must swear no oaths. That is the penultimate step in self-preservation, and in obedience to the commands of Christ. It's all a matter of "jurisdiction" (oath spoken), which a Christian can't abide. Christians must be freemen. Their faith, duty, and allegiance can go to no one on earth. We can't serve two masters. No one can. As Christians our faith and allegiance rests not on an oath. Our faith and allegiance arise naturally. These are duties owed by a child to his father. As Children of God, we must be faithful to Him, our Father, and to our eldest Brother, the Inheritor of the estate. That's certain.

As to what sort of a society Jesus intended without oaths or even affirmations, this writer honestly can't envision. Certainly it would have been anarchy (no crown). Would it have also been chaos? My initial instinct is to find that it would lead to chaos. Like the Quakers in 1786, I can't envision a functional government without the use of oaths. Yet, every time a government attempts to use oaths as a device to compel servitudes, the result is CHAOS. History proves that. The Dark Ages were dark, only because the society was feudal, failing to advance to enlightenment because they were sworn into servitudes, unwittingly violating Jesus' command. When the British crown attempted to compel oaths of allegiance, chaos certainly resulted. And Jesus' own death occurred only out of the chaos derived by His refusal to swear a compelled oath and an offered oath.

The current Internal Revenue Code is about as close to legislated chaos as could ever be envisioned. No two people beginning with identical premises will reach the same conclusion under the IRC. Is not that chaos? Thus, in every instance where the government attempts to use oaths to bind a people, the result has been chaos.

Hence, this writer is forced to the conclusion that Jesus was right. We ought to avoid oaths at all costs, save our own souls, and for precisely that reason. Yet, what system of societal interaction Jesus envisioned, without oaths, escapes me. How would we deal with murderers, thieves, rapists, etc. present in the society without someone bringing a complaint, sworn complaint, before a Jury (a panel of sworn men), to punish them for these criminal actions against the civil members of that society? Perhaps you, the reader, can envision what Jesus had in mind. Even if you can't, you still have to obey His command. That will set you free. As to where we go from there, well, given that there has never been a society, neither civil nor martial, which functioned without oaths, I guess we won't see how it will function until it arrives.

Meanwhile, the first step in the process is abolishing your prior FALSE claims of being under oath (of office) on those income tax forms. You claimed "jurisdiction." Only you can reverse that by stating the Truth. It worked 400 years ago. It'll still work. It's the only thing that'll work. History can repeat, but this time without the penalty of treason extended to you (or your daughters). You can cause it. Know and tell this Truth and it will set you free. HONESTLY. Tell the government, then explain it to every Christian you know. Most of them will hate you for that bit of honesty. Be kind to them anyhow. Once they see that you are keeping what you earn, the market will force them to realize that you aren't the extremist they originally thought! If only 2% of the American people understand what is written here, income taxation will be abolished - that out of a fear that the knowledge will expand. The government will be scared silly. What if no one in the next generation would swear an oath? Then there'd be no servants!

No, the income tax will be abolished long before that could ever happen. That's only money. Power comes by having an ignorant people to rule. A government will always opt for power. That way, in two or three generations, the knowledge lost to the obscure "between the lines" of history, they can run the same money game. Pass this essay on to your Christian friends. But save a copy. Will it to your grandchildren. Someday, they too will probably need this knowledge. Teach your children well. Be honest; tell the truth. That will set you free - and it'll scare the government silly.

5.2.10 How Does the Federal Government Acquire Legislative Jurisdiction Over an Area?

How does the Federal Government acquire exclusive legislative jurisdiction or sovereignty over its territories under Article 1, Section 8, Clause 17 of the U.S. Constitution? According to the April, 1956, report (Part I), pages 41-47 of the Interdepartmental Committee "Study Of Jurisdiction Over Federal Areas Within The States" which is available at:

Jurisdiction Over Federal Areas Within the States, Form #11.203
http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

The Supreme Court has recognized three methods by which the federal government may acquire exclusive legislative jurisdiction over real property:
1. Constitutional consent.--Other than the District of Columbia, the Constitution gives express recognition to but one means of Federal acquisition of legislative jurisdiction—purchase with State consent under article I, section 8, clause 17.

   "...and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the legislature of the state in which the same shall be, for the creation of forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards and other needful buildings...."

   "The debates in the Constitutional Convention and State ratifying conventions leave little doubt that both the opponents and proponents of Federal exercise of exclusive legislative jurisdiction over the seat of government were of the view that a constitutional provision such as clause 17 was essential if the Federal government was to have such jurisdiction... While, as has been indicated in the preceding chapter, little attention was given in the course of the debates to Federal exercise of exclusive legislative jurisdiction over areas other than the seat of government, it is reasonable to assume that it was the general view that a special constitution provision was essential to enable the United States to acquire exclusive legislative jurisdiction over any area..."

According to the 1956 report, pages 7-8, "... the provision of the second portion, for transfer of like jurisdiction [as the District of Columbia] to the Federal Government over other areas acquired for Federal purposes, was not uniformly exercised during the first 50 years of the existence of the United States. It was exercised with respect to most, but not all, lighthouse sites, with respect to various forts and arsenals, and with respect to a number of other individual properties. But search of appropriate records indicates that during this period it was often the practice of the Government merely to purchase the lands upon which its installations were to be placed and to enter into occupancy for the purposes intended, without also acquiring legislative jurisdiction over the lands."

2. Federal reservation.--In Fort Leavenworth R.R. v. Lowe, 114 U.S. 525 (1885), the Supreme Court approved a method not specified in the Constitution of securing legislative jurisdiction in the United States. Although the matter was not in issue in the case, the Supreme Court said (p. 526):

   "The land constituting the Reservation was part of the territory acquired in 1803 by cession from France, and until the formation of the State of Kansas, and her admission into the Union, the United States possessed the rights of a proprietor, and had political dominion and sovereignty over it. For many years before that admission it had been reserved from sale by the proper authorities of the United States for military purposes, and occupied by them as a military post. The jurisdiction of the United States over it during this time was necessarily paramount. But in 1861 Kansas was admitted into the Union upon an equal footing with the original States; that is, with the same rights of political dominion and sovereignty, subject like them only to the Constitution of the United States. Congress might undoubtedly, upon such admission, have stipulated for retention of the political authority, dominion and legislative power of the United States over the Reservation so long as it should be used for military purposes by the government; that is, it could have excepted the place from the jurisdiction of Kansas, as one needed for the uses of the general government. But from some cause, inadvertence perhaps, or over-confidence that a recession of such jurisdiction could be had whenever desired, no such stipulation or exception was made. (See also United States v. Gravois concerning post-statehood reservation of mines, salt licks, salt springs, and mill seats in the (former) Eastern ceded territories.)"

3. State cession.--In the same case, Fort Leavenworth R.R. v. Lowe the United States Supreme Court sustained the validity of an act of Kansas ceding to the United States legislative jurisdiction over the Fort Leavenworth military reservation, but reserving to itself the right to serve criminal and civil process in the reservation and the right to tax railroad, bridge, and other corporations, and their franchises and property on the reservation. In the course of its opinion sustaining the cession of legislative jurisdiction, the Supreme Court said (p. 540):

   "... Though the jurisdiction and authority of the general government are essentially different from those of the State, they are not those of a different country; and the two, the State and general government, may deal with each other in any way they may deem best to carry out the purposes of the Constitution. It is for the protection and interests of the States, their people and property, as well as for the protection and interests of the people generally of the United States, that forts, arsenals, and other buildings for public uses are constructed within the States. As instrumentalities for the execution of the powers of the general government, they are, as already said, exempt from such control of the States as would defeat or impair their use for those purposes; and if, to their more effective use, a cession of legislative authority and political jurisdiction by the State would be desirable, we do not perceive any objection to its grant by the Legislature of the State. Such cession is really as much for the benefit of the State as it is for the benefit of the United States."

The above list of three sources of jurisdiction, however, is missing one very important additional source of federal jurisdiction. As a matter of fact, it is THE most important and frequent source. Another way the U.S. government gets exclusive legislative jurisdiction over sovereign people and property inside the borders of states is to trick sovereign state citizens (also called Natural Born Persons) into falsely admitting that they are “U.S. citizens”, and then they become federal property...slaves!
"The persons declared to be citizens are ALL PERSONS BORN OR NATURALIZED IN THE UNITED STATES AND SUBJECT TO THE JURISDICTION THEREOF. The evident meaning of these last words is, not merely subject in some respect or degree to the jurisdiction of the United States, but COMPLETELY SUBJECT..."

[Elk v. Wilkins, 112 U.S. 94 (1884)]

"To be ‘completely subject’ to the political jurisdiction of the United States is to be in no respect or degree subject to the political jurisdiction of any other government [including state governments]."

[United States v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U.S. 649, 18 S.Ct. 456; 42 L.Ed. 890 (1898)]

As a “U.S. citizen”, both you and everything you own comes under the jurisdiction of the federal courts. This is jurisdiction they got from you that they wouldn’t have if you knew enough about the law to know that you aren’t a statutory “U.S. citizen” under 8 U.S.C. §1401! Why on earth would anyone want to admit to being a statutory “U.S. citizen”, especially since such persons by law must be both born and domiciled on federal property inside the federal zone:

3C Am Jur 2d §2689, Who is born in United States and subject to United States jurisdiction

"A person is born subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, for purposes of acquiring citizenship at birth, if his or her birth occurs in territory over which the United States is sovereign, even though another country provides all governmental services within the territory, and the territory is subsequently ceded to the other country."

Here’s the only definition of “U.S. citizen” anywhere in 26 U.S.C. or 26 C.F.R.:

Title 26. INTERNAL REVENUE CODE
Subtitle C. Employment Taxes
Chapter 21. FEDERAL INSURANCE CONTRIBUTIONS ACT
Subchapter C. General Provisions

26 U.S. Code § 3121 Definitions

(e)STATE, UNITED STATES, AND CITIZEN

For purposes of this chapter—

(1)STATE

The term “State” includes the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, and American Samoa.

(2)UNITED STATES

The term “United States” when used in a geographical sense includes the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, and American Samoa.

An individual who is a citizen of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico (but not otherwise a citizen of the United States) shall be considered, for purposes of this section, as a citizen of the United States.

26 C.F.R. §31.3121(e)-1 State, United States, and citizen.

(b)...The term 'citizen of the United States' includes a citizen of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico or the Virgin Islands, and, effective January 1, 1961, a citizen of Guam or American Samoa.

By the above definition, most people simply aren’t statutory “U.S. citizens” but their own ignorance deceives them into thinking that they are! That is why we emphasize over and over in this book that it is so important to get educated so the exploitation and oppression the government has foisted upon you because of your legal ignorance can be eliminated immediately. Knowledge is the only way out of financial slavery to the government. Instead, we should always declare ourselves to be “nationals” or “state nationals” and never statutory “U.S. citizens” and we should never file 1040 forms, but instead if we file anything, they should be 1040NR forms.

5.2.11 Limitations on Federal Taxation Jurisdiction

At this point it is reasonable to consider what types of income might be (as the older regulations state) “under the Constitution, not taxable by the Federal Government.” While the public seems largely ignorant of this fact, Congress has legal power over only those few matters which the Constitution puts under federal jurisdiction (and the Tenth Amendment clearly states this).

Within the 50 Union states, Congress has legal control over only those matters listed in Article I, Section 8 of the Constitution.

The Constitution creates a Federal Government of enumerated powers. See U.S. Const., Art. I, 8. As James Madison wrote, “[t]he powers delegated by the proposed Constitution to the federal government are few and defined. Those which are to remain in the State governments are numerous and indefinite.” The Federalist No. 45, pp. 292-293 (C. Rossiter ed. 1961). This constitutionally mandated division of authority “was adopted by the Framers to ensure protection of our fundamental liberties.” Gregory v. Ashcroft, 530 U.S. 42, 47 (1991) (internal quotation marks omitted). “Just as the separation and independence of the coordinate branches of the Federal Government serves to prevent the accumulation of excessive power in any one branch, a healthy balance of power between the States and the Federal Government will reduce the risk of tyranny and abuse from either front.”

"The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.”

[Tenth Amendment, U.S. Constitution]

In the 1995 case of U.S. v. Lopez cited above, the Supreme Court threw out the “Gun Free School Zone” law (18 U.S.C. §922(q)) as unconstitutional, on the grounds that it was outside of Congress’ enumerated powers described in Article I, Section 8. Not only did the court say this, but the lawyers on the other side tried to argue that the law was about regulating “interstate commerce” (which Article I, Section 8 puts under federal jurisdiction), demonstrating that they agreed that the law had to be based on something in Article I, Section 8.

Article I, Section 8 of the Constitution authorizes Congress "to lay and collect taxes." And says exactly what may be taxed by Congress. In addition, the Sixteenth Amendment states: "Congress shall have the power to lay and collect taxes on income, from whatever source derived." So surely Congress has the Constitutional power to tax your income, doesn’t it? In most cases, no, it doesn’t. Many have argued about the "direct tax" vs. "indirect tax" question (which is not necessary to explain in detail here), but the more important limitation on Congress’ taxing power (the one keeping them from actually imposing the tax most people assume exists) is usually overlooked.

Article I, Section 8 leaves almost all matters that occur within a single state (e.g. intrastate commerce) to the state governments. But, as mentioned above, it does grant Congress the "power to lay and collect taxes." While there are rules for how "direct" and "indirect" taxes must be imposed, the taxing clauses do not say exactly what may or may not be taxed (there is, however, a clause forbidding taxation on exports from states). Is there then no limit to what Congress can tax, only how they can tax?

To answer that, we start with a simple question: Do Article I, Section 8 and the Sixteenth Amendment give Congress the power to tax the incomes of everyone in China? The question is admittedly a bit silly, but why is it silly? If Congress has the power "to lay and collect taxes," and specifically has the power "to lay and collect taxes on income, from whatever source derived," why can’t it tax everyone in China? In this case, we naturally (and correctly) assume that "from whatever source" only includes things under the jurisdiction of Congress. (It would be difficult to find anyone to make the argument that the Sixteenth Amendment gave Congress jurisdiction over everyone in China.)

So Congress can’t tax everyone in China. Big deal. What does that have to do with us Americans? The question about geographical or territorial jurisdiction is fairly simple, but what about jurisdiction within the 50 Union states? This type of jurisdiction, instead of “territorial jurisdiction” or sovereignty, is called “subject matter jurisdiction”. Can Congress tax anything it wants there?

http://famguardian.org/
Article I, Section 8 does include the “power to lay and collect taxes,” but does not say what may be taxed by Congress. This allows for two options. The first option is that there are essentially no limitations on what Congress can tax (though there are certain rules on how “direct” and “indirect” taxes must be imposed). The problem with this option is that it would essentially negate the entire Constitution, as this option would give Congress the jurisdiction and power to control anything and everything, provided it exerted that control through tax legislation. For example, if this option were true, in response to the Lopez decision mentioned above, Congress could simply impose a $1,000,000 tax on carrying a firearm near a school, to get around the restriction that would otherwise exist.

The courts have thus far rejected any such federal Acts of Congress, on the grounds that they were beyond the powers granted to Congress by Article I, Section 8. For example, the Supreme Court threw out the “Gun Free School Zone” law in the 1995 “Lopez” decision. The law (18 U.S.C. §922(q)) made it illegal for anyone to possess a gun near a school. Despite attempts by the government lawyers to pass this off as a regulation of interstate commerce (which Article I, Section 8 puts under federal jurisdiction), the court ruled that such a law was not within Congress’ constitutional power to make.” Here is what they said in U.S. v. Lopez, 514 U.S. 549 (1995):

To uphold the Government’s contentions here, we would have to pile inference upon inference in a manner that would bid fair to convert congressional authority under the Commerce Clause to a general police power of the sort retained by the States. Admittedly, some of our prior cases have taken long steps down that road, giving great deference to congressional action. See supra, at 8. The broad language in these opinions has suggested the possibility of additional expansion, but we decline here to proceed any further. To do so would require us to conclude that the Constitution’s enumeration of powers does not presuppose something not enumerated, cf. Gibbons v. Ogden, supra, at 195, and that there never will be a distinction between what is truly national and what is truly local, cf. Jones & Laughlin Steel, supra, at 30. This we are unwilling to do.

Suppose, after that ruling, Congress then imposed a $1,000,000 "tax" on possessing a gun near a school. Would that not get around the restriction? If Congress could control any behavior it wanted, as long as it is done by way of "tax" legislation, then:

"all that Congress would need to do, hereafter, in seeking to take over to its control any one of the great number of subjects of public interest, jurisdiction of which the states have never parted with, and which are reserved to them by the Tenth Amendment, would be to enact a detailed measure of complete regulation of the subject and enforce it by a so-called tax upon departures from it. To give such magic to the word 'tax' would be to break down all constitutional limitation of the powers of Congress and completely wipe out the sovereignty of the states."

Those are the words of the Supreme Court, from the case of Bailey v. Drexel Furniture Co., 259 U.S. 20 (1922). An Act of Congress, designed to regulate by way of a "tax" something not otherwise under federal jurisdiction, "cannot be sustained as an exercise of the taxing power of Congress conferred by section 8, article I." Again, those are the words of the Supreme Court, this time from the case of Hill v. Wallace, 259 U.S. 44 (1922). In other words, the taxing clause in Article I, Section 8, does not give Congress jurisdiction over everything occurring within the 50 Union states.

The next logical question is: Does Congress have any power over those who receive their income from intrastate commerce (commerce within a single state)? Under Article I, Section 8, Congress does not have jurisdiction over intrastate commerce.

"No interference by Congress with the business of citizens transacted within a state is warranted by the Constitution, except such as is strictly incidental to the exercise of powers clearly granted to the legislature."

[License Tax Cases, 72 U.S. 462 (1866)]

During this century, the courts have stretched their reading of the "commerce clause" to the extreme. The courts have upheld many Acts of Congress, on the grounds that the matters regulated, though not interstate commerce themselves, have enough of an "impact" on interstate commerce that Congress may regulate them. We will here limit our criticism of this tendency of the courts to agreeing with Supreme Court Justice, Clarence Thomas, in his concurring opinion in the U.S. v. Lopez, 514 U.S. 549 (1995) case mentioned above, when he said:

"We have said that Congress may regulate not only "commerce... among the several states," U.S. Const., Art. I, 8, cl. 3, but also anything that has a "substantial effect" on such commerce... [It] seems to me that the power to regulate "commerce" can by no means encompass authority over mere gun possession, any more than it empowers the Federal Government to regulate marriage, littering, or cruelty to animals, throughout the 50 States. Our Constitution quite properly leaves such matters to the individual States, notwithstanding these activities' effects on interstate commerce. Any interpretation of the Commerce Clause that even suggests that Congress could regulate such matters is in need of reexamination."

Even with the courts’ "creative" interpretation of the commerce clause, it would be quite a stretch to say that Congress has the jurisdiction to regulate all income-generating activities within the 50 Union states. If they cannot regulate it, can they tax it?

There has been extensive debate in the courts over the concept that "the power to tax is the power to destroy." Though usually applied to limits on state power, the principle basically says that if a government has no jurisdiction to regulate an activity, then it also cannot tax that activity.

"[N]o state has the right to lay a tax on interstate commerce in any form... and the reason is that such taxation is a burden on that commerce, and amounts to a regulation of it, which belongs solely to congress. This is the result of so many recent cases that citation is hardly necessary."

[Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 127 U.S. 640 (1888)]

But the courts have gone back and forth on this issue as well. Could anyone argue that the extensive "social engineering" in the tax Code, rewarding some behaviors with credits and deductions, while penalizing others, does not amount to an attempt to regulate the behavior of those who receive taxable income? Does Congress have the authority to regulate the behavior of 100+ million Americans in that manner, by way of "tax" legislation? Or could it be that such "reward and punishment" tactics could only be imposed on those engaged in some activity otherwise under federal jurisdiction? What might that activity be that makes us “liable”?

In discussing the Income Tax Act of 1913, as it related to a company engaged in the business of selling U.S. products in foreign countries, the Supreme Court stated the following:

"The Constitution broadly empowers Congress not only to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, but also to regulate commerce with foreign nations. So, if [the clause forbidding taxes on exports from states] be not in the way, Congress undoubtedly has power to lay and collect such a tax as is here in question."

[William E. Peck & Co. v. Lowe, 247 U.S. 165 (1918)]

Why would the Supreme Court even mention the second clause, unless there was some question about whether the "power to lay and collect taxes" by itself, authorized a tax on any and all income?

But what of the Sixteenth Amendment? Didn’t that expand Congress’ taxing jurisdiction to all Americans? The Supreme Court and the Secretary of the Treasury say it did not. The following Treasury Decision (which expresses the official position of the Secretary of the Treasury) is actually a direct quote from the Supreme Court’s ruling in the case of Stanton v. Baltic Mining Co., 240 U.S. 103 (1916).

"The provisions of the sixteenth amendment conferred no new power of taxation, but simply prohibited [Congress’ original power to tax incomes] from being taken out of the category of indirect taxation, to which it inherently belonged, and being placed in the category of direct taxation subject to apportionment."

[Treasury Decision 2303]

In the 1916 case of Brushaber v. Union Pacific Railroad Co., 240 U.S. 1 (1916), the Supreme Court called it an "erroneous assumption" to believe that "the 16th Amendment provides for a hitherto unknown power of taxation; that is, a power to levy an income tax which, although direct, should not be subject to the regulation of apportionment applicable to all other direct taxes."

The Sixteenth Amendment was passed in response to the Supreme Court decision in Pollock v. Farmers’ Loan & Trust Co., 157 U.S. 429 (1895), which said that a tax on the income derived from owning property was the same as a tax on owning property, which would be a "direct" tax, requiring Congress to go through the complicated process of "apportioning" the tax among the states. (The court’s complaint about the tax did not apply to income received in exchange for labor.)

Without discussing all the ins and outs of "direct" and "indirect" taxes, the relevant point is that the Sixteenth Amendment simply identified the tax as an "indirect" tax (even when the income comes from property ownership), and therefore a tax which does not require (and has never required) "apportionment." It did nothing to expand Congress’ taxing jurisdiction.

"The Sixteenth Amendment... has no real bearing and may be put out of view. As pointed out in recent decisions, it does not extend the taxing power to new or excepted subjects..."

The Sixteenth Amendment does not at all address Congress’ taxing jurisdiction within the 50 union states, in spite of what well-meaning but ignorant Congressmen tell their constituents all the time in regards to their liability to pay income taxes. Saying that Congress can tax incomes “from whatever source derived,” without apportionment, obviously did not allow Congress to tax everyone in China. The only issue the amendment is relevant to is the question of “direct” vs. “indirect” taxation (with the amendment stating that the income tax is an "indirect" tax).

In fact, in one of the key rulings regarding the meaning of the Sixteenth Amendment, the Supreme Court made some interesting comments that show that the amendment was not about taxing jurisdiction in general. In the case of Stanton v. Baltic Mining Co., 240 U.S. 103 (1916), the Supreme Court stated that the Sixteenth Amendment simply forbids the courts from ruling that the income tax is a "direct" tax, based on "the sources from which the income was derived," as happened in the Pollock case (mentioned above). The Court then said the following:

"Mark, of course, in saying this we are not here considering a tax... entirely beyond the scope of the taxing power of Congress, and where consequently no authority to impose a burden, either direct or indirect, exists. In other words, we are here dealing solely with the restriction imposed by the 16th Amendment on the right to resort to the source whence an income is derived in a case where there is power to tax..."

[Stanton v. Baltic Mining Co., 240 U.S. 103 (1916)]

If there were no Constitutional restriction on Congress’ jurisdiction to tax incomes, this would make no sense. Is the court here referring merely to Congress’ inability to tax foreigners who do no business related to the United States of America? Would the court feel the need to mention that? Or were they implying that other restrictions exist on Congress’ ability to tax income? The Court thought it worth mentioning that they were not implying that the Sixteenth Amendment removed all the limits from Congress’ taxing power.

Article I, Section 8 of the Constitution does include the “power to lay and collect taxes,” but does not say what may be taxed by Congress. This allows for two options. The first option is that there are essentially no limitations on what Congress can tax (though there are certain rules on how “direct” and “indirect” taxes must be imposed). The problem with this option is that it would essentially negate the entire Constitution, as this option would give Congress the jurisdiction and power to control anything and everything, provided it exerted that control through tax legislation. For example, if this option were true, in response to the Lopez decision mentioned above, Congress could simply impose a $1,000,000 tax on carrying a firearm near a school, to get around the restriction that would otherwise exist.

The Supreme Court seems to agree that this option cannot be. The court said that they could not allow Congress to control by tax legislation matters which they have no jurisdiction to regulate. (Congress was attempting, in this case, to control “child labor” within the states through tax legislation.) The Supreme Court said the following:

“Grant the validity of this law, and all that Congress would need to do, hereafter, in seeking to take over to its control any one of the great number of subjects of public interest, jurisdiction of which the states have never parted with, and which are reserved to them by the Tenth Amendment, would be to enact a detailed measure of complete regulation of the subject and enforce it by a so-called tax upon departures from it. To give such magic to the word ‘tax’ would be to break down all constitutional limitation of the powers of Congress and completely wipe out the sovereignty of the states.”

In the same year, the court also ruled on the Future Trading Act, which imposed a tax “on all contracts for the sale of grain for future delivery.” The court quoted the citation above, and immediately afterward said this:

“This has complete application to the act before us, and requires us to hold that the provisions of the act we have been discussing cannot be sustained as an exercise of the taxing power of Congress conferred by section 8, article I.”

[Hill v. Wallace, 259 U.S. 44 (1922)]

Clearly the court saw that Congress’ power to lay and collect taxes does not grant unlimited jurisdiction over everything within the states. To ignore the limits of federal jurisdiction when reading the taxation clause would lead to concluding that Congress can control everything by tax legislation. (In fact, this reading would also mean that Congress has the power to tax everyone in China, since the taxing clause does not mention geographical jurisdiction either.)

The second option is that “the power to lay and collect taxes” applies only to matters otherwise under federal jurisdiction. For example, Article I, Section 8 specifically puts international commerce under federal jurisdiction, and Article IV, Section

3 gives Congress control of federal possessions. However, “intrastate” commerce (commerce that happens entirely within a single state) is not under federal jurisdiction. Here is a quote from the Constitution that prohibits taxing intrastate commerce:

U.S. Constitution, Article 1, Section 9, Clause 4:

“No Tax or Duty shall be laid on Articles exported from any State.”

So the power to tax, together with the clauses giving Congress jurisdiction over international/foreign commerce, and commerce within federal possessions, would give Congress the power to tax income from international commerce, and income from federal possessions ONLY.

The Supreme Court made an interesting comment in 1918 related to this. The case concerned the income tax act of 1913 (which is the basis of the current tax), and how it applied to a domestic corporation in the business of buying things in the states and selling them in foreign countries. The corporation was arguing that the tax in this case violated the provision of the Constitution which forbids the federal government from taxing exports from any state.

“[T]he act obviously could not impose a tax forbidden by the Constitution... The Constitution broadly empowers Congress not only to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, but also to regulate commerce with foreign nations. 'So, if the prohibitory clause [meaning the clause forbidding taxes on exports from states] invoked by the plaintiff be not in the way, Congress undoubtedly has power to lay and collect such a tax as is here in question.’”

In other words, if not for the question about whether this was a tax on state exports, this income would be taxable because Congress is given the general power “to lay and collect taxes,” and is given specific jurisdiction over “regulat[ing] commerce with foreign nations.” The court obviously thought this second clause was relevant to whether Congress could tax such income.

One more very important Supreme Court Case, Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U.S. 1 (1824), helps clarify the division of taxing authority between federal and state governments. The below cite confirms that the state and federal governments may not tax the same object or activity, and if they do, they are conflicting with the Constitution and with each other. Presently, exactly this constitutional conflict is found in IRC Subtitle A income taxes within the Union states, where both the federal and state governments are simultaneously competing for taxes on the same income of the same person and on the same activity, which is wages and labor. The more that one takes out of the income of the natural person, the less the other has and this is a clear constitutional conflict that cannot be remedied if we interpret Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A to apply inside the 50 sovereign Union states. This Constitutional conflict, by the way, is one of many reasons why the federal income tax can never be anything other than entirely voluntary within the Union states:

“The grant of the power to lay and collect taxes is, like the power to regulate commerce, made in general terms, and has never been understood to interfere with the exercise of the same power by the State; and hence has been drawn an argument which has been applied to the question under consideration. But the two grants are not, it is conceived, similar in their terms or their nature. Although many of the powers formerly [22 U.S. 1, 199] exercised by the States, are transferred to the government of the United States, yet the State governments remain, and constitute a most important part of our system. The power of taxation is indispensable to their existence, and is a power which, in its own nature, is capable of residing in, and being exercised by, different authorities at the same time. We are accustomed to see it placed, for different purposes, in different hands. Taxation is the simple operation of taking small portions from a perpetually accumulating mass, susceptible of almost infinite division; and a power in one to take what is necessary for certain purposes, is not, in its nature, incompatible with a power in another to take what is necessary for other purposes. Congress is authorized to lay and collect taxes, &c. to pay the debts, and provide for the common defence and general welfare of the United States. This does not interfere with the power of the States to tax for the support of their own governments; nor is the exercise of that power by the States, an exercise of any portion of the power that is granted to the United States. In imposing taxes for State purposes, they are not doing what Congress is empowered to do. Congress is not empowered to tax for those purposes which are within the exclusive province of the States.

When, then, each government exercises the power of taxation, neither is exercising the power of the other. But, when a State proceeds to regulate commerce with foreign nations, or among the several States, it is exercising the very power that is granted to Congress, [22 U.S. 1, 200] and is doing the very thing which Congress is authorized to do. There is no analogy, then, between the power of taxation and the power of regulating commerce."

[Robert McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. 316 (1819)]

As you will see later in this book starting in section 5.6.10, the popular “861 Position” fully realizes exactly the above described limits on the power of the federal government to tax foreign commerce under Article I, Section 8, Clause 3 of the U.S. Constitution. It recognizes the income tax as an indirect excise tax on revenue taxable privileges granted to corporations involved in foreign (outside the country) commerce. 26 C.F.R. §1.861-8(f) therefore limits taxable sources of income for the federal government to specific taxable activities and entities, which include, the following. Incidentally, the taxable activities listed below are what is called “statutory groupings” in 26 C.F.R. §1.861-8(f):

1. Profit of federally-chartered Foreign Sales Corporations (FSC’s) under 26 U.S.C. §994
2. Profit from federally-chartered Domestic International Sales Corporations (DISC) under 26 U.S.C. §925
3. Foreign base company income under 26 U.S.C. §954. This type of company is also identified as a federal corporation in 26 U.S.C. §952, but is operating inside a military base on federal property.

The courts have long argued over the concept that “the power to tax is the power to destroy,” meaning that the ability to tax something implies the ability to regulate it or to forbid it entirely. This conversely implies that if a government has no jurisdiction to regulate or forbid an activity, then it also has no jurisdiction to tax that activity either. There are numerous Supreme Court cases dealing with the concept.

"[No state has the right to lay a tax on interstate commerce in any form... and the reason is that such taxation is a burden on that commerce, and amounts to a regulation of it, which belongs solely to congress. This is the result of so many recent cases that citation is hardly necessary."

[Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 127 U.S. 640 (1888)]

In this case the court is stating the restrictions on what a state can tax, but the underlying logic is clear. Taxing commerce is a burden on that commerce, and amounts to a regulation of commerce. While Congress is authorized to regulate interstate commerce (commerce crossing state lines) and international commerce, it has no jurisdiction over intrastate commerce (commerce occurring entirely within a single state). By the simple logic above, that means Congress cannot tax income from intrastate commerce.

"No interference by Congress with the business of citizens transacted within a state is warranted by the Constitution, except such as is strictly incidental to the exercise of powers clearly granted to the legislature."

[License Tax Cases, 72 U.S. 462 (1866)]

It is true that the opinions of the courts have fluctuated significantly on this, from saying that the power to tax requires the power to regulate, to saying that Congress may tax things it cannot regulate, provided that taxation does not amount to regulation under the guise of a “tax.” But considering the massively complex “social engineering” in the income tax code (punishing some behaviors and rewarding others) it would be difficult to argue that it would not constitute an attempt to regulate behavior.

However, the courts’ position on the matter is ultimately irrelevant. Regardless of what the courts think Congress could tax, the statutes and regulations show what Congress did tax. Whether the courts think Congress has the constitutional power to tax the income of all Americans is only relevant if Congress attempts to impose such a tax, which has not occurred. (The courts cannot expand the scope of a tax just by saying that Congress could have taxed more if they had wanted to.)

Brief mention should be made of the 16th Amendment to the Constitution, since there is a common but erroneous belief that the 16th Amendment expanded Congress’ power to impose direct taxes on incomes. The purpose of the 16th Amendment, according to the Supreme Court in Brushaber v. Union Pacific Railroad Co., 240 U.S. 1 (1916), and again in Stanton v. Baltic Mining Co., 240 U.S. 103 (1916) was to make it clear that the income tax is, and has always been, an indirect “excise” tax, which never required apportionment. The Secretary of the Treasury agreed with the Court in Treasury Decision 2303:

"The Sixteenth Amendment. The provisions of the sixteenth amendment conferred no new power of taxation, but simply prohibited Congress’ original power to tax incomes from being taken out of the category of indirect taxation, to which it inherently belonged, and being placed in the category of direct taxation subject to apportionment."

[Treasury Decision 2303]
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

An in-depth explanation of direct and indirect taxes, and how they must be imposed, is not necessary here. The only relevant point is that Congress’ taxing jurisdiction was not expanded by the 16th Amendment.

QUESTION FOR DOUBTERS: Under Article I, Section 8 (first clause) of the Constitution, can Congress control anything and everything within the 50 Union states, provided that that control is exerted through tax legislation?

But, after all this discussion of what the courts think, in the end that is irrelevant. As the statutes and regulations show, the income tax was not imposed on the income of most Americans, regardless of the “conventional wisdom” on the subject. The above discussion is not an attempt to claim that Congress imposed an unconstitutional tax. (They did not.) It is to explain why Congress did not impose the tax that the American people have been tricked into believing exists. If Congress did not impose the tax, of what relevance is it whether the courts think they could have?

Because of the above restrictions, we would like to summarize the extent of Congress’ power to lay and collect taxes:

> “The Internal Revenue Code is precisely that: Internal to the ‘federal zone’, which includes the District of Columbia, and federal possessions and territories over which the U.S. Government is sovereign and has exclusive jurisdiction. The IRC therefore is a kind of municipal law for its regional holdings throughout the country and within federal enclaves situated within the borders of the 50 Union states, but does not apply to the states in their entirety. If and when those federal holdings transition to ownership either by the individual states or to citizens within the states of the Union, the federal government cedes or forfeits jurisdiction and control and sovereignty over those areas and they are then permanently covered by the Constitution in perpetuity to the exclusion of direct taxes.”

All laws that have applicability only within the federal zone are called “special law” or “private law” as opposed to “public law”, which has general applicability to all American Citizens:

special law: One relating to particular persons or things; one made for individual cases or for particular places or districts; one operating upon a selected class, rather than upon the public generally. A private law. A law is “special” when it is different from others of the same general kind or designed for a particular purpose, or limited in range or confined to a prescribed field of action or operation. A “special law” relates to either particular persons, places, or things or to persons, places, or things which, though not particularized, are separated by any method of selection from the whole class to which the law might, but not such legislation, be applied. Utah Farm Bureau Ins. Co. v. Utah Ins. Guaranty Ass’n, Utah, 564 P.2d, 751, 754. A special law applies only to an individual or a number of individuals out of a single class similarly situated and affected, or to a special locality. Board of County Com’rs of Lemhi County v. Swensen, Idaho, 80 Idaho 198, 327 P.2d, 361, 362. See also Private bill; Private law. Compare General law; Public law.

If you want to know more about the concept of the Internal Revenue Code and the Sixteenth Amendment being special law, refer to the following fascinating article on our website:

http://famguardian.org/Subjects/Taxes/16Amend/SpecialLaw/16thAmendIRC Irrelevant.htm

Throughout the discussion in this section, we have tried and will continue to try to be very careful about the use of the word “State”, because it is a “word of art” that has a different meaning in the IRC than in everyday usage, as we will point out later in section 5.2.13. That is why we have consistently either said “the 50 Union states” or “federal zone” instead of mixing the two definitions together and loosely calling both of them “States”. We encourage you to be just as careful how you use these terms yourself so you don’t confuse people and thereby undermine the tax freedom movement.

5.2.12 “United States” in the Internal Revenue Code means the federal zone OR the government, and excludes states of the Union

Based on sections 4.6 through 4.8 earlier, we’ll admit that it is easy to get confused about which of the three United States a particular section of the tax code is referring to. This kind of confusion was intended by the government, we believe, because that is how they get the wiggle room to deny due process and create a society of men rather than law: writing vague laws that can’t stand on their own and require a corrupt member of the legal profession (a “man”) to interpret before they can be properly applied. It’s quite common for people in the tax honesty movement to argue over the definition of the term “United States” and this kind of argument simply helps to point out the incomprehensibility and deliberate vagueness of the tax code.

5.2.12.1 Statutory geographical definitions
The following definitions imply that the United States meant in the Internal Revenue Code is federal territories and the "United States" mentioned in the previous section:

(a) When used in this title, where not otherwise distinctly expressed or manifestly incompatible with the intent thereof—

(9) United States

The term "United States" when used in a geographical sense includes only the States and the District of Columbia.

(10) State

The term "State" shall be construed to include the District of Columbia, where such construction is necessary to carry out provisions of this title.

You will note that "States" is the plural of "State", and that "State" refers only to the District of Columbia, which is part of the federal zone and is a federal State. This conclusion is further explained in section 5.2.13. But wait, there is only one District of Columbia and they used the plural form of "State" in the definition of "United States". What other federal "States" do we have? Here they are below in an excerpt from the Buck Act of 1940:

Notice the title of the Chapter above, which is "The States". These are federal states, and the same "the States" appearing in the definition of the term "United States" found in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) above. These same federal States are also the only States subject to the federal income tax or the territorial jurisdiction of the federal government! The above is from 4 U.S.C. Sections 104-113, also called the Buck Act of 1940, which was enacted by the federal government to allow states to institute state income or sales taxes inside of federal enclaves within sovereign states or in federal possessions like the Virgin Islands. An "enclave" is property within a sovereign state that has been ceded to the federal government by a state for use, for instance, as a military base or federal courthouse. As we explained in section 4.17, there are 50 artificial or federal "States" within the borders of the sovereign 50 "states" under the Buck Act. If we took all of the federal property within one of these sovereign "states" and grouped it together, this would be called a "State". The definition of "United States" found in the Treasury Regulations confirms our reasonable conclusions:

26 C.F.R. §1.911-2 Qualified Individuals

(g) United States.

The term "United States" when used in a geographical sense includes any territory under the sovereignty of the United States. It includes the states, the District of Columbia, the possessions and territories of the United States, the territorial waters of the United States, the air space over the United States, and the seabed and subsoil of those submarine areas which are adjacent to the territorial waters of the United States and over which the United States has exclusive rights, in accordance with international law, with respect to the exploration and exploitation of natural resources.

The important thing to remember about the above regulation is that they qualify the definition by saying "when used in a geographical sense". Lawyers love to play word games like this to confuse people and hide the truth. This definition implies that there may also be other senses in which the term is used, and it creates doubt and confusion in the reader because it is nearly impossible for the average American to know based on the context in many cases whether the term "United States" as used is indeed being used in its "geographical sense", or whether it is defined in the general sense found in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) to mean the federal zone or the federal corporation found in 28 U.S.C. §3002(15)(A). The focus of the statute, 26 U.S.C. §911, which this regulation was written for is to determine whether one is a citizen who is living "abroad", which in this case means outside of the federal zone AND the states of the Union, which we call the geographical United States.
Did you also notice in this regulation that the Secretary of the Treasury who wrote the regulation above didn’t capitalize “the states”, as if to imply that the Internal Revenue Code subtitle A applies throughout the sovereign 50 Union states? A lower case “states” implies a foreign state in legal lingo. Apparently, the Secretary of the Treasury wanted to avoid confusing the term “the States” found in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) with the sovereign 50 Union states so he made it lower case to avoid confusion, because he was the one who had to administer the tax code! Since the sovereign 50 Union states are not under the sovereignty of the federal government, then they are not part of the definition of the term “United States” found throughout Subtitles A through C of the Internal Revenue Code! The definition of “territory” as used above from Black’s Law Dictionary, Sixth Edition, p. 1473 underscores this point:

"Territory: A part of a country separated from the rest, and subject to a particular jurisdiction. Geographical area under the jurisdiction of another country or sovereign power.

A portion of the United States not within the limits of any state, which has not yet been admitted as a state of the Union, but is organized with a separate legislature, and with executive and judicial powers appointed by the President."

In the case of the current United States (the country), therefore, federal territories include Guam, the Virgin Islands, or Puerto Rico. These federal “States” and others are very clearly identified in Title 48 of the U.S. Code. You don’t therefore live in the “States” defined in Subtitles A through C of the tax code and you probably never have! The federal government will pretend like you live in the federal United States if you “volunteer”, however, by sending in a 1040 tax return. In that case, 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(39) confirms that when you file a 1040 tax return (not a 1040NR, but a 1040), even if you live in a state of the Union, the IRS and the federal courts will “pretend” like you live in the District of Columbia. In effect, you become a virtual citizen of the District of Criminals for the purpose of judicial jurisdiction:

TITLE 26 > Subtitle F > CHAPTER 79 > Sec. 7701.
Sec. 7701 - Definitions

(a) When used in this title, where not otherwise distinctly expressed or manifestly incompatible with the intent thereof -

(39) Persons residing outside United States

If any [federal “U.S.”] citizen or resident of the [federal] United States does not reside in (and is not found in) any United States judicial district, such citizen or resident shall be treated as residing in the District of Columbia for purposes of any provision of this title relating to -

(A) jurisdiction of courts, or
(B) enforcement of summons.

TITLE 26 > Subtitle F > CHAPTER 76 > Subchapter A > § 7408
§7408. Action to enjoin promoters of abusive tax shelters, etc.

(d) Citizens and residents outside the United States If any citizen or resident of the United States does not reside in, and does not have his principal place of business in, any United States judicial district, such citizen or resident shall be treated for purposes of this section as residing in the District of Columbia.

Do you think the slick lawyers in Congress would need a trick like the above to suck you into the federal zone if the Internal Revenue Code already defined the term “United States” as including the entire country? NOT!!!!!

Going back to the definitions of “United States” and “State” again found in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9)-(10) above, then by the rules of statutory construction, the plural of the word “State” may not have a different meaning or category than the singular of a word. The definition of “United States” also cannot have two different meanings either that depend on the context used, meaning that it can’t mean the federal zone for individuals and the geographical United States (the entire country) for other artificial entities, because Section 7701(a)(9) doesn’t provide two definitions or contexts. It can only have one meaning that can consistently be applied throughout the Internal Revenue Code.

Do either the definition of “United States” or “State” above express a clear intent to apply to areas outside the federal zone (federal properties coming under Article 1, Section 8, Clause 17 of the U.S. Constitution)? The answer is NO! Therefore, the term “United States” can only mean the “federal zone” within the context of the entire Internal Revenue Code as per U.S.
v. Spelar, 338 U.S. 217 at 222 (1949). We have no choice, as per the rulings of the Supreme Court, to reach any other conclusion. We wish to emphasize, however, that there are exceptions to this rule, as found in 26 U.S.C. §3121 and 26 U.S.C. §4612. These sections redefine the term “United States” within selected portions of the code and for special purposes related to excise taxes and FICA taxes. We therefore must conclude that the income tax, by default and absent an alternate or substitute definition of “United States”, only applies in the District of Columbia and other portions of the federal zone, based on the definitions above. The only exceptions to this conclusion are those portions of the Internal Revenue Code which use another definition of the term “United States”. 40 U.S.C. §3112 puts the nail in the coffin on this issue, in defining the extent of criminal jurisdiction of the “United States” government:

Don’t confuse yourself. The above use of the word “State” is different from that in Title 26, the I.R.C. It means the states of the Union and not the federal States. If you electronically search all of Title 40 as we have, you will not find a definition of “State” that applies to the above statute because they simply DO NOT want you knowing what it is and do not want to draw attention to the distinction between “federal States” and “Union states”! However, a definition that helps clarify what it means is found in 40 U.S.C. §1314:

So there you have it right from the deceitful horse’s mouth in 40 U.S.C. §3112 above! The United States government admits in its own laws that it does not have territorial jurisdiction over any land within the states of the union not explicitly ceded to it in writing by the state. The territorial jurisdiction we refer to is that relating to “Acts of Congress” and federal statutes, such as the Internal Revenue Code and the Title 18 Criminal code.

[U.S. v. Spelar, 338 U.S. 217 at 222 (1949)]

This includes jurisdiction to impose federal income taxes under Subtitles A, B, and C! Note that Subtitles D and E use a different definition of United States because they do apply throughout the country rather than just inside the federal zone or abroad. Why then, based on these conclusions, would the federal government have any jurisdiction over your private property or residence within a state, which also was never ceded to the federal government in writing? Worse yet, why would they have any jurisdiction over you if you weren’t a U.S. citizen and were instead a “national”? The answer is the U.S. government’s jurisdiction inside the states of the Union on land outside the federal zone doesn’t exist, other than to regulate and tax foreign commerce under Subtitles D and E of the Internal Revenue Code! Only the states have territorial jurisdiction there.

Another issue to consider is deciding whether “United States” means the “District of Columbia” or the “federal zone” is the definition of the term “employee” we will talk about later in section 5.2.19. Here’s the definition from 26 C.F.R. §31.3401(c):

The Great IRS Hoax: Why We Don’t Owe Income Tax, version 4.54
TOP SECRET: For Official Treasury/IRS Use Only (FOOU) Copyright Family Guardian Fellowship http://famguardian.org/
Here’s what the code says about such officer “employees”, and note that they all work only in the District of Columbia:

United States Code
TITLE 4 - FLAG AND SEAL, SEAT OF GOVERNMENT, AND THE STATES
CHAPTER 3 - SEAT OF THE GOVERNMENT
§ 73. Public offices; at seat of government,

All offices attached to the seat of government shall be exercised in the District of Columbia, and not elsewhere, except as otherwise expressly provided by law.

Another reason that the term “United States” found in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) cannot mean areas outside the federal zone are the following two portions of the Constitution of the United States of America:

Article 1, Section 9, Clause 5:

“No Tax or Duty shall be laid on Articles exported from any State.”

To tax wages earned from interstate commerce or exporting from a State to a foreign country would amount to an indirect duty on exports in violation of the above clause of the Constitution.

Getting back to the Buck Act of 1940 and these federal “States”, the question is, are the 50 sovereign “states” possessions or territories of the “United States”. The answer is emphatically NO. The 50 “states” of the United States of America are sovereign and are foreign jurisdictions with respect to the federal government and with respect to each other, as shown below:

Foreign States: “Nations outside of the United States...Term may also refer to another state; i.e. a sister state. The term ‘foreign nations’, ...should be construed to mean all nations and states other than that in which the action is brought; and hence, one state of the Union is foreign to another, in that sense.”

Foreign Laws: “The laws of a foreign country or sister state.”

As we read the above, we should recognize that what makes the federal and the state governments “foreign” with respect to each other is that they are mutually exclusive territorial jurisdictions and each have sovereignty within their respective territories. Because they are mutually exclusive territorial jurisdictions, that is why the U.S. Constitution requires the states to collect taxes for the federal government through apportionment in 1:9:4 and 1:2:3. Thomas Jefferson confirmed this

"With respect to our State and federal governments, I do not think their relations are correctly understood by foreigners. They generally suppose the former subordinate to the latter. But this is not the case. They are co-ordinate departments of one simple and integral whole. To the State governments are reserved all legislative and administration, in affairs which concern their own citizens only, and to the federal government is given whatever concerns foreigners, or the citizens of the other States; these functions alone being made federal. The one is domestic, the other the foreign branch of the same government; neither having control over the other, but within its own department."

The above conclusions of Thomas Jefferson are no accident. The U.S. Supreme Court very eloquently described why we have such a separation of powers between the federal and state governments and why they must be foreign with respect to each other in the case of U.S. v. Lopez, 514 U.S. 549 (1995):

We start with first principles. The Constitution creates a Federal Government of enumerated powers. See U.S. Const., Art. I, 8. As James Madison wrote, “[t]he powers delegated by the proposed Constitution to the federal government are few and defined. Those which are to remain in the State governments are numerous and indefinite.” The Federalist No. 45, pp. 292-293 (C. Rossiter ed. 1961). This constitutionally mandated division of authority "was adopted by the Framers to ensure protection of our fundamental liberties." Gregory v.
Therefore, the Internal Revenue Code Subtitles A through C DOES NOT apply to you, as these subtitles are a municipal tax that applies only on federal property and to persons domiciled on federal property but situated outside of federal property. I.R.C., Subtitle A has territorial jurisdiction only within the District of Columbia and other federal possessions, territories, and federal enclaves within the sovereign states and hereafter referred to as the “federal zone”. This is no accident, but is a direct result of the restrictions imposed on the U.S. Government in Article 1, Section 8, Clauses 1 and 3 of the U.S. Constitution. The Federalist Paper No. 36 drafted by the founding fathers confirms the limited ability of the federal government to tax individuals within the borders of the sovereign states:

“The more intelligent adversaries of the new Constitution admit the force of this reasoning: but they qualify their admission by a distinction between what they call INTERNAL and EXTERNAL taxation. The former they would reserve to the State governments; the latter, which they explain into commercial imposts, or rather duties on imported articles, they declare themselves willing to concede to the federal head.”

[Alexander Hamilton, Federalist Paper #36]

Even if the IRS wants to assert that you are a statutory “citizen of the [federal] United States” under 8 U.S.C. §1401 (which most people are not because they were not born or naturalized inside the federal zone in an area subject to the exclusive sovereignty of the U.S. government and are not domiciled there), they will still not be able to extend the jurisdiction of the federal courts or their taxing authority under Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A beyond the boundaries of the federal zone and foreign lands for the purposes of the Internal Revenue Code because of the above limitations. Incidentally, have you ever asked yourself what Subtitles A through C of the Revenue Code is Internal TO? They are Internal to the federal zone/United States! This may have something to do with why the Internal Revenue Code was never enacted into positive law and still stands only as prima facie evidence of law or special/municipal/private law.. because it has no effect on persons domiciled in the 50 Union states or outside of the federal zone anyway! Of course, if you receive federal payments as a foreign person, the government can withhold taxes from that, but they can’t apply the I.R.C., Subtitle A to nonresident persons. The more correct way to refer to yourself is not as a “resident or citizen of the United States”, both of whom have domicile in the federal zone, but as an American Nationals or natural born constitutional (but not statutory) Citizen of a state of the United States of America, which DOES NOT include the District of Columbia or the federal zone. You are a “non-resident non-persons” with respect to the foreign jurisdiction of the United States Internal Revenue Code!

For those of you who STILL don’t believe that the “United States” found in the Internal Revenue Code does NOT include areas outside of the federal zone, one of our readers (thanks Bob Conlon!) did an exhaustive and scholarly study of the I.R.C. at the following web address using their search engine:

https://www.law.cornell.edu/uscode/text/26/subtitle-A/chapter-1

Based on his findings, the definition of “United States” (sec.3121) that does not explicitly reference the 50 Union states is used in 29 different sections of the Internal Revenue Code (other than its own definition), however the definition that DOES explicitly refer as the “United States” to mean the 50 Union states, section 4612, is only used 3 times in the whole of TITLE 26, and the cases where it is used refer to excise taxes on gasoline!!!

It appears that all the sections that have to do with income tax, self-employment tax, etc. refer to 3121 AND NOT 4612. This is obviously done to obfuscate and confuse and to cause presumption, but the definition is clear as section 4612 will illustrate.

It says:

Title 26
Subtitle D-Miscellaneous Excise Taxes
Chapter 38-Environmental Taxes
Subchapter A- Tax on Petroleum
26 U.S.C. Sec. 4612(a)(4) - United States

(A) In general
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

The term “United States” means the 50 States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, any possession of the United States, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

United States Code
TITLE 26 - INTERNAL REVENUE CODE
Subtitle C - Employment Taxes
CHAPTER 21 - FEDERAL INSURANCE CONTRIBUTIONS ACT
Subchapter C - General Provisions
26 U.S.C. Sec. 3121(e)(2) - United States

The term “United States” when used in a geographical sense includes the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, and American Samoa. An individual who is a citizen of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico (but not otherwise a citizen of the United States) shall be considered, for purposes of this section, as a citizen of the United States.

Based on the above two definitions, it ought to be clear that Congress knows exactly how to define the term “United States” to include the 50 Union states when they want to, and that if they really meant the 50 Union states in section 3121, they would have said exactly that and eliminated this section and referred to section 4612 instead, BUT THEY DIDN’T by choice and would rather keep you guessing!

Below are the 'hits' our reader found for both sections 3121 and 4612 of the Internal Revenue Code (Title 26) and each gives the number of times references are made to each of the two definitions in all the code sections where these sections were referenced within the I.R.C. This research has made it very clear that if one doesn't live in a federal area but instead in nonfederal areas of the 50 Union states, no Subtitle A income tax or Subtitle C FICA tax liability exists!

As we look at the above table, we should realize that the ONLY source of Congressional jurisdiction to tax derives from Article 1, Section 8, Clauses 1 and 3 of the Constitution, which state:

Art. 1, Sect. 8, Clause 1: The Congress shall have Power To lay and collect Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises, to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defence and general Welfare of the United States; but all Duties, Imposts and Excises shall be uniform throughout the United States;

Art. 1, Sect. 8, Clause 3: To regulate Commerce with foreign Nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian Tribes;

Now if we look at the last sentence in 1:8:1 of the Constitution and then we consider that graduated income taxes are NOT uniform throughout the United States, but instead are highly non-uniform and most oppressive on the rich, then the graduated income tax instituted on nonresident alien individuals with income “effectively connected with a trade or business in the United States” referenced in 26 U.S.C. §871(b) would be unconstitutional if the definition of “United States” meant the 50 Union states or the nonfederal areas of the states! Remember, however, the meaning of “trade or business” from section 3.12.1.22, which is a “word of art” that really means the holding of “public office” in the U.S. federal government! The only persons who really fit the description of “trade or business” in the U.S. are those who elect or volunteer to be treated that way. No one else really fits that description because Congressmen conveniently excluded their wages from the definition of “wages” found in 26 U.S.C. §3401(a). Hypocrites!

Moving our discussion along, 26 U.S.C. §871(a) applies a 30% flat UNIFORM tax on income not connected with a U.S. business that is derived from U.S. sources (in this case, the federal government). This tax applies to corporations with income originating within the territorial jurisdiction of the federal government, which is only within the federal zone or to persons domiciled in the federal zone but temporarily abroad for Subtitle A taxes as per 40 U.S.C. §3112. Try to explain that one away. The U.S. supreme Court agreed that taxes that were not uniform throughout the “United States” were unconstitutional outside of the federal United States in the landmark case of Pollock v. Farmers’ Loan & Trust Co., 157 U.S. 429, 158 U.S. 601 (1895):

“... the law is invalid, because imposing indirect taxes in violation of the constitutional requirement of uniformity, and therein also in violation of the implied limitation upon taxation that all tax laws must apply equally, impartially, and uniformly to all similarly situated. Under the second head, it is contended that the rule of uniformity is violated, in that the law taxes the income of certain corporations, companies, and associations, no matter how created or organized, at a higher rate than the incomes of individuals or partnerships derived from precisely similar property or business; in that it exempts from the operation of the act and from the burden of taxation numerous corporations, companies, and associations having similar property and carrying on similar business to those expressly taxed; in that it denies to individuals deriving their income from shares in certain corporations, companies, and associations the benefit of the exemption of $ 4,000 granted to other persons interested in similar property and business; in the exemption of $4,000; in the exemption of building and loan associations, savings banks, mutual life, fire, marine, and accident insurance companies, existing solely for the pecuniary profit of their members; these and other exemptions being alleged to be purely arbitrary and capricious, justified by no public purpose, and of such magnitude as to invalidate the entire enactment; and in other particulars. ”

Here are a few more examples of constitutional, UNIFORM taxes imposed on people living outside the “United States” (the federal zone), and ALL of them are exactly 30% and are not graduated:

- 26 U.S.C. Sec. 881. Tax on income of foreign corporations not connected with United States business
- 26 U.S.C. Sec. 1441. Withholding of tax on nonresident aliens
- 26 U.S.C. Sec. 1442. Withholding of tax on foreign corporations

The authority to regulate commerce defined in 1:8:1 of the U.S. Constitution implies the authority to tax that commerce, but the only tax authorized on income in that part of the constitution are excise or privilege taxes based on privileges received from the federal government by public officers of the U.S. government or U.S. registered corporations (not state corporations). This excludes the vast majority of Americans and businesses, and the IRS and the Congress are loath to admit this.

5.2.12.2 Meaning of “resident” within the I.R.C.

Most people falsely PRESUME that the word “resident” within the Internal Revenue Code is associated with a geographic place. This presumption is false because:

1. The word “resident” is nowhere associated with a geographic place within the I.R.C. It is therefore a violation of due process of law to PRESUME that it is.
2. As we repeatedly point out in the following document, the I.R.C., Subtitles A through C are a franchise, and that all franchises are contracts or agreements:

   Debitum et contractus non sunt nullius loci.

   Debt and contract [franchise agreement, in this case] are of no particular place.

   Locus contractus regit actum.

   The place of the contract [franchise agreement, in this case] governs the act.

   [Bouvier’s Maxims of Law, 1856; SOURCE: http://famguardian.org/Publications/BouvierMaximsOfLaw/BouviersMaxims.htm]

3. There is a maxim of law that debt and contract are independent of place.

Consistent with the above, the Treasury Regulations at one time admitted the above indirectly as follows:

26 C.F.R. §301.7701-5 Domestic, foreign, resident, and nonresident persons.

A domestic corporation is one organized or created in the United States, including only the States (and during the periods when not States, the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii), and the District of Columbia, or under the law of the United States or of any State or Territory. A foreign corporation is one which is not domestic. A domestic corporation is a resident corporation even though it does no business and owns no property in the United States. A foreign corporation engaged in trade or business within the United States is referred to in the regulations in this chapter as a resident foreign corporation, and a foreign corporation not engaged in trade or business within the United States, as a nonresident foreign corporation. A partnership engaged in trade or business within the United States is referred to in the regulations in this chapter as a resident partnership, and a partnership not engaged in trade or business within the United States, as a nonresident partnership. Whether a partnership is to be regarded as resident or nonresident is not determined by the nationality or residence of its members or by the place in which it was created or organized.

Notice the language above:

“Whether a partnership is to be regarded as resident or nonresident is not determined by the nationality or residence of its members or by the place in which it was created or organized.”

This is a tacit admission that the status of BEING a “resident” has nothing to do with a geographic place and instead is a FRANCHISE STATUS which is created by the coincidence of the grant of a “congressionally created right” or “public right” AND your consent to adopt the status and franchise PRIVILEGES associated with that public right or privilege.

Therefore, the ONLY way one can be a statutory “resident” is to be LAWFULLY engaged in a statutory “trade or business”, which is defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(26) as “the functions of a public office”.

Why do they do this? Because ALL PUBLIC OFFICES are domiciled in the District of Columbia:

Hence, by being associated with a public office, your legal identity is legally kidnapped under the authority of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 17(b) and transported to the District of Columbia, which in turn is the ONLY place expressly included in the definition of “United States” within the Internal Revenue Code.

The Great IRS Hoax: Why We Don’t Owe Income Tax, version 4.54
TOP SECRET: For Official Treasury/IRS Use Only (FOUO) Copyright Family Guardian Fellowship http://famguardian.org/
The term “State” shall be construed to include the District of Columbia, where such construction is necessary to carry out provisions of this title.

Pursuant to the rules of statutory construction, that which is not EXPRESSLY included must be conclusively presumed to be purposefully excluded. Hence, states of the Union are purposefully excluded from being within the “United States” in a geographic sense:

“Expressio unius est exclusio alterius. A maxim of statutory interpretation meaning that the expression of one thing is the exclusion of another. Burgin v. Forbes, 293 Ky. 456, 169 S.W.2d. 321, 325; Newblock v. Bowles, 170 Okl. 487, 40 P.2d. 1097, 1100. Mention of one thing implies exclusion of another. When certain persons or things are specified in a law, contract, or will, an intention to exclude all others from its operation may be inferred. Under this maxim, if statute specifies one exception to a general rule or assumes to specify the effects of a certain provision, other exceptions or effects are excluded.”

Note that all income taxes are based upon domicile, as in the case of the I.R.C., Subtitle A through C “income tax”. However, the domicile is INDIRECT rather than direct. The PUBLIC OFFICE is the thing domiciled in the Federal Zone and not the human being filling it, who can geographically be a “nonresident”.

The other noteworthy thing about this SCAM is that the 26 C.F.R. §301.7701-5 regulation cited above encompasses ALL “persons” within the I.R.C., and NOT just corporations and partnerships. It expressly mentions only corporations and partnerships, but in fact, these ARE the only entities EXPRESSLY included within the definition of “person” for the purposes of BOTH civil AND criminal jurisdiction of the I.R.C., and hence, describes ALL “persons” within the I.R.C.

Why do they mention “partnerships” in the above definition? Because whenever you consent to occupy a public office in the U.S. government, a partnership is formed between the otherwise PRIVATE HUMAN BEING and the PUBLIC OFFICE that the person fills. THAT partnership is how the legal statutory “person” who is the proper subject of the I.R.C. is lawfully created. The problem, however, is that you CANNOT lawfully elect yourself into a public office, even with your consent. In order for a lawful election or appointment must occur, you must take a lawful oath, and only THEN can one become a lawful public office. If there is a deviation from this procedure for creating public offices, a crime has been committed pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §912.

Another important implication is that anyone who PRESUMES you are a “resident” is effectively “electing” you into a public office. If you don’t object to that usually false presumption, then a cage is reserved for you on the federal corporate plantation in the District of Criminals. We call this “theft and kidnapping by presumption”.

Finally, don’t go searching for the 26 C.F.R. §301.7701-5 regulation indicated in the CURRENT Code of Federal Regulations. As soon as we pointed it out on our website, it was conveniently HID and replaced with a temporary regulation. Now you know WHY it was hid. You will have to go back to the historical versions of the regulations to find it, so please don’t contact us to tell you you can’t find it. THEY HID IT to protect their CRIMINAL racketeering enterprise. Would you expect anything less when you create a Babylon corporation in the District of Criminals, turn it into a haven for financial terrorists, and put CRIMINALS in charge of writing laws that only protect them and which are designed to SCREW you?

5.2.12.3 How States of the Union are illegally treated as statutory “States” under federal law

By default, states of the Union mentioned in the Constitution:

1. Are sovereign and legislatively foreign in respect to federal legislative jurisdiction.
2. Are not subject to federal civil or criminal law.
3. Function in nearly every particular as independent nations under the law of nations.

The above facts are covered further in the next section. Like any other legal entity or “person”, however, a state of the Union can make themselves subject to private foreign law by exercising their right to contract with an otherwise foreign entity. This process of contracting operates under equity and in that capacity, the state behaves as the equivalent of a private person contracting with other private persons:

When a State engages in ordinary commercial ventures, it acts like a private person, outside the area of its "core" responsibilities, and in a way unlikely to prove essential to the fulfillment of a basic governmental obligation. A Congress that decides to regulate those state commercial activities rather than to exempt the State likely believes that an exemption, by treating the State differently from identically situated private persons, would threaten the objectives of a federal regulatory program aimed primarily at private conduct. Compare, e.g., 12 U.S.C. §1841(b) (1994 ed., Supp. III) (exempting state companies from regulations covering federal bank holding companies); 15 U.S.C. §77(c)(a)(2) (exempting state-issued securities from federal securities laws); and 29 U.S.C. §652(5) (exempting States from the definition of "employer[s]" subject to federal occupational safety and health laws), with 11 U.S.C. §106(a) (subjecting States to federal bankruptcy court judgments); 15 U.S.C. §1122(a) (subjecting States to suit for violation of Lanham Act); 17 U.S.C. §511(a) (subjecting States to suit for copyright infringement); 35 U.S.C. §271(h) (subjecting States to suit for patent infringement). And a Congress that includes the State not only within its substantive regulatory rules but also (expressly) within a related system of private remedies likely believes that a remedial exemption would similarly threaten that program. See Florida Prepaid Postsecondary Ed. Expense Bd. v. College Savings Bank, ante, at ___ (Stevens, J., dissenting). It thereby avoids an enforcement gap which, when allied with the pressures of a competitive marketplace, could place the State’s regulated private competitors at a significant disadvantage.

These considerations make Congress’ need to possess the power to condition entry into the market upon a waiver of sovereign immunity (as "necessary and proper" to the exercise of its commerce power) unusually strong, for to deny Congress that power would deny Congress the power effectively to regulate private conduct. Cf. California v. Taylor, 353 U.S. 553, 566 (1957). At the same time they make a State’s need to exercise sovereign immunity unusually weak, for the State is unlikely to have to supply what private firms already supply, nor may it fairly demand special treatment, even to protect the public purse, when it does so. Neither can one easily imagine what the Constitution’s founders would have thought about the assertion of sovereign immunity in this special context. These considerations, differing in kind or degree from those that would support a general congressional "abrogation" power, indicate that Parden’s holding is sound, irrespective of this Court’s decisions in Seminole Tribe of Fla. v. Florida, 517 U.S. 44 (1996), and Alden v. Maine, ante, p. ___.

Notice the above statement:

These considerations make Congress’ need to possess the power to condition entry into the market upon a waiver of sovereign immunity (as "necessary and proper" to the exercise of its commerce power) unusually strong, for to deny Congress that power would deny Congress the power effectively to regulate private conduct.

The U.S. Congress has the right to regulate foreign or interstate commerce, regardless of whether it is a constitutional state engaging in the commerce or simply a private human being or business. Therefore, only after a sovereignty such as a Constitutional state government contracts as the equivalent of a private party in commerce can it become a “person” under the contract or franchise that it consented to. That waiver of sovereignty and sovereign immunity is mandated by the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act (F.S.I.A.), which says in pertinent part:

TITLE 28 > PART IV > CHAPTER 97 > § 1605

The Great IRS Hoax: Why We Don’t Owe Income Tax, version 4.54
TOP SECRET: For Official Treasury/IRS Use Only (FOOU) Copyright Family Guardian Fellowship http://famguardian.org/
§1605. General exceptions to the jurisdictional immunity of a foreign state

(a) A foreign state shall not be immune from the jurisdiction of courts of the United States or of the States in any case—

(2) in which the action is based upon a commercial activity carried on in the United States by the foreign state; or upon an act performed in the United States in connection with a commercial activity of the foreign state elsewhere; or upon an act outside the territory of the United States in connection with a commercial activity of the foreign state elsewhere and that act causes a direct effect in the United States;

That process of consent can only be in relation to a private party because it cannot lawfully do any of the following without violating the separation of powers doctrine:

1. Agree to be treated as a federal territory or statutory "State".
2. Contract away its sovereignty to the national government.

No doubt, a state of the Union may procure a formerly private business or create a business of its own that engages in interstate commerce and thereby become subject to federal regulation, but they can do so only indirectly as the equivalent of a private party on the same footing as every other private party engaging in regulated activity. And in that capacity, they are a private person and not a statutory “State” under federal law.

Ordinarily, when the federal government is legislating for constitutional states, it uses the phrase “several States” just as it is used in the Constitution itself. Here are some examples:

United States Constitution
Article IV, Section 2

The Citizens of each State shall be entitled to all Privileges and Immunities of Citizens in the several States.

On the other hand, when the U.S. Congress wants to legislate for federal territories and possessions, it uses the term “the States” rather than “the SEVERAL States”:

...
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

20 C.F.R. §422.404.2

Social Security

(6) United States, when used in a geographical sense, includes, unless otherwise indicated:

(i) The States,
(ii) The Territories of Alaska and Hawaii prior to January 3, 1959, and August 21, 1959, respectively, when they acquired statehood,
(iii) The District of Columbia,
(iv) The Virgin Islands,
(v) The Commonwealth of Puerto Rico effective January 1, 1951, (vi) Guam and American Samoa, effective September 13, 1960, generally, and for purposes of sections 210(a) and 211 of the Act, effective after 1960 with respect to service performed after 1960, and effective for taxable years beginning after 1960 with respect to crediting net earnings from self-employment and self-employment income, and

We allege that a violation of due process of law, a violation of the separation of powers, and treason on the part of the judge has occurred when any Court:

1. Includes constitutional states of the Union operating in the PUBLIC capacity as GOVERNMENTS within the statutory definition of:
   1.1. “State” within any act of Congress.
2. Treats a constitutional State as a statutory “State” under federal law under the auspices of the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act as indicated above. Instead, they must be treated as a private “person” and NOT a statutory “State”, which is the equivalent of a federal territory.
3. Imputes a different meaning or class of things to the plural “States” or “the States” than it does to the definition of the singular version of “State”. For instance, 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(10) defines “State” as the District of Columbia and does not define the plural but includes the plural within the definition of “United States” in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9). It is a rule of statutory construction that the plural cannot have a different meaning than the similar:

TITLE 26 > Subtitle F > CHAPTER 79 > Sec. 7701. [Internal Revenue Code]
Sec. 7701. - Definitions

(a) When used in this title, where not otherwise distinctly expressed or manifestly incompatible with the intent thereof—

(9) United States

The term "United States" when used in a geographical sense includes only the States and the District of Columbia.

(10) State

The term "State" shall be construed to include the District of Columbia, where such construction is necessary to carry out provisions of this title.

What judges seem to like to do to unconstitutionally expand their jurisdiction is to use the word “includes” as a means to add anything they want to the definition of a term, but this clearly violates the rules of statutory construction, due process of law, and the separation of powers doctrine:

"It is apparent that a constitutional prohibition cannot be transgressed indirectly by the creation of a statutory presumption any more than it can be violated by direct enactment. The power to create presumptions is not a means of escape from constitutional restrictions."
[Bailey v. Alabama, 219 U.S. 219 (1911)]

"Expressio unius est exclusio alterius. A maxim of statutory interpretation meaning that the expression of one thing is the exclusion of another. Burgin v. Forbes, 293 Ky. 456, 169 S.W.2d. 321, 325; Newblock v. Bowles, 170 Okl. 487, 40 P.2d. 1097, 1100. Mention of one thing implies exclusion of another. When certain persons or things are specified in a law, contract, or will, an intention to exclude all others from its operation may be inferred. Under this maxim, if statute specifies one exception to a general rule or assumes to specify the effects of a certain provision, other exceptions or effects are excluded."

Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

“When a statute includes an explicit definition, we must follow that definition, even if it varies from that term’s ordinary meaning. Meese v. Keene, 481 U.S. 465, 484-485 (1987) (“It is axiomatic that the statutory definition of the term excludes unstated meanings of that term”); Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. at 392-393, n. 10 (“As a rule, ‘a definition which declares what a term “means” . . . excludes any meaning that is not stated’”); Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Lenroot, 323 U.S. 490, 502 (1945); Fox v. Standard Oil Co. of N.J., 294 U.S. 87, 95-96 (1935) (Cardozo, J.); see also 2A N. Singer, Sutherland on Statutes and Statutory Construction § 47.07, p. 152, and n. 10 (5th ed. 1992) (collecting cases). That is to say, the statute, read “as a whole,” post at 998 [530 U.S. 943] (THOMAS, J., dissenting), leads the reader to a definition. That definition does not include the Attorney General’s restriction -- “the child up to the head.” Its words, “substantial portion,” indicate the contrary.”

[Stenberg v. Carhart, 530 U.S. 914 (2000)]

Any judge who violates these rules and tries to include a constitutional state into a statutory State under federal law ought to be called on it, because he/she is clearly:

1. Exceeding his/her delegated authority.
2. Legislating from the bench by adding to the definition of words. This violates the separation of powers between the Judicial Branch and the Legislative Branch.
3. Violating the separation of powers doctrine between the states and the federal government. See:

   Government Conspiracy to Destroy the Separation of Powers, Form #05.023
   http://sedm.org/Forms/Formlndex.htm

4. Engaging in a conspiracy to destroy your Constitutional rights. The MAIN purpose of the separation of powers is to protect your constitutional rights. Disregarding it is a violation of rights.

“We start with first principles. The Constitution creates a Federal Government of enumerated powers. See U.S. Const., Art. I, 8. As James Madison wrote, “[t]he powers delegated by the proposed Constitution to the federal government are few and defined. Those which are to remain in the State governments are numerous and indefinite.” The Federalist No. 45, pp. 292-293 (C. Rossiter ed. 1961). This constitutionally mandated division of authority "was adopted by the Framers to ensure protection of our fundamental liberties." Gregory v. Ashcroft, 501 U.S. 452, 458 (1991) (internal quotation marks omitted). “Just as the separation and independence of the coordinate branches of the Federal Government serves to prevent the accumulation of excessive power in any one branch, a healthy balance of power between the States and the Federal Government will reduce the risk of tyranny and abuse from either front.” Ibid.

5. Violating due process of law by making false presumptions and depriving other litigants of the EQUAL right to presume what IS NOT included in the definition.

We end this section with a comparison between STATUTORY states under federal law and CONSTITUTIONAL states under the United States Constitution. They are NOT the same and no federal or state judge can lawfully make them the same without committing a crime!

5.2.12.4 Meaning of “United States” within IRS Publications: The GOVERNMENT and not a geographical place

Even within federal territories and possessions such as Puerto Rico and American Samoa, IRS Publication 519 describes the following requirements:

“Bona Fide Residents of American Samoa or Puerto Rico”
If you are a nonresident alien who is a bona fide resident of American Samoa or Puerto Rico for the entire tax year, you generally are taxed the same as resident aliens. You should file Form 1040 and report all income from sources both in and outside the United States. However, you can exclude the income discussed in the following paragraphs.

For tax purposes other than reporting income, however, you will be treated as a nonresident alien.

Residents of Puerto Rico.

If you are a bona fide resident of Puerto Rico for the entire tax year, you can exclude from gross income all income from sources in Puerto Rico (other than amounts for service performed as an employee of the United States or any of its agencies).

Residents of American Samoa.

If you are a bona fide resident of American Samoa for the entire year, you can exclude from gross income all income from sources in American Samoa (other than amounts for services performed as an employee of the U.S. government or any of its agencies).

[IRS Publication 519 (2009), pp. 33-34]

Based on the above, the following conclusions are inevitable and are the ONLY thing that is entirely consistent with the I.R.C., all the court cases we have read, and the I.R.S. publications in their entirety:

2. Puerto Rico and American Samoa do not count as “sources within the United States” per 26 U.S.C. §861 except in the case of:

   “...amounts for service performed as an employee of the United States or any of its agencies”

3. People domiciled in Puerto Rico and American Samoa are treated as:
   3.1. “Resident aliens” under 26 U.S.C. §7701(b)(1)(A) for the purpose of reporting ONLY
   These territories are therefore NOT within the statutory “United States”.
4. Because taxation is limited to services performed as a statutory “employee” of the United States per 5 U.S.C. §2105(a) and 26 U.S.C. §3401(c) and EXCLUDES private earnings, then “sources within the United States” as identified in 26 U.S.C. §861 REALLY can only mean THE GOVERNMENT and not any geographic place. This is also consistent with 26 U.S.C. §864(c)(3):

   TITLE 26 > Subtitle A > CHAPTER 1 > Subchapter N > PART I > § 864
   §864. Definitions and special rules
   (c) Effectively connected income, etc.
   (3) Other income from sources within United States

   All income, gain, or loss from sources within the United States (other than income, gain, or loss to which paragraph (2) applies) shall be treated as effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business within the United States.

The ONLY place where ALL earnings are connected with a public office and a statutory “trade or business” is the United States Government in the District of Columbia, and more particularly, among statutory “employees”, all of whom are identified in 5 U.S.C. §2105(a) as public officers by being called an “officer and individual”:

   TITLE 5 > PART III > Subpart A > CHAPTER 21 > § 2105
   §2105. Employee
   (a) For the purpose of this title, “employee”, except as otherwise provided by this section or when specifically modified, means an officer and an individual who is—
5. “United States” is used in TWO senses within the I.R.C.: (1) The GEOGRAPHIC SENSE and (2) The GOVERNMENT SENSE.

5.1. Not all senses of the term “United States” are defined in Title 26, but rather only one of the TWO senses, which is the GEOGRAPHIC SENSE. The definitions at 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) and (a)(10) and 4 U.S.C. §110(d) are, in fact, a red herring and define only ONE of the two contexts.

5.2. If they identified exactly which of these two senses was intended for every use, their FRAUD would have to end immediately. So they keep it quiet, leave undue discretion to judges to decide because of incomplete and vague definitions, and abuse presumption and propaganda to expand their jurisdiction unlawfully.

5.3. The term “United States” as used within the phrase “sources within the United States” in 26 U.S.C. §861 is NOT used in a GEOGRAPHIC SENSE found in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) and (a)(10) and 4 U.S.C. §110(d), but rather in the “GOVERNMENT” sense ONLY. Why? Because only earnings of government statutory “employees” or instrumentalities acting as public officers are counted as taxable “gross income”.

6. The term “the States” as used in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) really can only mean federal corporations that are part of the U.S. government and not constitutional states of the Union. This is confirmed by:

6.1. The following holding of the U.S. Supreme Court, which confirms that “income” within the meaning of the revenue laws means corporate profit:

"Income has been taken to mean the same thing as used in the Corporation Excise Tax Act of 1909 (36 Stat. 112) in the 16th Amendment, and in the various revenue acts subsequently passed."

6.2. The fact that Congress is forbidden by the U.S. Constitution from creating a state within a state or from enacting civil legislation enforceable within the borders of a Constitutional but not statutory state per Article 4, Section 3, Clause 1, or from treating states of the Union as either federal territories or statutory “States” within the meaning of the I.R.C.

United States Constitution
Article 4: States Relations
Section 3.

New States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union; but no new State shall be formed or erected within the Jurisdiction of any other State; nor any State be formed by the Junction of two or more States, or Parts of States, without the Consent of the Legislatures of the States concerned as well as of the Congress.

6.3. The following holding of the U.S. Supreme Court, which confirms that federal territories and therefore statutory “States” are all corporation franchises. Notice also that they define an “individual” as a “corporation sole”, thus implying that the “individual” within the I.R.C. is in fact a corporation sole.

At common law, a "corporation" was an "artificial person[ ] endowed with the legal capacity of perpetual succession" consisting either of a single individual (termed a "corporation sole") or of a collection of several individuals (a "corporation aggregate"). 3 H. Stephen, Commentaries on the Laws of England 166, 168 (1st Am. ed. 1845). The sovereign was considered a corporation. See id., at 170; see also 1 W. Blackstone, Commentaries *467. Under the definitions supplied by contemporary law dictionaries, Territories would have been classified as "corporations" (and hence as "persons") at the time that 1983 was enacted and the Dictionary Act recodified. See W. Anderson, A Dictionary of Law 261 (1893) ("All corporations were originally modeled upon
7. The statutory “citizen” or “resident” or “U.S. person” all are synonymous with the GOVERNMENT CORPORATION and NOT a human being. That corporation described in 28 U.S.C. §3002(15)(A) itself is a statutory but not constitutional “U.S. citizen”, “U.S. resident”, and “U.S. person”.

“A corporation is a citizen, resident, or inhabitant of the state or country by or under the laws of which it was created, and of that state or country only.”

[19 Corpus Juris Secundum (C.J.S.), Corporations, ¶886 (2003)]

8. The term “United States” as defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) and (a)(10) must by implication be limited to ONLY those DOMICILED in the District of Columbia, WHEREVER physically situated. A person who is a “bona fide resident” of Puerto Rico or American Samoa, for instance, could not ALSO be a resident anywhere else because you can only have a DOMICILE in ONE PLACE at a time. Hence, they would not be domiciled within the statutory “United States”.

9. The only real “taxpayer” is a public office in the U.S. government and not state government. It is THIS statutory “taxpayer” who is the REAL “person” and “individual” mentioned in the I.R.C. and NOT the public officer filling the office. The public officer is a “partner” with the public office and he/she/it represents this public office and “taxpayer” as a “transferee” when information returns are filed against the office or against the name of the officer. See 26 U.S.C. §§6901 and 6903.

10. Even in the case of “nonresident aliens” as described in 26 U.S.C. §7701(b)(1)(B), a domicile on federal territory is still involved in the case of the statutory “taxpayer”. Why? Because the statutory “person” and “individual” being taxed is NOT the nonresident entity or human being, but the PUBLIC OFFICE filled by the entity through the “trade or business” franchise contract. The PUBLIC OFFICE is domiciled on federal territory but the PUBLIC OFFICER is NOT. The PUBLIC OFFICE is surety for the PUBLIC OFFICE through the “trade or business” franchise contract. Hence, the tax is an indirect excise tax as repeatedly held by the U.S. Supreme Court. 26 U.S.C. §671(b) and 26 U.S.C. §7343 both confirm that the legal definition of “person” for the purpose of the I.R.C. is an “officer or employee of a corporation or partnership” who has a FIDUCIARY DUTY to the public and therefore is a public officer. The “partnership” they are referring to is the franchise partnership between the OFFICE and the OFFICER. The only way that fiduciary duty could be created is through a franchise contract or quasi-contract because it is otherwise illegal to punish someone for NOT doing something. This would be forbidden by the Thirteenth Amendment as “involuntary servitude”.

11. Consent of the Human Being is required to turn that PRIVATE human being into a public officer and it is a crime in violation of 18 U.S.C. §912 to unilaterally elect yourself into public office by either signing a tax form or using a Taxpayer Identification Number when NOT actually occupying said public office created under the authority of Title 5 and not Title 26 of the U.S. Code.

12. The reader should also note that it is “nonresident alien INDIVIDUALS” made liable for tax returns in 26 C.F.R. §1.6012-1(b), and NOT “nonresident aliens” who are NOT “individuals”. Hence: 12.1. “nonresident aliens” who are NOT statutory “Individuals” or “persons” are not engaged in the “trade or business” franchise.

12.2. “nonresident aliens” as described in 26 C.F.R. §1.6012-1(b) ARE public officers.

13. The word “INTERNAL” within the phrase “INTERNAL Revenue Service” means INTERNAL to the U.S. government corporation, and not INTERNAL to the geographical or statutory “United States”.

14. The I.R.C., Subtitles A through C behaves as a public officer kickback program disguised to “look” like a legitimate income tax. The feds have never been able to regulate or tax private conduct and only have the authority to impose duties upon their own statutory “employees” without just compensation. Hence, through “words of art”, presumption, Consistent with the above, the following regulation betrays the above CONSTRUCTIVE FRAUD. Notice that what makes an entity “resident” is whether they are engaged in a public office and therefore a statutory “trade or business” under 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(26), and that residency has ABSOLUTELY NOTHING TO DO WITH THE NATIONALITY OR CITIZENSHIP OR EVEN THE DOMICILE of the entity:

26 C.F.R. §301.7701-5 Domestic, foreign, resident, and nonresident persons.

A domestic corporation is one organized or created in the United States, including only the States (and during the periods when not States, the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii), and the District of Columbia, or under the law of the United States or of any State or Territory. A foreign corporation is one which is not domestic. A domestic corporation is a resident corporation even though it does no business and owns no property in the United States. A foreign corporation engaged in trade or business within the United States is referred to in the regulations in this chapter as a resident foreign corporation, and a foreign corporation not engaged in trade or business within the United States, as a nonresident foreign corporation. A partnership engaged in trade or business within the United States is referred to in the regulations in this chapter as a resident partnership, and a partnership not engaged in trade or business within the United States, as a nonresident partnership. Whether a partnership is to be regarded as resident or nonresident is not determined by the nationality or residence of its members or by the place in which it was created or organized.

Also consistent with the content of this section, IRS Form 1040NR also describes those from American Samoa and Swains Island as “U.S. nationals” (8 U.S.C. §1408) and “nonresident aliens”. The IRS 1040NR Form, block 1 filing status lists the following:

☐ Single resident of Canada or Mexico, or a single U.S. national

Then, in the IRS Form 1040 Instruction Book for 2009 on p. 8, it says the following:

“U.S. national. A U.S. national is an individual who, although not a U.S. citizen, owes his or her allegiance to the United States. U.S. nationals include American Samoans and Northern Mariana Islanders who chose to become U.S. nationals instead of U.S. citizens.”

[IRS Form 1040NR Instruction Booklet (2009), p. 8]

We prove throughout this document that people born within and domiciled within constitutional states of the Union are all of the following, and therefore have the status equivalent to that above and are:

1. Statutory “non-resident non-persons” if not engaged in a public office.
4. NOT any of the following:
   4.1. STATUTORY “U.S. nationals” or “nationals but not citizens of the United States” at birth” per 8 U.S.C. §1408.

By deduction, since IRS describes those domiciled in federal territories and possessions such as Puerto Rico and American Samoa as “nationals of the United States” per 8 U.S.C. §1101(a)(22) per the Internal Revenue Code, then people domiciled in states of the Union must have at least the same standing, which means they are statutory “non-resident non-persons” if not engaged in a public office and “nonresident aliens individuals” if engaged in a public office for the purposes of filing income tax returns. They don’t become “individuals” or the “nonresident alien individual” mentioned in 26 C.F.R. §1.6012-1(b) who has a liability to file a tax return unless and until they are lawfully engaged in a public office in the U.S. government. This is consistent with 26 C.F.R. §301.6109-1, which says that Taxpayer Identification Numbers are ONLY MANDATORY in the case of those engaged in a statutory “trade or business”, which is defined as “the functions of a public office” in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(26).

NOTE: By saying the above, we are NOT implying ANY of the following:

1. That the jurisdiction of the Internal Revenue Code is limited ONLY to the District of Columbia. Like all income taxes, it attaches to DOMICILE, and you can have a domicile or residence in the District of Columbia WITHOUT a physical presence there. Domicile is not where you ARE, but where you have been in the past AND CONSENT to be civilly protected.

   "Thus, the Court has frequently held that domicile or residence, more substantial than mere presence in transit or sojourn, is an adequate basis for taxation, including income, property, and death taxes. Since the Fourteenth Amendment makes one a citizen of the state wherein he resides, the fact of residence creates universally reciprocal duties of protection by the state and of allegiance and support by the citizen. The latter obviously includes a duty to pay taxes, and their nature and measure is largely a political matter. Of course, the situs of property may tax it regardless of the citizenship, domicile, or residence of the owner; the most obvious illustration being a tax on realty laid by the state in which the realty is located.”
   [Miller Brothers Co. v. Maryland, 347 U.S. 340 (1954)]

2. That the U.S. government is without authority to tax its own public offices. By “public office”, we mean “trade or business”, which is defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(26) as “the functions of a public office”. Instead, they can tax them ANYWHERE they are EXPRESSLY AUTHORIZED by law as required by 4 U.S.C. §72, which at this time is limited EXCLUSIVELY to the District of Columbia and the Virgin Islands. Anyone who asserts authority to tax outside the District of Columbia has the burden of PROVING with evidence that the public office subject to tax was expressly authorized to be executed in the specific place it is sought to be taxed.

   TITLE 4 > CHAPTER 3 > § 72
   Sec. 72. - Public offices; at seat of Government

   All offices attached to the seat of government shall be exercised in the District of Columbia, and not elsewhere, except as otherwise expressly provided by law.

5.2.13 “State” in the Internal Revenue Code means a “federal State” and not a Union state

5.2.13.1 Contemporary meaning

In something as important as a Congressional statute, one would think that key terms like “State” would be defined so clearly as to leave no doubt about their meaning. Alas, this is not the case in the Internal Revenue Code ("IRC") brought to you by Congress. The term "State" has been deliberately defined so as to confuse the casual reader into believing that it means one of the 50 States of the Union, even though it doesn’t say “50 Union states” in so many words. Throughout this section, we make a distinction between the term “United States”, which includes the 50 states of the union. This area does not include the federal areas, enclaves, or possessions or the District of Columbia, which we call the “federal zone”. We also use the term “United States”, which means the “federal zone” or area encompassing federal enclaves within states, federal possessions, Guam, Puerto Rico, and the District of Columbia but not the sovereign contiguous 50 Union states. These two terms are in agreement with the two jurisdictions within the United States of America defined earlier in section 5.2.12.

You might want to go to the beginning of this document under “Conventions Used Consistently Throughout This Book” and review the distinctions between the word “state” and “State” in federal statutes before you proceed further with reading this section in order to avoid confusion. Remember that the sequence a sovereignty was created defines the capitalization of words identifying that sovereignty, and the sequence of creation is defined earlier in section 5.1.1.

For the sake of comparison, we begin by crafting a definition of “State” which is deliberately designed to create absolutely no doubt or ambiguity about its meaning:
For the sole purpose of establishing a benchmark of clarity, the term "State" means any one of the 50 States of the Union, the District of Columbia, the territories and possessions belonging to the Congress, and the federal enclaves lawfully ceded to the Congress by any of the 50 States of the Union.

Now, compare this benchmark with the various definitions of the word "State" that are found in Black’s Law Dictionary and in the Internal Revenue Code. Black’s is a good place to start, because it clearly defines two different kinds of "states". The first kind of state defines a member of the Union, i.e., one of the 50 states which are united by and under the U.S. Constitution:

*The section of territory occupied by one of the United States. One of the component commonwealths or states of the United States of America.

[emphasis added]

The second kind of state defines a federal “State”, which is entirely different from a member of the Union:

Any state of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and any territory or possession subject to the legislative authority of the United States. Uniform Probate Code, Section 1-201(40).

[emphasis added]

This same definition of a federal “State” also appears elsewhere in the U.S. Codes. For instance, it appears as part of the Buck Act of 1940, which is contained in 4 U.S.C. §§105-113. 4 U.S.C. §110(d) defines “State” as follows:

TITLE 4 - FLAG AND SEAL, SEAT OF GOVERNMENT, AND THE STATES
CHAPTER 4 - THE STATES

(d) The term "State" includes any Territory or possession of the United States.

Notice carefully that a member of the Union is not defined as being "subject to the legislative authority of the United States". Also, be aware that there are also several different definitions of "State" in the IRC, depending on the context. One of the most important of these is found in a chapter specifically dedicated to providing definitions, that is, Chapter 79 (not exactly the front of the book). To de-code the Code, read it backwards! In this chapter of definitions, we find the following:

When used in this title, where not otherwise distinctly expressed or manifestly incompatible with the intent thereof

-- ...

(10) State. -- The term "State" shall be construed to include the District of Columbia, where such construction is necessary to carry out provisions of this title.

[I.R.C. §7701(a)(10)]

[emphasis added]

Already, it is obvious that this definition leaves much to be debated because it is ambiguous and it is not nearly as clear as our “established benchmark of clarity” (which will be engraved in marble a week from Tuesday). Does the definition restrict the term "State" to mean only the District of Columbia? Or does it expand the term "State" to mean the District of Columbia in addition to the 50 States of the Union? And how do we decide? We would argue that confusion created by this definition on the part of the authors in Congress is deliberate, because they do NOT want you to know that the correct definition of “State” would clearly demonstrate their lack of jurisdiction to impose income taxes on U.S. Citizens domiciled in the 50 Union states!

The following cite confirms that the District of Columbia qualifies as a federal “State”, which is part of the federal zone:

4 U.S.C.S. §113

“(2) the term ‘State’ includes the District of Columbia.”

However, the District of Columbia does not qualify as a “state”, which is outside the federal zone:

1. The District of Columbia and the territories are not states within the judicial clause of the Constitution giving jurisdiction in cases between citizens of different states. [O’Donoghue v. United States, 289 U.S. 516, 53 S.Ct. 740 (1933)]

The California Revenue and Taxation Code (R&TC) has a similar definition of the term “State” that is consistent with the one above but is more clear:

17018. “State” includes the District of Columbia, and the possessions of the United States. [which don’t include the 50 sovereign states but do include federal areas within those states]

You can read the above for yourself at: http://www.leginfo.ca.gov/cgi-bin/displaycode?section=rtc&group=17001-18000&file=17001-17039.1.

Here’s another interesting tidbit for the benefit of the reader that makes the definitions even more clear. In 26 U.S.C. §3121 (FICA contributions tax), the definition of “State” does not include the 50 Union states but AFTER a person has submitted or filed an income tax return, described in 26 U.S.C. §6103, the term "State" DOES include the 50 Union states! Once again, more obfuscation and subterfuge to confuse as to when the 50 Union states actually apply to the tax code. AFTER you submit a return they gotcha, and then it’s o.k. to give the definition that includes the 50 Union states. So, the tax code even defines specifically what a real state from among the several states is when the authors of the code wanted it to define it clearly.

Sec. 3121. Definitions
(e) State, United States, and citizen —
For purposes of this chapter -
(1) State

The term "State" includes the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, and American Samoa.

(2) United States —
The term "United States" when used in a geographical sense — includes the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, and American Samoa. An individual who is a citizen of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico (but not otherwise a citizen of the United States) shall be considered, for purposes of this section, as a citizen of the United States.

Sec. 6103. Confidentiality and disclosure of returns and return information
The term "State" means —
(A) any of the 50 States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, the Canal Zone, Guam, American Samoa, and the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, and —
(B) for purposes of subsections (a)(2), (b)(4), (d)(1),
(1) any of the 50 States, the District of Columbia, the (i) with a population in excess of 250,000 (as determined under the most recent decennial United States census data available),
(ii) which imposes a tax on income or wages, and
(iii) with which the Secretary (in his sole discretion) has entered into an agreement regarding disclosure.

Now are you convinced that what we say is true about the definition of “United States” within the Internal Revenue Code? Now do you understand why the IRS won’t define the term “United States” anywhere on their website or in ANY of their publications or forms relative to Subtitle A Income Taxes? We don’t see how you couldn’t be convinced, but if you STILL aren’t convinced, we refer you to sections 4.6 and 4.9 earlier for further study on this fascinating subject.

5.2.13.2 Effect of “includes”: Doesn’t add to the definition

Even some harsh critics of federal income taxation, like Otto Skinner, have argued that ambiguities like this are best resolved by interpreting the word “include” in an expansive sense, rather than in a restrictive sense. Some legal dictionaries define the term “includes” to mean “in addition to” in some instances, for instance. To support his argument, Skinner cites the definitions of “includes” and “including” that are actually found in the Code:

The Great IRS Hoax: Why We Don’t Owe Income Tax, version 4.54

TOP SECRET: For Official Treasury/IRS Use Only (FOUO) Copyright Family Guardian Fellowship http://famguardian.org/
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

Includes and Including. -- The terms "includes" and "including" when used in a definition contained in this title shall not be deemed to exclude other things otherwise within the meaning of the term defined.

[I.R.C. §7701(c), emphasis added]

Skinner reasons that the Internal Revenue Code provides for an expanded definition of the term "includes" when it is used in other definitions contained in that Code. Using his logic, then, the definition of "State" at IRC Sec. 7701(a)(10) must be interpreted to mean the District of Columbia, in addition to other things. But what other things? Are the 50 Union states to be included also? What about the territories and possessions? And what about the federal enclaves ceded to Congress by the 50 Union states? If the definition itself does not specify any of these things, then where, pray tell, are these other things "distinctly expressed" in the Code? If these other things are distinctly expressed elsewhere in the Code, is their expression in the Code manifestly compatible with the intent of that Code? Should we include also a state of confusion to our understanding of the Code?

Quite apart from the meaning of "includes" and "including", defining the term "include" in an expansive sense leads to an absurd result that is manifestly incompatible with the Constitution. If the expansion results in defining the term "State" to mean the District of Columbia in addition to the 50 States of the Union, then these 50 Union states must be situated within the federal zone. Remember, the federal zone is the area of land over which the Congress has unrestricted, exclusive legislative jurisdiction. But, the Congress does not have unrestricted, exclusive legislative jurisdiction over any of the 50 Union states. It is bound by the chains of the Constitution in this other zone, to paraphrase Thomas Jefferson. Specifically, Congress is required to apportion direct taxes which it levies inside the 50 Union states. This is a key limitation on the power of Congress; it has never been expressly repealed (as Prohibition was repealed).

Other problems arise from Skinner's reasoning. First of all, like so much of the IRC, the definitions of "includes" and "including" are outright deceptions in their own right. A grammatical approach can be used to demonstrate that these definitions are thinly disguised tautologies. Note, in particular, where the Code states that these terms "shall not be deemed to exclude other things". This is a double negative. Two negatives make a positive. This phrase, then, is equivalent to saying that the terms "shall be deemed to include other things". Continuing with this line of reasoning, the definition of "includes" includes "include", resulting in an obvious tautology. (We just couldn't resist.) Forgive them, for they know not what they do.

The definitions of "includes" and "including" can now be rewritten so as to "include other things otherwise within the meaning of the term defined". So, what things are otherwise within the meaning of the term "State", if those things are not distinctly expressed in the original definition? You may be dying to put the 50 States of the Union among those things that are otherwise within the meaning of the term, but you are using common sense. The Internal Revenue Code was not written with common sense in mind; it was written with deception in mind. When the authors want to deliberately confuse and deceive you in order to enlarge their jurisdiction, they will invent a new definition or “term of art” that conflicts with the layman’s definition. The rules of statutory construction apply a completely different standard. Author Ralph Whittington has this to say about the specialized definitions that are exploited by lawyers, attorneys, lawmakers, and judges:

The Legislature means what it says. If the definition section states that whenever the term "white" is used (within that particular section or the entire code), the term includes "black," it means that "white" is "black" and you are not allowed to make additions or deletions at your convenience. You must follow the directions of the Legislature, NO MORE -- NO LESS.

Unfortunately for Otto Skinner and others who try valiantly to argue the expansive meaning of "includes" and "including", Treasury Decision No. 3980, Vol. 29, January-December 1927, and some 80 court cases have adopted the restrictive meaning of these terms:

The supreme Court of the State ... also considered that the word "including" was used as a word of enlargement, the learned court being of the opinion that such was its ordinary sense. With this we cannot concur. It is its exceptional sense, as the dictionaries and cases indicate.

[emphasis added]

Moreover, the "void for vagueness" doctrine is deeply rooted in our right to due process (under the Fifth Amendment) and our right to know the nature and cause of any criminal accusation (under the Sixth Amendment). The latter right goes far beyond the contents of any criminal indictment. The right to know the nature and cause of any accusation starts with the statute which a defendant is accused of violating. A statute must be sufficiently specific and unambiguous in all its terms, in order to define and give adequate notice of the kind of conduct which it forbids.

The Great IRS Hoax: Why We Don’t Owe Income Tax, version 4.54

TOP SECRET: For Official Treasury/IRS Use Only (FOUO) Copyright Family Guardian Fellowship http://famguardian.org/
The essential purpose of the "void for vagueness doctrine" with respect to interpretation of a criminal statute, is to warn individuals of the criminal consequences of their conduct. ... Criminal statutes which fail to give due notice that an act has been made criminal before it is done are unconstitutional deprivations of due process of law.

If it fails to indicate with reasonable certainty just what conduct the legislature prohibits, a statute is necessarily void for uncertainty, or "void for vagueness" as the doctrine is called. In the De Cadena case, the U.S. District Court listed a number of excellent authorities for the origin of this doctrine (see Lanzetta v. New Jersey, 306 U.S. 451) and for the development of the doctrine (see Screws v. United States, 325 U.S. 91, Williams v. United States, 341 U.S. 97, and Jordan v. De George, 341 U.S. 223). Any prosecution which is based upon a vague statute must fail, together with the statute itself. A vague criminal statute is unconstitutional for violating the 5th and 6th Amendments. The U.S. Supreme Court has emphatically agreed:

[1] That the terms of a penal statute creating a new offense must be sufficiently explicit to inform those who are subject to it what conduct on their part will render them liable to its penalties is a well-recognized requirement, consonant alike with ordinary notions of fair play and the settled rules of law; and a statute which either forbids or requires the doing of an act in terms so vague that men of common intelligence must necessarily guess at its meaning and differ as to its application violates the first essential of due process of law.
[Connally et al. v. General Construction Co., 269 U.S. 385, 391 (1926), emphasis added]

The debate that is currently raging over the correct scope and proper application of the IRC is obvious, empirical proof that men of common intelligence are differing with each other. For example, The Informer’s conclusions appear to require definitions of "includes" and "including" which are expansive, not restrictive. The matter could be easily decided if the IRC would instead exhibit sound principles of statutory construction, state clearly and directly that "includes" and "including" are meant to be used in the expansive sense, and itemize those specific persons, places, and/or things that are "otherwise within the meaning of the terms defined". If the terms "includes" and "including" must be used in the restrictive sense, the IRC should explain, clearly and directly, that expressions like "includes only" and "including only" must be used, to eliminate vagueness completely.

Alternatively, the IRC could exhibit sound principles of statutory construction by explaining clearly and directly that "includes" and "including" are always meant to be used in the restrictive sense.

Better yet, abandon the word "include" entirely, together with all of its grammatical variations, and use instead the word "means" (which does not suffer from a long history of semantic confusion). It would also help a lot if the 50 Union states were consistently capitalized and the federal states were not. The reverse of this convention can be observed in the regulations for Title 31 (see 31 C.F.R. Sections 51.2 and 52.2).

These, again, are excellent grounds for deciding that the IRC is vague and therefore null and void. Of course, if the real intent is to expand the federal zone in order to subjugate the 50 Union states under the dominion of Federal States (defined along something like ZIP code boundaries a la the Buck Act, codified in Title 4), and to replace the sovereign Republics with a monolithic socialist dictatorship, carved up into arbitrary administrative "districts", that is another problem altogether.
Believe it or not, the case law which has interpreted the Buck Act admits to the existence of a "State within a state"! So, which State within a state are you in? Or should we be asking this question: "In the State within which state are you?"
(Remember: a preposition is a word you should never end a sentence with!)

The absurd results which obtain from expanding the term "State" to mean the 50 Union states, however, are problems which will not go away, no matter how much we clarify the definitions of "includes" and "including" in the IRC. There are 49 other U.S. Codes which have the exact same problem. Moreover, the mountain of material evidence impugning the ratification of the so-called 16th Amendment should leave no doubt in anybody’s mind that Congress must still apportion all direct taxes levied inside the sovereign borders of the 50 Union states. The apportionment restrictions have never been repealed.

5.2.13.3 Historical context

An historical approach yields similar results. Without tracing the myriad of income tax statutes which Congress has enacted over the years, it is instructive to examine the terminology found in a revenue statute from the Civil War era. The definition of "State" is almost identical to the one quoted from the current IRC at the start of this chapter. On June 30, 1864, Congress enacted legislation which contained the following definition:
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren't LIABLE to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

The word "State," when used in this Title, shall be construed to include the Territories and the District of Columbia, where such construction is necessary to carry out its provisions. [Title 35, Internal Revenue, Chapter 1, page 601] [Revised Statutes of the United States] [43rd Congress, 1st Session, 1873-74]

Aside from adding "the Territories", the two definitions are nearly identical. The Territories at that point in time were Washington, Utah, Dakota, Nebraska, Colorado, New Mexico, and the Indian Territory.

One of the most fruitful and conclusive methods for establishing the meaning of the term "State" in the IRC is to trace the history of changes to the United States Codes which occurred when Alaska and Hawaii were admitted to the Union. Because other authors have already done an exhaustive job on this history, there is no point in re-inventing their wheels here.

It is instructive to illustrate these Code changes as they occurred in the IRC definition of "State" found at the start of this chapter. The first Code amendment became effective on January 3, 1959, when Alaska was admitted to the Union:

Amended 1954 Code Sec. 7701(a)(10) by striking out "Territories", and by substituting "Territory of Hawaii".

[I.R.C. §7701(a)(10)]

The second Code amendment became effective on August 21, 1959, when Hawaii was admitted to the Union:

Amended 1954 Code Sec. 7701(a)(10) by striking out "the Territory of Hawaii and" immediately after the word "include".

[I.R.C. §7701(a)(10)]

Applying these code changes in reverse order, we can reconstruct the IRC definitions of "State" by using any word processor and simple "textual substitution" as follows:

Time 1: Alaska is a U.S. Territory

Hawaii is a U.S. Territory

7701(a)(10): The term "State" shall be construed to include the Territories and the District of Columbia, where such construction is necessary to carry out provisions of this title.

Alaska joins the Union. Strike out "Territories" and substitute "Territory of Hawaii":

Time 2: Alaska is a State of the Union

Hawaii is a U.S. Territory

7701(a)(10): The term "State" shall be construed to include the Territory of Hawaii and the District of Columbia, where such construction is necessary to carry out provisions of this title.

Hawaii joins the Union. Strike out "the Territory of Hawaii and" immediately after the word "include":

Time 3: Alaska is a State of the Union

Hawaii is a State of the Union

7701(a)(10): The term "State" shall be construed to include the District of Columbia, where such construction is necessary to carry out provisions of this title.

Author Lori Jacques has therefore concluded that the term "State" now includes only the District of Columbia, because the former Territories of Alaska and Hawaii have been admitted to the Union, Puerto Rico has been granted the status of a Commonwealth, and the Philippine Islands have been granted their independence (see United States Citizen versus National of the United States, page 9, paragraph 5). It is easy to see how author Lori Jacques could have overlooked the following reference to Puerto Rico, found near the end of the IRC:
In order to conform to the requirements of the Social Security scheme, a completely different definition of “State” is found in those sections of the IRC that deal with Social Security. This definition was also amended on separate occasions when Alaska and Hawaii were admitted to the Union. The first Code amendment became effective on January 3, 1959, when Alaska was admitted:

In order to conform to the requirements of the Social Security scheme, a completely different definition of “State” is found in those sections of the IRC that deal with Social Security. This definition was also amended on separate occasions when Alaska and Hawaii were admitted to the Union. The first Code amendment became effective on January 3, 1959, when Alaska was admitted:

Amended 1954 Code Sec. 3121(e)(1), as it appears in the amendment note for P.L. 86-778, by striking out “Alaska,” where it appeared following “includes”.

[1.R.C. 3121(e)(1)]

The second Code amendment became effective on August 21, 1959, when Hawaii was admitted:

In order to conform to the requirements of the Social Security scheme, a completely different definition of “State” is found in those sections of the IRC that deal with Social Security. This definition was also amended on separate occasions when Alaska and Hawaii were admitted to the Union. The first Code amendment became effective on January 3, 1959, when Alaska was admitted:

[1.R.C. 3121(e)(1)]

Applying these code changes in reverse order, as above, we can reconstruct the definitions of "State" in this section of the IRC as follows:

Time 1: Alaska is a U.S. Territory

Hawaii is a U.S. Territory

3121(e)(1): The term "State" includes Alaska, Hawaii, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.

Alaska joins the Union. Strike out "Alaska," where it appeared following "includes":

Time 2: Alaska is a State of the Union

Hawaii is a U.S. Territory

3121(e)(1): The term "State" includes Hawaii, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.

Hawaii joins the Union. Strike out "Hawaii," where it appeared following "includes":

Time 3: Alaska is a State of the Union

Hawaii is a State of the Union

3121(e)(1): The term “State” includes the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.

Puerto Rico becomes a Commonwealth. For services performed after 1960, Guam and American Samoa are added to the definition:

Time 4: Puerto Rico becomes a Commonwealth

Guam and American Samoa join Social Security

3121(e)(1): The term “State” includes the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, and American Samoa.
defined in those Codes as "States" before admission to the Union, but not afterwards. This apparent anomaly is perfectly clear, once the legal and deliberately misleading definition of "State" is understood. The changes made to the United States Codes when Alaska joined the Union were assembled in the Alaska Omnibus Act. The changes made to the federal Codes when Hawaii joined the Union were assembled in the Hawaii Omnibus Act.

The following table summarizes the sections of the IRC that were affected by these two Acts:

I.R.C. §7621(b) sticks out like a sore thumb when the changes are arrayed in this fashion. The Alaska Omnibus Act modified this section of the IRC, but the Hawaii Omnibus Act did not. Let's take a close look at this section and see if it reveals any important clues:

Sec. 7621. Internal Revenue Districts.

(a) Establishment and Alteration. -- The President shall establish convenient internal revenue districts for the purpose of administering the internal revenue laws. The President may from time to time alter such districts.

[IRC 7621(a)]

Now witness the chronology of amendments to I.R.C. §7621(b), entitled "Boundaries", as follows:

Time 1: Alaska is a U.S. Territory.

<1/3/59 Hawaii is a U.S. Territory. ("<" means "before")

7621(b): Boundaries. -- For the purpose mentioned in subsection (a), the President may subdivide any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or may unite two or more States or Territories into one district.

Time 2: Alaska is a State of the Union.

1/3/59 Hawaii is a U.S. Territory.

7621(b): Boundaries. -- For the purpose mentioned in subsection (a), the President may subdivide any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or may unite one District two or more States or a Territory and one or more States.
Time 3:
Alaska is a State of the Union.

2/1/77
Hawaii is a State of the Union.

7621(b):  Boundaries.  -- For the purpose mentioned in subsection (a), the President may subdivide any State or the District of Columbia, or may unite into one district two or more States.

The reason why the Hawaii Omnibus Act did not change section 7621(b) is not apparent from reading the statute, nor has time permitted the research necessary to determine why this section was changed in 1977 and not in 1959.  After Alaska joined the Union, Hawaii was technically the only remaining Territory.  This may explain why the term "Territories" was changed to "Territory" at Time 2 above.  However, this is a relatively minor matter, when compared to the constitutional issue that is involved here.  There is an absolute constitutional restriction against subdividing or joining any of the 50 Union states, or any parts thereof, without the consent of Congress and of the Legislatures of the States affected.  This restriction is very much like the restriction against direct taxes within the 50 Union states without apportionment:

New States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union; but no new State shall be formed or erected within the Jurisdiction of any other State; nor any State be formed by the Junction of two or more States, or Parts of States, without the Consent of the Legislatures of the States concerned as well as of the Congress.
[Constitution for the United States of America, Article 4, Section 3, Clause 1, emphasis added]

This point about new States caught the keen eye of author and scholar Eustace Mullins.  In his controversial and heartbreaking book entitled A Writ for Martyrs, Mullins establishes the all-important link between the Internal Revenue Service and the Federal Reserve System, and does so by charging that Internal Revenue Districts are "new states" unlawfully established within the jurisdiction of legal States of the Union, as follows:

The income tax amendment and the Federal Reserve Act were passed in the same year, 1913, because they function as an essential team, and were planned to do so.  The Federal Reserve districts and the Internal Revenue Districts are "new states," which have been established within the jurisdiction of legal states of the Union.
[emphasis added]

Remember, the federal zone is the area of land over which the Congress exercises an unrestricted, exclusive legislative jurisdiction.  The Congress does not have unrestricted, exclusive legislative jurisdiction over any of the 50 Union states.  It is bound by the chains of the Constitution.  This point is so very important, it bears repeating throughout this book.  As in the apportionment rule for direct taxes and the uniformity rule for indirect taxes, Congress cannot join or divide any of the 50 Union states without the explicit approval of the Legislatures of the State(s) involved.  This means that Congress cannot unilaterally delegate such a power to the President.  Congress cannot lawfully exercise (nor delegate) a power which it simply does not have.

How, then, is it possible for I.R.C. Section 7621(b) of the IRC to give this power to the President?  The answer is very simple:
the territorial scope of the Internal Revenue Code is the “federal zone”.  The IRC only applies to the land that is internal to that zone.  Indeed, a leading legal encyclopedia leaves no doubt that the terms “municipal law” and “internal law” are equivalent:

International law and Municipal or internal law.

... [P]ositive law is classified as international law, the law which governs the interrelations of sovereign states, and municipal law, which is, when used in contradistinction to international law, the branch of the law which governs the internal affairs of a sovereign state.

However, the term “municipal law” has several meanings, and in order to avoid confusing these meanings authorities have found more satisfactory Bentham's phrase "internal law," this being the equivalent of the French term "droit interne," to express the concept of internal law of a sovereign state.

The phrase “municipal law” is derived from the Roman law, and when employed as indicating the internal law of a sovereign state the word “municipal” has no specific reference to modern municipalities, but rather has a broader, more extensive meaning, as discussed in the C.J.S. definition Municipal.

[52A Corpus Juris Secundum (C.J.S.), Law, Sections 741, 742 (“Law”), emphasis added]

If the territorial scope of the IRC were the 50 States of the Union, then section 7621(b) would, all by itself, render the entire Code unconstitutional for violating clause 4:3:1 of the Constitution (see above).  Numerous other constitutional violations would also occur if the territorial scope of the IRC were the 50 Union states. A clear and unambiguous definition of "State" must be known before status and jurisdiction can be decided with certainty. The IRC should be nullified for vagueness; this much is certain.

After seeing and verifying all of the evidence discussed above, the editors of a bulletin published by the Monetary Realist Society wrote the following long comment about the obvious problems it raises:

> A serious reader could come to the conclusion that Missouri, for example, is not one of the United States referred to in the code. This conclusion is encouraged by finding that the code refers to Hawaii and Alaska as states of the United States before their admission to the union! Is the IRS telling us that the only states over which it has jurisdiction are Guam, Washington D.C., Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, etc.? Well, why not write and find out? Don't expect an answer, though. Your editor has asked this question and sought to have both of his Senators and one Congresswoman prod the IRS for a reply when none was forthcoming. Nothing.

> And isn't that strange? It would be so simple for the service to reply, "Of course Missouri is one of the United States referred to in the code" if that were, indeed, the case. What can one conclude from the government's refusal to deal with this simple question except that the government cannot admit the truth about United States citizenship? I admit that the question sounds silly. Everybody knows that Missouri is one of the United States, right? Sure, like everybody knows what a dollar is! But the IRS deals with "silly" questions every day, often at great length. After all, the code occupies many feet of shelf space, and covers almost any conceivable situation. It just doesn't seem to be able to cope with the simplest questions?

> ["Some Thoughts on the Income Tax"]
> [The Bulletin of the Monetary Realist Society, March 1993, Number 152, page 2, emphasis added]

Although this book was originally intended to focus on the Internal Revenue Code, the other 49 United States Codes contain a wealth of additional proof that the term "State" does not always refer to one of the 50 States of the Union. Just to illustrate, the following statutory definition of the term "State" was found in Title 8, the Immigration and Nationality Act, as late as the year 1987:

> (36) The term "state" includes (except as used in section 310(a) of title III [8 USCS Section 1421(a)]) the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, Guam, and the Virgin Islands of the United States.
>

The "exception" cited in this statute tells the whole story here. In section 1421, Congress needed to refer to courts of the 50 Union states, because their own local constitutions and laws have granted to those courts the requisite jurisdiction to naturalize. For this reason, Congress made an explicit exception to the standard, federal definition of "State" quoted above. The following is the paragraph in section 1421 which contained the exceptional uses of the term "State" (i.e. Union state, not federal state):

> 1421. Jurisdiction to naturalize

> (a) Exclusive jurisdiction to naturalize persons as citizens of the United States is hereby conferred upon the following specified courts: District courts of the United States now existing, or which may hereafter be established by Congress in any State . . . also all courts of record in any State or Territory now existing, or which may hereafter be created, having a seal, a clerk, and jurisdiction in actions at law or equity, or law and equity, in which the amount in controversy is unlimited.

> [8 U.S.C. §1421(a), circa 1987, emphasis added]

In a section entitled "State Courts", the interpretive notes and decisions for this statute contain clear proof that the phrase "in any State" here refers to any state of the Union (e.g. New York):

> Under 8 USCS Section 1421, jurisdiction to naturalize was conferred upon New York State Supreme Court by virtue of its being court of record and having jurisdiction in actions at law and equity. Re Reilly (1973) 73 Misc.2d. 1073, 344 N.Y.S.2d. 531.

> [8 U.S.C.S. §1421, Interpretive Notes and Decisions, Section II. State Courts, emphasis added]

Subsequently, Congress removed the reference to this exception in the amended definition of "State", as follows:

> (36) The term "State" includes the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, Guam, and the Virgin Islands of the United States.

Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

5-257

Two final definitions prove, without any doubt, that the IRC can also define the terms "State" and "United States" to mean the 50 Union states as well as the other federal states. The very existence of multiple definitions provides convincing proof that the IRC is intentionally vague, particularly in the section dedicated to general definitions (I.R.C. §7701(a)). The following definition is taken from Subtitle D, Miscellaneous Excise Taxes, Subchapter A, Tax on Petroleum (which we all pay taxes at the pump to use):

(A) In General. -- The term "United States" means the 50 States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, any possession of the United States, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands. [!!]
[I.R.C. §4612(a)(4)(A), emphasis added]

Notice that this definition uses the term "means". Why is this definition so clear, in stark contrast to other IRC definitions of the "United States"? Author Ralph Whittington provides the simple, if not obvious, answer:

The preceding is a true Import Tax, as allowed by the Constitution; it contains all the indicia of being Uniform, and therefore passes the Constitutionality test and can operate within the 50 Sovereign States. The language of this Revenue Act is simple, specific and definitive, and it would be impossible to attach the "Void for Vagueness Doctrine" to it.
[The Omnibus, page 83, emphasis added]

The following definition of "State" is required only for those Code sections that deal with the sharing of tax return information between the federal government and the 50 States of the Union. In this case, the 50 States need to be mentioned in the definition. So, the lawmakers can do it when they need to (and not do it, in order to put the rest of us into a state of confusion, within a state of the Union):

(5) State -- The term "State" means -- [!!]

(A) any of the 50 States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, the Canal Zone, Guam, American Samoa, and the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands ....
[I.R.C. §6103(b)(5), emphasis added]

It is noteworthy [!!] that these sections of the IRC also utilize the term "means" instead of the terms "includes" and "including", and instead of the phrase "shall be construed to include". It is certainly not impossible to be clear. If it were impossible to be clear, then just laws would not be possible at all, and the Constitution could never have come into existence anywhere on this planet. Authors like The Informer (as he calls himself) consider the very existence of multiple definitions of "State" and "United States" to be highly significant proof of fluctuating statutory intent, even though a definition of "intent" is nowhere to be found in the Code itself. Together with evidence from the Omnibus Acts, these fluctuating definitions also expose perhaps the greatest fiscal fraud that has ever been perpetrated upon any people at any time in the history of the world.

Having researched all facets of the law in depth for more than ten full years, we summarize what we have learned thus far with a careful precision that was unique for its time:

The term "States" in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) is referring to the federal states of Guam, Virgin Islands, Etc., and NOT the 50 States of the Union. Congress cannot write a municipal law to apply to the human "non-resident non-persons" (constitutional but not statutory Citizens) domiciled within States of the Union. Yes, the IRS can go into the States of the Union by Treasury Decision Order, to seek out those "taxpayers" who are subject to the tax, be they a class of individuals that are statutory "United States citizens", or statutory "resident aliens". They also can go after nonresident aliens that are under the regulatory corporate jurisdiction of the United States, but only when they are "effectively connected with a trade or business" with the United States or have made income from a "source within the United States"....
[emphasis added]

Nevertheless, despite a clarity that was rare, author Lori Jacques has found good reasons to dispute even this statement. In a private communication, she explained that the Office of the Federal Register has issued a statement indicating that Treasury Department Orders ("TDO") 150-10 and 150-37 (regarding taxation) were not published in the Federal Register. Evidently, there are still no published orders from the Secretary of the Treasury giving the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the requisite authority to enforce the Internal Revenue Code within the 50 States of the Union.
Furthermore, under Title 3, Section 103, the President of the United States, by means of Presidential Executive Order, has no delegated authority to enforce the IRC within the 50 States of the Union. Treasury Department Order No. 150-10 can be found in Commerce Clearinghouse Publication 6585 (an unofficial publication). Section 5 reads as follows:

> U.S. Territories and Insular Possessions. The Commissioner shall, to the extent of authority otherwise vested in him, provide for the administration of the United States internal revenue laws in the U.S. Territories and insular possessions and other authorized areas of the world.

Thus, the available evidence indicates that the only authority delegated to the Internal Revenue Service is to enforce tax treaties with foreign territories, U.S. territories and possessions, and Puerto Rico. To be consistent with the law, Treasury Department Orders, particularly TDO's 150-10 and 150-37, needed to be published in the Federal Register. Thus, given the absence of published authority delegations within the 50 Union states, the obvious conclusion is that the various Treasury Department orders found at Internal Revenue Manual 1229 have absolutely no legal bearing, force, or effect on those who are Constitutional but not Statutory Citizens domiciled within the 50 Union states. Awesome, yes? Our hats are off, once again, to Lori Jacques for her superb legal research.

The astute reader will notice another basic disagreement between authors Lori Jacques and this document. Lori Jacques concludes that the term "State" now includes only the District of Columbia, a conclusion that is supported by IRC Sec. 7701(a)(10). We, on the other hand, conclude that the term "States" refers to the federal states of Guam, Virgin Islands, etc. These two conclusions are obviously incompatible, because singular and plural must, by law, refer to the same things. (See Title 1 of the United States Code for rules of federal statutory construction).

It is important to realize that both conclusions were reached by people who have invested a great deal of earnest time and energy studying the relevant law, regulations, and court decisions. If these honest Americans can come to such diametrically opposed conclusions, after competent and sincere efforts to find the truth, this is all the more reason why the Code should be declared null and void for vagueness. Actually, this is all the more reason why we should all be pounding nails into its coffin, by every lawful method available to boycott this octopus. The First Amendment guarantees our fundamental right to boycott arbitrary government, by our words and by our deeds.

Likewise, Congress is not empowered to delegate unilateral authority to the President to subdivide or to join any of the 50 Union states. There are many other constitutional violations which result from expanding the term "State" to mean the 50 States of the Union. In this context, the mandates and prohibitions found in the Bill of Rights are immediately obvious, particularly as they apply to Union state Citizens (as distinct from United States citizens a/k/a federal citizens). Clarifying the definitions of "includes" and "including" in the IRC is one thing; clarifying the exact extent of sovereign jurisdiction is quite another. Congress is just not sovereign within the borders of the 50 Union states.

Sorry, all you Senators and Representatives. When you took office, you did not take an oath to uphold and defend the Uniform Commercial Code. You did not take an oath to uphold and defend the Constitution for the United States of America.

It should be obvious, at this point, that capable authors like Lori Jacques and The Informer do agree that the 50 Union states do not belong in the standard definition of "State" because they are in a class that is different from the class known as federal states. Here’s the way Congressman Barbara Kennelly put in a letter received by one reader:

> Within the borders of the 50 States, the "geographical" extent of exclusive federal jurisdiction is strictly confined to the federal enclaves; this extent does not encompass the 50 States themselves.

We cannot blame the average American for failing to appreciate this subtlety. The confusion that results from the vagueness we observe is inherent in the Code and evidently intentional, which raises some very serious questions concerning the real intent of that Code in the first place. Could money have anything to do with it? That question answers itself.

For further information about the content of this subsection and the extent of federal jurisdiction, see section 5.4 in the Tax Fraud Prevention Manual, Form #06.008. We also have an exhaustive study into federal jurisdiction found at:

5.2.14 “U.S. source” means NATIONAL GOVERNMENT sources in the Internal Revenue Code, Subtitles A and C

The Great IRS Hoax: Why We Don’t Owe Income Tax, version 4.54

This section will deal with the issue of the meaning of “United States” in the context of “U.S. source” within Internal Revenue Code, Subtitles A and C. It is only “U.S. source” or “sources within the United States” that are taxable under these provisions of the I.R.C. We will prove that the only thing that it can mean is the NATIONAL and not STATE government, and that not even all national government payments fall in this category, but only those payments that are paid to public offices within the national government.

5.2.14.1 Background

Within our system of law, all are equal under the law. We cover this subject exhaustively in the following document, in fact:

Requirement for Equal Protection and Equal Treatment, Form #05.033
http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

Because we are all equal, then:

1. All human beings are equal in rights and authority to any and every government.
2. An entire government as a legal person can have no more authority than a single human being.
3. The only way you can become UNEQUAL to anyone, including any government, is with your consent.
4. The method of giving consent is to acquire or invoke a civil statutory status that gives the government the right to govern you.
5. You can’t delegate any authority to any government that you don’t have, including the right to STEAL or enforce anything.
6. If you can’t steal from your neighbor to pay for services from you that he doesn’t want, then neither can a government.
7. The only way you acquire any right over your neighbor is with their consent.
8. Anything you do him that your neighbor doesn’t consent to and which injures him/her is a tort. In other words, if you do not respect his/her right to simply be “left alone”, then he/she has a right to sue you in court. The right to simply be left alone, after all, is the very definition of “justice” itself, and governments are established to promote justice.
9. All the constraints above apply equally to both your neighbor AND the government.

The above considerations are why the ONLY people the government has civil statutory jurisdiction or authority over are those who consent to contract with them, and thereby acquire “agency” on behalf of the government. The U.S. Supreme Court admitted this when it held the following:

“All the powers of the government [including ALL of its civil enforcement powers against the public] must be carried into operation by individual agency, either through the medium of public officers, or contracts made with [private] individuals.”

In other words, you have to be their AGENT before they can civilly enforce against or “govern” you. That agency can take many forms:

1. Acquiring or invoking the statutory franchise status of “citizen”, “resident”, “taxpayer”, “employee”, “benefit recipient”, “driver”, etc., all of whom are franchisees under civil franchise or protection franchise.
2. Applying for or using a “license” of any kind.
3. Accepting or using government property. A public officer, after all, is legally defined as someone who exercises the sovereign functions of the government and thereby uses government property or rights to property in the process of doing so:

Public office. The right, authority, and duty created and conferred by law, by which for a given period, either fixed by law or enduring at the pleasure of the creating power, an individual is invested with some portion of the sovereign functions of government for the benefit of the public. Walker v. Rich, 79 Cal.App. 139, 249 P. 56, 58.

An agency for the state, the duties of which involve in their performance the exercise of some portion of the sovereign power, either great or small. Yaselli v. Gulf, C.C.A., 12 F.2d 396, 403, 56 A.L.R. 1239; Lacey v. State, 13 Ala.App. 212, 68 So. 706, 710; Curtin v. State, 61 Cal.App. 377, 214 P. 1030, 1035; Shelmadine v. City of Elkhart, 75 Ind.App. 493, 129 N.E. 878, State ex rel. Colorado River Commission v. Frohmiller, 46 Ariz. 413, 52 P.2d. 483, 486. Where, by virtue of law, a person is clothed, not as an incidental or transient authority, but for such time as de- notes duration and continuance, with Independent power to control the property of the public, or with public functions to be exercised in the supposed interest of the people, the service to be compensated by a stated yearly salary, and the occupant having a designation or title, the position so created is a public office.

4. Being a stockholder in a corporation. All stockholders are considered contractors of the government.

The court held that the first company's charter was a contract between it and the state, within the protection of the constitution of the United States, and that the charter to the last company was therefore null and void. Mr. Justice DAVIS, delivering the opinion of the court, said that, if anything was settled by an unbroken chain of decisions in the federal courts, it was that an act of incorporation was a contract between the state and the stockholders, 'a departure from which now would involve dangers to society that cannot be foreseen, would shock the sense of justice of the country, unhinge its business interests, and weaken, if not destroy, that respect which has always been felt for the judicial department of the government.'

[New Orleans Gas Co. v. Louisiana Light Co., 115 U.S. 650 (1885)]

The authority for the federal government to regulate the use of its own property, wherever situated to include a state of the Union, derives from Article 4, Section 3, Clause 2 of the United States Constitution. To wit:

United States Constitution
Article 4, Section 3, Clause 2

The Congress shall have Power to dispose of and make all needful Rules and Regulations respecting the Territory or other Property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to Prejudice any Claims of the United States, or of any particular State.

"The Constitution permits Congress to dispose of and to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States. This power applies as well to territory belonging to the United States within the States, as beyond them. It comprehends all the public domain, wherever it may be. The argument is, that the power to make "all needful rules and regulations" is a power of legislation," "a full legislative power;" "that it includes all subjects of legislation in the territory," and is without any limitations, except the positive prohibitions which affect all the powers of Congress. Congress may then regulate or prohibit slavery upon the public domain within the new States, and such a prohibition would permanently affect the capacity of a slave, whose master might carry him to it. And why not? Because no power has been conferred on Congress. This is a conclusion universally admitted. But the power to 'make rules and regulations respecting the territory' is not restrained by State lines, nor are there any constitutional prohibitions upon its exercise in the domain of the United States within the States; and whatever rules and regulations respecting territory Congress may constitutionally make are supreme, and are not dependent on the situs of "the territory."

[Dred Scott v. Sandford, 60 U.S. 393, 509-510 (1856)]

Those who want to be beyond the jurisdiction of any government therefore:

1. Cannot accept, apply to receive, or use any kind of government property.
2. Cannot apply for or use any kind of license. Licenses are the property of the government grantor.
3. Cannot invoke any civil statutory franchise status or the rights, privileges, or immunities associated with said status, INCLUDING "taxpayer", "citizen", or "resident", "driver" (under the vehicle code), "spouse" (under the family code).
4. Cannot own stock in any corporation. All corporations are franchises of the government grantor and those owning stock are government contractors.
5. Cannot act as an officer of a corporation. If they do, then they will become subject to the civil laws of the government grantor pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 17(b).
6. Cannot use government identifying numbers in connection with any of their financial transactions. 20 C.F.R. §422.103(d) says that these numbers are PROPERTY of the Social Security Administration and must be returned upon request.

The following subsections will apply these important considerations to many different scenarios to show why “U.S. sources” within the Internal Revenue Code really means government payments, and not commerce within the geographical “United States” appearing EITHER within the Internal Revenue Code itself OR the Constitution.

5.2.14.2 Sixteenth Amendment was proposed by President Taft as a tax on the NATIONAL government, not upon a geography
When President Taft proposed the Sixteenth Amendment, he introduced it as a tax upon the NATIONAL GOVERNMENT, and not upon a geography. Below is the proof from the Congressional Record:

"The decision of the Supreme Court in the income-tax cases deprived the National Government of a power, which by reason of previous decisions of the court; it was generally supposed that government had. It is undoubtedly a power the National Government ought to have. It might be indispensable to the Nation's life in great crises. Although I have not considered a constitutional amendment as necessary to the exercise of certain phases of this power, a mature consideration has satisfied me that an amendment is the only proper course for its establishment to its full extent.

I therefore recommend to the Congress that both Houses, by a two-thirds vote, shall propose an amendment to the Constitution conferring the power to levy an income tax upon the National Government without apportionment among the States in proportion to population."

[Legislative Intent of the 16th Amendment written by President William Taft, June 16, 1909, Congressional Record pp. 3344-3345, SEDM Exhibit #02.001; https://sedm.org/Exhibits/ExhibitIndex.htm]

From the above, we can see that the income tax implemented by the Sixteenth Amendment is NOT a tax upon private human beings, but upon the GOVERNMENT. That government is a federal corporation pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §3002(15)(A).

"Corporations are also of all grades, and made for varied objects; all governments are corporations, created by usage and common consent, or grants and charters which create a body politic for prescribed purposes; but whether they are private, local or general, in their objects, for the enjoyment of property, or the exercise of power, they are all governed by the same rules of law, as to the construction and the obligation of the instrument by which the incorporation is made. One universal rule of law protects persons and property. It is a fundamental principle of the common law of England, that the term freemen of the kingdom, includes all persons, ecclesiastical and temporal, incorporate, politque or natural; it is a part of their magna charta (2 Inst. 4), and is incorporated into our institutions. The persons of the members of corporations are on the same footing of protection as other persons, and their corporate property secured by the same laws which protect that of individuals. 2 Inst. 46-7. 'No man shall be taken,' 'no man shall be disseised,' without due process of law, is a principle taken from magna charta, infused into all our state constitutions, and is made inviolable by the federal government, by the amendments to the constitution."

[Proprietors of Charles River Bridge v. Proprietors of Warren Bridge, 46 U.S. 420 (1837)]

Hence, the income tax is an excise tax ONLY upon public offices. Everything the government does as a legal fiction is done through public offices and contracts. Hence, the tax could ONLY be upon these offices and contracts:

"All the powers of the government [including ALL of its civil enforcement powers against the public] must be carried into operation by individual agency, either through the medium of public officers, or contracts made with [private] individuals."

Any federally chartered corporation is an instrumentality of the mother “U.S. Inc.” corporation and therefore ALSO a public office and franchise of the national government.

At common law, a “corporation” was an “artificial person[ ] endowed with the legal capacity of perpetual succession” consisting either of a single individual (“termed a “corporation sole”) or of a collection of several individuals (“a corporation aggregate”). 3 H. Stephen, Commentaries on the Laws of England 166, 168 (1st Am. ed. 1845). The sovereign was considered a corporation. See id., at 170; see also J. Blackstone, Commentaries *467. Under the definitions supplied by contemporary law dictionaries, Territories would have been classified as "corporations" (and hence as "persons") at the time that 1983 was enacted and the Dictionary Act recodified. See W. Anderson, A Dictionary of Law 261 (1893) ("All corporations were originally modeled upon a state or nation"); J. Bouvier, A Law Dictionary Adapted to the Constitution and Laws of the United States of America 318-319 (11th ed. 1866) ("In this extensive sense the United States may be termed a corporation"); Van Brocklin
Hence, the tax proposed above by the proposed Sixteenth Amendment is a tax ONLY upon federal corporations, which are franchises.

"Is it a franchise? A franchise is said to be a right reserved to the people by the constitution, as the elective franchise. Again, it is said to be a privilege conferred by grant from government, and vested in one or more individuals, as a public office. Corporations, or bodies politic are the most usual franchises known to our laws."

[People v. Ridgley, 21 Ill. 65, 1859 WL 6687, 11 Peck 65 (Ill., 1859)]

The income tax is a franchise tax upon the PRIVILEGE of operating as a federal and not state corporation. It is in effect functions as "liability insurance premium" paid to the government for the privilege of operating the corporation WITHOUT personal liability to the officers of the corporation or shareholders. All franchises are implemented as excise taxes and would come under the category of excise taxes within Article 1, Section 8, Clause 1 of the Constitution:

Article I - U.S. Constitution

Section 8

Clause 1

The Congress shall have Power To lay and collect Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises, to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defence and general Welfare of the United States; but all Duties, Imposts and Excises shall be uniform throughout the United States;

The above analysis explains the following rulings on the income taxes AFTER the Sixteenth Amendment proposed by Taft was enacted FRAUDULENTLY:

"The Sixteenth Amendment declares that Congress shall have power to levy and collect taxes on income, "from [271 U.S. 174] whatever source derived," without apportionment among the several states and without regard to any census or enumeration. It was not the purpose or effect of that amendment to bring any new subject within the taxing power. Congress already had power to tax all incomes. But taxes on incomes from some sources had been held to be "direct taxes" within the meaning of the constitutional requirement as to apportionment. Art. 1, § 2, cl. 3, § 9, cl. 4; Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 158 U.S. 601. The Amendment relieved that requirement, and obliterated the distinction in that respect between taxes on income that are direct taxes and those that are not, and so put on the same basis all incomes "from whatever source derived." Brushaber v. Union P. R. Co., 240 U.S. 1, 17. "Income" has been taken to mean the same thing as used in the Corporation Excise Tax Act of 1909, in the Sixteenth Amendment, and in the various revenue acts subsequently passed. Southern Pacific Co. v. Lowe, 247 U.S. 330, 335; Merchants' L. & T. Co. v. Smietanka, 255 U.S. 509, 219. After full consideration, this Court declared that income may be defined as gain derived from capital, from labor, or from both combined, including profit gained through sale or conversion of capital. Stratton's Independence v. Howbert, 231 U.S. 399, 415; Doyle v. Mitchell Brothers Co., 247 U.S. 179, 185; Eisner v. Macomber, 252 U.S. 189, 207. And that definition has been adhered to and applied repeatedly. See, e.g., Merchants' L. & T. Co. v. Smietanka, supra; 518; Goodrich v. Edwards, 255 U.S. 527, 535; United States v. Phellis, 257 U.S. 156, 169; Miles v. Safe Deposit Co., 259 U.S. 247, 252-253; United States v. Supplee-Biddle Co., 265 U.S. 189, 194; Irwin v. Gavit, 268 U.S. 161, 167; Edwards v. Cuba Railroad, 268 U.S. 628, 633. In determining what constitutes income, substance rather than form is to be given controlling weight. Eisner v. Macomber, supra, 206, [271 U.S. 175]

Note that the tax described in the Corporation Excise Tax Act of 1909 was a tax ONLY upon federal and not state corporations.

"...Whatever difficulty there may be about a precise scientific definition of 'income,' it imports, as used here, something entirely distinct from principal or capital either as a subject of taxation or as a measure of the tax; conveying rather the idea of gain or increase arising from corporate activities."

[Doyle v. Mitchell Brothers Co., 247 U.S. 179, 185, 38 S.Ct. 467 (1918)]

"As repeatedly pointed out by this court, the Corporation Tax Law of 1909, imposed an excise or privilege tax, and not in any sense, a tax upon property or upon income merely as income. It was enacted in view of the decision of Pollock v. Farmer's Loan & T. Co., 157 U.S. 429, 29 L.Ed. 759, 15 Sup. St. Rep. 673, 158 U.S. 601,
When confronted by the above realities in a video interview, the Former IRS Commissioner Shelton Cohen (a Jewish money grubbing Pharisee in private practice at the time) told movie producer Aaron Russo (who had terminal cancer at the time) that he didn’t give a DAMN about what the Supreme Court says on the subject! Quite the anarchist! Instead he said all the people in Washington want to do is “play word games”. He didn’t say WHY they want to play “word games” but the reason is obvious: They want to deceive people out of their money by playing word games. SCUM BAG. He ought to be behind bars! 5.2.14.3  Being a federal corporation is the ONLY way provided in federal statutes to transition from being legislatively “foreign” to “domestic”

The definitions found within the Internal Revenue Code and the rules of statutory construction betray the fact that the only way to be “domestic” in relation to the national government is to be is be a national corporation registered in the District of Colombia.

26 U.S. Code § 7701 - Definitions

(a) When used in this title, where not otherwise distinctly expressed or manifestly incompatible with the intent thereof—

(3) Corporation

The term “corporation” includes associations, joint-stock companies, and insurance companies.

(4) Domestic

The term “domestic” when applied to a corporation or partnership means created or organized in the United States or under the law of the United States or of any State unless, in the case of a partnership, the Secretary provides otherwise by regulations.

(5) Foreign

The term “foreign” when applied to a corporation or partnership means a corporation or partnership which is not domestic.

The rules of statutory construction forbid extending the statutory term defined above to include anything OTHER than that defined above, including PRIVATE human beings. Therefore, the ONLY thing “domestic” are national corporations. All human beings are therefore FOREIGN for legislative purposes.
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax and n. 10 (5th ed. 1992) (collecting cases). That is to say, the statute, read “as a whole,” post at 998 [350 U.S. 943] (THOMAS, J., dissenting), leads the reader to a definition. That definition does not include the Attorney General’s restriction -- “the child up to the head.” Its words, “substantial portion,” indicate the contrary.” [Stenberg v. Carhart, 530 U.S. 914 (2000)]

“Expresio unius est exclusio alterius. A maxim of statutory interpretation meaning that the expression of one thing is the exclusion of another. Burgin v. Forbes, 293 Ky, 456, 169 S.W.2d. 321, 325; Newblock v. Bowles, 170 Okl. 487, 40 P.2d. 1097, 1100. Mention of one thing implies exclusion of another. When certain persons or things are specified in a law, contract, or will, an intention to exclude all others from its operation may be inferred. Under this maxim, if statute specifies one exception to a general rule or assumes to specify the effects of a certain provision, other exceptions or effects are excluded.” [Black’s Law Dictionary, Sixth Edition, p. 581]

Everything that is either NOT a corporation or NOT registered in the District of Columbia as a national corporation is therefore legislatively “foreign” for the purpose of the Internal Revenue Code. This is also consistent with the fact that “income” is defined in the Internal Revenue Code and by the U.S. Supreme Court as profit in connection with a federal corporation or business trust.

"The Sixteenth Amendment declares that Congress shall have power to levy and collect taxes on income, "from whatever source derived," without apportionment among the several states and without regard to any census or enumeration. It was not the purpose or effect of that amendment to bring any new subject within the taxing power. Congress already had power to tax all incomes. But taxes on incomes from some sources had been held to be "direct taxes" within the meaning of the constitutional requirement as to apportionment. Art. 1, §2, cl. 3, § 9, cl. 4; Pollock v. Farmers’ Loan & Trust Co., 158 U.S. 601. The Amendment relieved from that requirement, and obliterated the distinction in that respect between taxes on income that are direct taxes and those that are not, and so put on the same basis all incomes "from whatever source derived." Brushaber v. Union P. R. Co., 240 U.S. 1. 17. "Income" has been taken to mean the same thing as used in the Corporation Excise Tax Act of 1909, in the Sixteenth Amendment, and in the various revenue acts subsequently passed. Southern Pacific Co. v. Lowe, 247 U.S. 330, 335; Merchants’ L. & T. Co. v. Smietanka, 255 U.S. 509, 519. After full consideration, this Court declared that income may be defined as gain derived from capital, from labor, or from both combined, including profit gained through sale or conversion of capital. Stratton v. Independence, supra; Bowers v. Kerbaugh-Empire Co., 271 U.S. 174. (1926)"

(b) Income

For purposes of this subpart and subparts B, C, and D, the term “income”, when not preceded by the words “taxable”, “distributable net”, “undistributed net”, or “gross”, means the amount of income of the estate or trust for the taxable year determined under the terms of the governing instrument and applicable local law.

Items of gross income constituting extraordinary dividends or taxable stock dividends which the fiduciary, acting in good faith, determines to be allocable to corpus under the terms of the governing instrument and applicable local law shall not be considered income.

That “trust” described above in turn is ONLY a PUBLIC trust, meaning the “United States corporation”. The definitions of “person” within the Internal Revenue Code confirm this:

The Great IRS Hoax: Why We Don’t Owe Income Tax, version 4.54

The PRIVILEGE of exercising the “functions of a public office” is the PRIVILEGE being taxed. That “privilege” is legally defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(26) as a “trade or business”:

"As repeatedly pointed out by this court, the Corporation Tax Law of 1909, imposed an excise or privilege tax, and not an income tax, upon income merely as income. It was, in fact, an exercise of the discretion of Pollock v. Farmer's Loan & T. Co., 157 U.S. 429, 25 L.Ed. 759, 15 Sup.St.Rep. 673, 158 U.S. 601, 39 L.Ed. 1108, 15 Sup.Ct.Rep. 912, which held the income tax provisions of a previous law to be unconstitutional because amounting in effect to a direct tax upon property within the meaning of the Constitution, and because not apportioned in the manner required by that instrument."

Congress can only tax or regulate what it creates, and it didn’t create you. Corporations and offices within the government in fact are the only legal “persons” they can lawfully create and therefore tax. This is explained in:

Hierarchy of Sovereignty: The Power to Create is the Power to Tax, Family Guardian Fellowship
http://famguardian.org/Subjects/Taxes/Remedies/PowerToCreate.htm

Everything the government DIDN’T create is therefore PRIVATE and legislatively FOREIGN. The U.S. Supreme Court confirmed that the tax is upon AGENCY as a PUBLIC OFFICE in the national government when they held that the tax can lawfully extend ONLY where the government itself extends, but no further.

"Loughborough v. Blake, 5 Wheat. 317, 5 L.Ed. 98, was an action of trespass or, as appears by the original record, replevin, brought in the circuit court for the District of Columbia to try the right of Congress to impose a direct tax for general purposes on that District. 3 Stat. at L. 216, chap. 56. It was insisted that Congress could act in a double capacity: in one as legislating for the District of Columbia. In the latter character, it was admitted that the power of levy direct taxes might be exercised, but for District purposes only, as a state legislature might tax for state purposes; but that it could not legislate for the District under art. 1, 8, giving to Congress the power 'to lay and collect taxes, impost, and excises, which shall be uniform throughout the United States,' inasmuch as the District was no part of the United States described in the Constitution. It was held that the grant of this power was a general one without limitation as to places, and consequently extended to all places over which the government extends; and that it extended to the District of Columbia as a constituent part of the United States. The fact that art. 1, 2, declares that 'representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several states . . . according to their respective numbers' furnished a standard by which taxes were apportioned, but not to exempt any part of the country from their operation. The words used do not mean that direct taxes shall be imposed on states only which are represented, or shall be apportioned to representatives, but that direct taxation, in its application to states, shall be apportioned to numbers.' That art. 1, 9, 4, declaring that direct taxes shall be laid in proportion to the census, was applicable to the District of Columbia, and will enable Congress to apportion on its just and equal share of the burden, with the same accuracy as on the respective states. If the tax be laid in this proportion, it is within the very words of the restriction. It is a tax in proportion to the census or enumeration referred to. It was further held that the words of the 9th section did not 'in terms require that the system of direct taxation, when resorted to, shall be extended to the territories, as the words of the 2d section require that it shall be extended to all the states. They therefore may, without violence, be understood to give a rule when the territories shall be taxed, without imposing the necessity of taxing them.'"

[Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U.S. 244 (1901)]

The phrase “extended to all places over which the government extends” means where the OFFICES and therefore STATUTORY “persons” of the government extend. Those offices, as indicated above, can be exercised ANYWHERE, but Congress MUST EXPRESSLY authorize their exercise in a SPECIFIC geographic place and cause those exercising it to take an oath, as required by 4 U.S.C. §72 and 5 U.S.C. §3331 respectively. Those offices, in turn, are “officers of a corporation” because the government itself is a corporation as held by the U.S. Supreme Court:

"Corporations are also of all grades, and made for varied objects; all governments are corporations, created by usage and common consent, or grants and charters which create a body politic for prescribed purposes; but whether they are private, local or general, in their objects, for the enjoyment of property, or the exercise of power, they are all governed by the same rules of law, as to the construction and the obligation of the instrument by which the incorporation is made. One universal rule of law protects persons and property. It is a fundamental principle of the common law of England, that the term freemen of the kingdom, includes all persons,' ecclesiastical and temporal, incorporate, politque or natural; it is a part of their magna charta (2 Inst. 4), and is incorporated into our institutions. The persons of the members of corporations are on the same footing of protection as other persons, and their corporate property secured by the same laws which protect that of individuals, 2 Inst. 46-7. 'no man shall be taken,' 'no man shall be disseised,' without due process of law, is a principle taken from magna charta, infused into all our state constitutions, and is made inviolable by the federal government, by the amendments to the constitution."

5.2.14.4 “trade or business”=”public office"

Subtitle A of the Internal Revenue Code imposes a tax upon two distinct groups mentioned in 26 C.F.R. §1.1-1. These are:

1. Public employees domiciled in the federal zone and traveling overseas: The tax is imposed under 26 U.S.C. §8911 upon those domiciled in the federal zone who are traveling temporarily overseas and fall under a tax treaty. The tax applies only to "trade or business" income which is recorded on an IRS Form 1040 and 2555. See also the Supreme Court case of Cook v. Tait, 265 U.S. 47 (1924). The tax imposed in 26 U.S.C. §1 against those domiciled in the federal zone engaged in a "trade or business", which is defined as "the functions of a public office" in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(26). This includes:

   1.1. "U.S. citizens" who are described in 8 U.S.C. §1401 as persons born in the federal zone. See: http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

1.2. “residents” who are all aliens and foreign nationals domiciled in our country.

2. Nonresident aliens receiving government payments: These are all nationals or instrumentalities of a foreign country either physically present on federal territory or at least doing business there under the Minimum Contacts Doctrine and the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act (FSIA). 28 U.S.C. Chapter 97. All of their activities constitute foreign commerce that is subject to regulation or control by the national government. The tax imposed under 26 U.S.C. §871 on nonresident aliens with government income that is:

   2.1. Not connected with a "trade or business" under 26 U.S.C. §871(a) but originates from the federal zone.

   2.2. Connected with a "trade or business" under 26 U.S.C. §871(b).

Those engaged in a “trade or business”:

1. Must be federal statutory "employees" and "public officers" and "subcontractors" for the federal government under 26 C.F.R. §31.3401(c)-(1) and 5 U.S.C. §2105(a).

2. Are acting in a representative capacity for the federal corporation called the “United States” defined in 28 U.S.C. §3002(15)(A) and therefore are subject to the laws where the corporation was incorporated under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 17(b), which is the District of Columbia.

4. Are subject to penalties and the criminal provisions of the Internal Revenue Code while acting as “public officers”. Both 26 U.S.C. §6671(b) and 26 U.S.C. §7343 define “person” as an officer of a corporation, and that corporation is the federal government, which is defined in 28 U.S.C. §3002(15) as a federal corporation.

5. Are withholding agents who are liable under 26 U.S.C. §1461, because they are nonresident aliens who must withhold federal kickbacks and send them to the IRS.

- Engaged in a "trade or business".
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

1. The I.R.C. Subtitle A income tax is NOT implemented through public law or positive law, but primarily through private law. Private law always supersedes enacted positive law because no court or government can interfere with your right to contract. See Article 1, Section 10 of the Constitution for the proof. The W-4 is a contract, and the United States has jurisdiction over its own property and employees under Article 4, Section 3, Clause 2, wherever they may reside, including in places where it has no legislative jurisdiction. The W-4 you signed is a private contract that makes you into a federal employee, and neither the state nor the federal government may interfere with the private right to contract. 26 C.F.R. §31.3402(p)-1 identifies the W-4 as an “agreement”, which is a contract. It doesn’t say that on the form, because your covetous government doesn’t want you to know you are signing a contract by submitting a W-4.

2. The “tax” is not paid by you, but by your “straw man”, who is a federal “public officer” engaged in a “trade or business” as defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(26). His workplace is the “District of Columbia” under 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(39), 26 U.S.C. §7408(d), and Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 17(b). That “public officer” you have volunteered to represent is working as a federal “employee” who is part of the United States government, which is defined as a federal corporation in 26 U.S.C. §3002(15)(A). In that sense, the “tax” is indirect, because you don’t pay it, but your straw man, who is a “public officer”, pays it to your “employer”, the federal government, which is a federal corporation.

3. Because you are a federal “employee” and you work for a federal corporation, then you are acting as an “officer or employee of a federal corporation” and you:
   3.1. Are the proper subject of the penalty statutes, as defined under 26 U.S.C. §6671(b).
   3.3. May have the code enforced against you without implementing regulations as required by 44 U.S.C. §1505(a)(1) and 5 U.S.C. §553(a)(2)

4. The “activity” of performing a “trade or business” is only “taxable” when executed in the statutory “United States” (federal zone), which is defined as in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) and (a)(10) and 4 U.S.C. §110(d). See 26 U.S.C. §864 and this section for evidence.

5. Those who file form 1040 instead of the proper form 1040NR provide evidence under penalty of perjury that they are statutory “U.S. persons” (see 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(30) ) who are domiciled in the statutory “United States” (federal zone). The IRS Published Products Catalog (2003), Document 7130 says the form can only be used for “citizens or residents” of the statutory “United States” (federal zone).

If you would like to know more about the above diagram and the details behind what a “trade or business” is, please consult the following memorandum of law:

The “Trade or Business” Scam, Form #05.001
http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

If you are a “nonresident alien” with no income originating from the statutory “United States” (federal zone) under 26 U.S.C. §871, then you aren’t even mentioned in the I.R.C. as a subject for any Internal Revenue tax. It was shown starting in section 4.11 of the Great IRS Hoax book that nearly all Americans living in states of the Union are “nonresident aliens”, and so the above provision must apply to you, folks. To summarize the findings of this section then, those who are “nonresident aliens” with no “sources of income” connected with a public office (which is defined as a “trade or business” in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(26)) in the District of Columbia and who never signed a W-4:

1. Are not engaged in an excise taxable activity under the I.R.C. Subtitle A.
2. May not lawfully have any Information Returns, such as a W-2, 1098, or 1099 filed against them. See:
   2.1. Correcting Erroneous IRS Form 1042’s, Form #04.003

3. Don’t earn any “gross income”:

Title 26: Internal Revenue
PART I—INCOME TAXES
nnonresident alien individuals
§ 1.872-2 Exclusions from gross income of nonresident alien individuals.

(f) Other exclusions.

Income which is from sources without[outside] the United States [federal zone, see 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) and (a)(10) and 4 U.S.C. §110(d)], as determined under the provisions of sections 861 through 863, and the regulations thereunder, is not included in the gross income of a nonresident alien individual unless such income is effectively connected for the taxable year with the conduct of a trade or business in the United States by that individual. To determine specific exclusions in the case of other items which are from sources within the United States, see the applicable sections of the Code. For special rules under a tax convention for determining the sources of income and for excluding, from gross income, income from sources without the United States which is effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business in the United States, see the applicable tax convention. For determining which income from sources without the United States is effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business in the United States, see section 864(c)(4) and §1.864–5.

4. Their entire estate is a “foreign estate” under 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(31) not subject to the I.R.C.

TITLE 26 > Subtitle E > CHAPTER 79 > § 7701
§ 7701. Definitions

(a) When used in this title, where not otherwise distinctly expressed or manifestly incompatible with the intent thereof—

(31) Foreign estate or trust

(A) Foreign estate

The term “foreign estate” means an estate the income of which, from sources without the United States which is not effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business within the United States, is not includible in gross income under subtitle A.

5. Are a “nontaxpayer” not subject to the I.R.C. All portions within the I.R.C., IRS Publications, and the Internal Revenue Manual (I.R.M.) that refer to “taxpayers” don’t refer to you and can safely be disregarded and disobeyed.

“Revenue Laws relate to taxpayers [officers, employees, and elected officials of the Federal Government] and not to nontaxpayers [American Citizens/American Nationals not subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of the Federal Government]. The latter are without their scope. No procedures are prescribed for non-taxpayers and no attempt is made to annul any of their Rights or Remedies in due course of law.”
[Ecology Plumbing & Heating v. U.S., 470 F.2d 585 (1972)]

6. If any money was withheld from your pay by either a business or a financial institution, then you are due for a refund of all withholding.

7. Cannot file an IRS Form 1040, because EVERYTHING that goes on that form is treated as “effectively connected with a trade or business”. That form is for “aliens”, and not “nonresident aliens”, as was shown in section 5.5.2 of the Great IRS Hoax.

8. Cannot lawfully have any CTR’s, or “Currency Transaction Reports”, prepared against you by any financial institution for withdrawals in excess of $10,000. Only those “effectively connected with a trade or business in the United States” can be the proper subject of CTR’s. See:
http://famguardian.org/Subjects/MoneyBanking/Arihicles/FedTransReptnRequirements.htm

9. Cannot be the subject of federal jurisdiction in the context of Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A

10. Cannot be treated as a federal “employee”.

11. Cannot lawfully be penalized or criminally prosecuted by the IRS for failure to volunteer to participate in the federal tax system.

Based on the above table, ALL of the revenues collected by the IRS under the authority of Subtitle A only apply within the federal zone and are simply donations, not lawful “taxes” for people in states of the Union who are not federal public officers. In particular, Subtitle A of the Internal Revenue Code applies ONLY within the statutory “United States” (federal zone), as is revealed by the definition of “United States” found in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) and (a)(10) and 4 U.S.C. §110(d). The IRS has been involved in criminal extortion in the case of persons domiciled in states of the Union who are not engaged in a “trade or business” because they are:
1. Deliberately and systematically deceiving Americans about the requirements of the I.R.C. using their publications, as was shown in section 3.18 of the Great IRS Hoax. They are doing so by not explaining what “United States” means in their publications and by not emphasizing that Subtitle A of the Internal Revenue Code is entirely voluntary and not a “tax”, but a donation. They also are trying to make most Americans falsely believe that the two jurisdictions identified above are equivalent, and that all Americans living in states of the Union are “citizens of the United States” or “residents” under federal law, when in fact they are not. Americans who make false statements on their tax returns go to jail for 3 years minimum, but the I.R.S. does it with impunity every day in their publications and the federal judiciary refuses to hold them accountable for this constructive fraud.

2. Applying Subtitles A through C of the Internal Revenue Code to persons in states of the Union over which they have no jurisdiction.

4. Enforcing that which is not “law” for that specific group and is therefore unenforceable. The Internal Revenue Code is not “law” for “nontaxpayers”, as you will find out later in section 5.4.3 of the Great IRS Hoax, Form #11.302, and therefore may not be enforced against anyone absent explicit, informed, voluntary consent. This consent is what makes them subject to it and “taxpayers”.

5.2.14.5 U.S. Supreme Court agrees that income tax is a tax on the GOVERNMENT and not PRIVATE people

Below are some authorities we have found proving that I.R.C. Subtitles A and C is an income tax on the GOVERNMENT and not private human beings:

1. All the powers of the government, including civil enforcement powers, require individual agency on behalf of the government by the object of the enforcement. Private people do not have such agency, and therefore cannot be statutory “taxpayers”.

   “All the powers of the government [including ALL of its civil enforcement powers against the public] must be carried into operation by individual agency, either through the medium of public officers, or contracts made with [private] individuals.”

2. Congress has no legislative power within a state and cannot establish franchises such as a “trade or business” there:

   “Thus, Congress having power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes, may, without doubt, provide for granting coasting licenses, licenses to pilots, licenses to trade with the Indians, and any other licenses necessary or proper for the exercise of that great and extensive a power; and the same observation is applicable to every other power of Congress, to the exercise of which the granting of licenses may be incident. All such licenses confer authority, and give rights to the licensee.

   But very different considerations apply to the internal commerce or domestic trade of the States. Over this commerce and trade Congress has no power of regulation nor any direct control. This power belongs exclusively to the States. No interference by Congress with the business of citizens transacted within a State is warranted by the Constitution, except such as is strictly incidental to the exercise of powers clearly granted to the legislature. The power to authorize a business within a State is plainly repugnant to the exclusive power of the State over the same subject. It is true that the power of Congress to tax is a very extensive power. It is given in the Constitution, with only one exception and only two qualifications. Congress cannot tax exports, and it must impose direct taxes by the rule of apportionment, and indirect taxes by the rule of uniformity. Thus limited, and thus only, it reaches every subject, and may be exercised at discretion. But, it reaches only existing subjects. Congress cannot authorize [e.g. LICENSE, using a Social Security Number (SSN) or Taxpayer Identification Number (TIN)] a trade or business [per 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(26)] within a State in order to tax it.”
   [License Tax Cases, 72 U.S. 462, 18 L.Ed. 497, 5 Wall. 462, 2 A.F.T.R. 2224 (1866)]

3. The income tax extends ONLY to all places where the GOVERNMENT rather than the TERRITORY served BY the government extends. The cite below explains why “United States” is legally defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) and (a)(10) as the District of Columbia and NO part of any state of the Union, as we point out in the next section.

   “Loughborough v. Blake, 5 Wheat. 317, 5 L.Ed. 98, was an action of trespass or, as appears by the original record, replevin, brought in the circuit court for the District of Columbia to try the right of Congress to impose a direct tax for general purposes on that District. 3 Stat. at L. 216, chap. 60. It was insisted that Congress could act in a double capacity; in one as legislating [182 U.S. 244, 260] for the states; in the other as a local legislature for the District of Columbia. In the latter character, it was admitted that the power of levying direct taxes might be exercised, but for District purposes only, as a state legislature might tax for state purposes; but that it could not legislate for the District under art. 1, 8, giving to Congress the power 'to lay and collect taxes, imposts, and excises,' which 'shall be uniform throughout the United States,' inasmuch as the District was not part of the United States [described in the Constitution]. It was held that the grant of this power was a general one without limitation as to place, and consequently extended to all places over which the government extends; and that it extended to the District of Columbia as a constituent part of the United States."

[Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U.S. 244 (1901)]

In support of our hypothesis:

3.1. Note the phrase: "WHEREVER THE GOVERNMENT EXTENDS" and contrast with "WHEREVER THE TERRITORY EXTENDS".

3.2. Note the phrase ""WITHOUT LIMITATION AS TO PLACE", which can only mean contract and debt, because neither are limited as to place:

Debt and contract [franchise agreement, in this case] are of no particular place.
Locus contractus regit actum.
The place of the contract [franchise agreement, in this case] governs the act.
[Bouvier’s Maxims of Law, 1856; SOURCE: http://famguardian.org/Publications/BouvierMaximsOfLaw/BouviersMaxims.htm]

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 17 governs what is called “choice of law” in civil disputes within federal courts. Consistent with the above, Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 17(b) says that the law that applies to all civil disputes in federal court is the law from the DOMICILE of the party:

IV. PARTIES > Rule 17.
Rule 17. Parties Plaintiff and Defendant; Capacity
(b) Capacity to Sue or be Sued.

Capacity to sue or be sued is determined as follows:
(1) for an individual who is not acting in a representative capacity, by the law of the individual’s domicile;
(2) for a corporation, by the law under which it was organized; and
(3) for all other parties, by the law of the state where the court is located, except that:
(A) a partnership or other unincorporated association with no such capacity under that state’s law may sue or be sued in its common name to enforce a substantive right existing under the United States Constitution or laws; and
(B) 28 U.S.C. §§ 754 and 959(a) govern the capacity of a receiver appointed by a United States court to sue or be sued in a United States court.

[Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 17(b)]

Those domiciled OUTSIDE of federal territory and the statutory “United States” cannot quote federal civil law in disputes in federal court. The only exception given above is if they are representing a legislatively foreign corporation, such as a federal corporation, in which case the law that applies is the law of the DOMICILE of the foreign corporation rather than the OFFICER’S domicile. Hence, those within states of the Union acting as officers of the national government, whether officers of a federal corporation, federal government workers, or federal public officers, can cite ONLY the laws of the United States government in the context of their official duties in a federal civil court. The authority for doing so is Article 4, Section 3, Clause 2 of the United States Constitution

United States Constitution
Article 4, Section 3, Clause 2

The Congress shall have Power to dispose of and make all needful Rules and Regulations respecting the Territory or other Property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to Prejudice any Claims of the United States, or of any particular State.

The above provision empowers congress to make all INTERNAL rules for operating the GOVERNMENT. The INTERNAL Revenue Code and the INTERNAL Revenue Service that enforces it both count as JUST such a rule.

"The Constitution permits Congress to dispose of and to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States. This power applies as well to territory belonging to the United States within the States, as beyond them. It comprehends all the public domain, wherever it may be. The argument is, that the power to make ‘ALL needful rules and regulations’ is a power of legislation."
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

5.2.14.6 “United States” in a geographical sense ONLY means federal territory and excludes constitutional states of the Union

The following definitions imply that the United States meant in the Internal Revenue Code is federal territories and the “United States*" mentioned in the previous section:

TITLE 26 > Subtitle F > CHAPTER 79 > Sec. 7701. [Internal Revenue Code] Sec. 7701. - Definitions

(a) When used in this title, where not otherwise distinctly expressed or manifestly incompatible with the intent thereof—

(9) United States

The term “United States” when used in a geographical sense includes only the States and the District of Columbia.

(10) State

The term “State” shall be construed to include the District of Columbia, where such construction is necessary to carry out provisions of this title.

The term “the States” also implies the following:

TITLE 4 - FLAG AND SEAL, SEAT OF GOVERNMENT, AND THE STATES

CHAPTER 4 - THE STATES

Sec. 110. Same: definitions

(d) The term “State" includes any Territory or possession of the United States.

Based on the rules of statutory construction, we are not allowed to PRESUME anything OTHER than that which is expressly specified and a failure to observe this rule is a violation of due process of law, a violation of the constitutional requirement for reasonable notice, and a tort:

"It is apparent that a constitutional prohibition cannot be transgressed indirectly by the creation of a statutory presumption any more than it can be violated by direct enactment. The power to create presumptions is not a means of escape from constitutional restrictions."

[Bailey v. Alabama, 219 U.S. 219 (1911)]

"Expresio unius est exclusio alterius. A maxim of statutory interpretation meaning that the expression of one thing is the exclusion of another. Bargen v. Forbes, 293 Ky. 456, 169 S.W.2d 321, 325; Newblock v. Bowles, 170 Okl. 487, 40 P.2d 1097, 1100. Mention of one thing implies exclusion of another. When certain persons or things are specified in a law, contract, or will, an intention to exclude all others from its operation may be inferred. Under this maxim, if statute specifies one exception to a general rule or assumes to specify the effects of a certain provision, other exceptions or effects are excluded.”

"When a statute includes an explicit definition, we must follow that definition, even if it varies from that term’s ordinary meaning. Meese v. Keene, 481 U.S. 465, 484-485 (1987) (“It is axiomatic that the statutory definition of the term excludes unstated meanings of that term”). Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. at 392-393, n. 10 (“As a rule, a definition which declares what a term "means" . . . excludes any meaning that is not stated”).]; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Lenroot, 323 U.S. 490, 502 (1945); Fox v. Standard Oil Co. of N.J., 294 U.S. 87, 95-96 (1935) (Cardozo, J.); see also 2A N. Singer, Sutherland on Statutes and Statutory Construction § 47.07, p. 152, and n. 10 (5th ed. 1992) (collecting cases). That is to say, the statute, read "as a whole," post at 998 [530 U.S. 943] (THOMAS, J., dissenting), leads the reader to a definition. That definition does not include the Attorney General’s restriction -- "the child up to the head." Its words, “substantial portion,” indicate the contrary.”

Note the following important facts:

1. We are NOT implying that the GEOGRAPHIC sense is the ONLY sense in which the term “United States” is used in Internal Revenue Code, Subtitles A and C.
2. The only sense OTHER than the “GEOGRAPHIC SENSE” in which the term “United States” can be or is used within Internal Revenue Code, Subtitles A and C is the NATIONAL GOVERNMENT as a legal person, a federal corporation, and a statutory but not constitutional “person”.
3. Based on the rules of statutory construction, the only time when the GEOGRAPHIC sense can logically be implied is when the term “United States” is PRECEDED by the word “geographic”.

Note that if you don’t clarify the above when you are litigating this issue, you be told that your argument is frivolous per Becraft v. Nelson (In re Becraft), 885 F.2d. 547, 549 n2 (9th Circuit).

5.2.14.7 Lack of enforcement regulations in Internal Revenue Code, Subtitles A and C imply that enforcement provisions only apply to government workers39

“Our records indicate that the Internal Revenue Service has not incorporated by reference [as required by Implementing Regulation 26 C.F.R. §601.702(a)(1)] a requirement to make an income tax return.” [Emphasis added]

[SEDM Exhibit #05.005; SOURCE: http://sedm.org/Exhibits/ExhibitIndex.htm]

A very important method of determining who the intended audience for an enforcement statute or regulation is to look at whether or not it has implementing enforcement regulations. This section will expand upon the notice and publication process for federal regulations to pinpoint the exact steps by which enforcement authority is obtained by Executive Branch agencies and will describe who the specific targets of the enforcement may lawfully be based upon the method of publication. We will prove that for the purposes of the enforcement provisions of the Internal Revenue Code, there are no implementing regulations and therefore, that the ONLY lawful audience for enforcement is officers of the government.

The Federal Register Act, 44 U.S.C. §1505 et seq., and the Administrative Procedures Act, 5 U.S.C. §553 et seq, both describe laws which may be enforced as “laws having general applicability and legal effect”. Laws which have general applicability and legal effect are laws that apply to persons OTHER than those in the government or to the public at large. To wit, read the following, which is repeated in slightly altered form in 5 U.S.C. §553(a):

TITLE 44 > CHAPTER 15 > § 1505
§ 1505. Documents to be published in Federal Register

(a) Proclamations and Executive Orders; Documents Having General Applicability and Legal Effect; Documents Required To Be Published by Congress. There shall be published in the Federal Register—

[...] For the purposes of this chapter every document or order which prescribes a penalty has general applicability and legal effect.

The requirement for “reasonable notice” or “due notice” as part of Constitutional due process extends not only to statutes and regulations AFTER they are enacted into law, such as when they are enforced in a court of law, but also to the publication of proposed statutes and rules/regulations BEFORE they are enacted and subsequently enforced by agencies within the Executive Branch. The Federal Register is the ONLY approved method by which the public at large domiciled in “States of the Union” are provided with “reasonable notice” and an opportunity to comment publicly on new or proposed statutes OR rules/regulations which will directly affect them and which may be enforced directly against them.

Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

A notice of hearing or of opportunity to be heard, required or authorized to be given by an Act of Congress, or which may otherwise properly be given, shall be deemed to have been given to all persons residing within the States of the Union and the District of Columbia, except in cases where notice by publication is insufficient in law, when the notice is published in the Federal Register at such a time that the period between the publication and the date fixed in the notice for the hearing or for the termination of the opportunity to be heard is—

Neither statutes nor the rules/regulations which implement them may be directly enforced within states of the Union against the general public unless and until they have been so published in the Federal Register.

TITLE 5 > PART I > CHAPTER 5 > SUBCHAPTER II > § 552
§ 552. Public information; agency rules, opinions, orders, records, and proceedings§ 1508. Publication in Federal Register as notice of hearing

Except to the extent that a person has actual and timely notice of the terms thereof, a person may not in any manner be required to resort to, or be adversely affected by, a matter required to be published in the Federal Register and not so published. For the purpose of this paragraph, matter reasonably available to the class of persons affected thereby is deemed published in the Federal Register when incorporated by reference therein with the approval of the Director of the Federal Register.

26 C.F.R. §601.702 Publication and public inspection

(a)(2)(ii) Effect of failure to publish.

Except to the extent that a person has actual and timely notice of the terms of any matter referred to in subparagraph (1) of this paragraph which is required to be published in the Federal Register, such person is not required in any manner to resort to, or be adversely affected by, such matter if it is not so published or is not incorporated by reference therein pursuant to subdivision (i) of this subparagraph. Thus, for example, any such matter which imposes an obligation and which is not so published or incorporated by reference will not adversely change or affect a person’s rights.

The only exceptions to the requirement for publication in the Federal Register of the statute and the implementing regulations are the groups specifically identified by Congress as expressly exempted from this requirement, as follows:

2. A matter relating to agency management or personnel or to public property, loans, grants, benefits, or contracts. 5 U.S.C. §553(a)(2).
3. Federal agencies or persons in their capacity as officers, agents, or employees thereof. 44 U.S.C. §1505(a)(1).

All of the above requirements are also mentioned in 5 U.S.C. §301 (federal employees), which establishes that the head of an Executive or military department may prescribe regulations for the internal government of his department.

TITLE 5 > PART I > CHAPTER 3 > § 301
§ 301. Departmental regulations

The head of an Executive department or military department may prescribe regulations for the government of his department, the conduct of its employees, the distribution and performance of its business, and the custody, use, and preservation of its records, papers, and property. This section does not authorize withholding information from the public or limiting the availability of records to the public.

Based on the above, the burden of proof imposed upon the government at any due process meeting in which it is enforcing any provision is to produce at least ONE of the following TWO things:

1. Evidence signed under penalty of perjury by someone with personal, first-hand knowledge, proving that you are a member of one of the three groups specifically exempted from the requirement for implementing regulations, as identified above.
2. Evidence of publication in the Federal Register of BOTH the statute AND the implementing regulation which they seek to enforce against you.

Without satisfying one of the above two requirements, the government is illegally enforcing federal law and becomes liable for a constitutional tort. For case number two above, the federal courts have said the following enlightening things:
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

5-275

“...for federal tax purposes, federal regulations [rather than the statutes ONLY] govern.”
[Dodd v. United States, 223 F.Supp. 785]

[United States v. Levy, 533 F.2d 969 (1976)]

“An administrative regulation, of course, is not a "statute." While in practical effect regulations may be called "little laws," they are at most but offspring of statutes. Congress alone may pass a statute, and the Criminal Appeals Act calls for direct appeals if the District Court's dismissal is based upon the invalidity or construction of a statute. See United States v. Jones, 345 U.S. 377 (1953). This Court has always construed the Criminal Appeals Act narrowly, limiting it strictly "to the instances specified." United States v. Borden Co., 308 U.S. 188, 192 (1939). See also United States v. Swift & Co., 311 U.S. 442 (1941). Here the statute is not complete by itself, since it merely declares the range of its operation and leaves to its progeny the means to be utilized in the effectuation of its command. But it is the statute which creates the offense of the willful removal of the labels of origin and provides the punishment for violations. The regulations, on the other hand, prescribe the identifying language of the label itself, and assign the resulting tags to their respective geographical areas. Once promulgated, [361 U.S. 431, 438] these regulations, called for by the statute itself, have the force of law, and violations thereof incur criminal prosecutions, just as if all the details had been incorporated into the congressional language. The result is that neither the statute nor the regulations are complete without the other, and only together do they have any force. In effect, therefore, the construction of one necessarily involves the construction of the other.”
[U.S. v. Mersky, 361 U.S. 431 (1960)]

“...the Act's civil and criminal penalties attach only upon violation of the regulation promulgated by the Secretary, if the Secretary were to do nothing, the Act itself would impose no penalties on anyone. The Government urges that since only those who violate these regulations [not the Code] may incur civil or criminal penalties, it is the actual regulations issued by the Secretary of the Treasury, and not the broad authorizing language of the statute, which are to be tested against the standards of the Fourth Amendment; and that when so tested they are valid.”
[Calif. Bankers Assoc. v. Shultz, 416 U.S. 21, 44, 39 L.Ed.2d. 812, 94 S.Ct. 1494]

“Although the relevant statute authorized the Secretary to impose such a duty, his implementing regulations did not do so. Therefore we held that there was no duty to disclose...”
[United States v. Murphy, 809 F.2d. 142, 1431]

"Failure to adhere to agency regulations [by the IRS or other agency] may amount to denial of due process if regulations are required by constitution or statute..."
[Curley v. United States, 791 F.Supp. 52]

Another very interesting observation is that the federal courts have essentially ruled that I.R.C. Subtitle A pertains exclusively to government employees, agents, and officers, when they held:

“Federal income tax regulations governing filing of income tax returns do not require Office of Management and Budget control numbers because requirement to file tax return is mandated by statute, not by regulation.”

Since there are no implementing regulations for most federal tax enforcement, the statutes which establish the requirement are only directly enforceable against those who are members of the groups specifically exempted from the requirement for implementing regulations published in the Federal Register as described above. This is also consistent with the statutes authorizing enforcement within the I.R.C. itself found in 26 U.S.C. §6331, which say on the subject the following:

26 U.S.C., Subchapter D - Seizure of Property for Collection of Taxes
Sec. 6331. Levy and distraint

(a) Authority of Secretary

If any person liable to pay any tax neglects or refuses to pay the same within 10 days after notice and demand, it shall be lawful for the Secretary to collect such tax (and such further sum as shall be sufficient to cover the expenses of the levy) by levy upon all property and rights to property (except such property as is exempt under section 6334) belonging to such person or on which there is a lien provided in this chapter for the payment of such tax. Levy may be made upon the accrued salary or wages of any officer, employee, or elected official, of the United States, the District of Columbia, or any agency or instrumentality of the United States or the District of Columbia, by serving a notice of levy on the employer (as defined in section 3401(d)) of such officer, employee, or elected official. If the Secretary makes a finding that the collection of such tax is in jeopardy, notice and demand for immediate payment of such tax may be made by the Secretary and, upon failure or refusal to pay such tax, collection thereof by levy shall be lawful without regard to the 10-day period provided in this section.

With respect to the Internal Revenue Code specifically, we have searched for enforcement regulations and found that:

1. There are no implementing regulations for the enforcement provisions of the Internal Revenue Code, Subtitles A and C.
2. Without such enforcement regulations, the provisions cited can and do apply ONLY to government statutory “employees”, to include:
   2.2. A matter relating to agency management or personnel or to public property, loans, grants, benefits, or contracts. 5 U.S.C. §553(a)(2).
   2.3. Federal agencies or persons in their capacity as officers, agents, or employees thereof. 44 U.S.C. §1505(a)(1).

We have tabulated our results to make them usable against the government in the following section. You can use the following section at an IRS deposition against an IRS agent to give them the opportunity to PROVE that there ARE implementing regulations and therefore, that the enforcement provisions apply to PRIVATE, non-governmental people such as yourself.

NOTES:

1. The only “persons” liable for penalties related to ANY tax are federal corporations or their employees.
2. 26 U.S.C. §6201 is the only statute authorizing assessment instituted by the Secretary, and this assessment may only be accomplished under 6201(a)(2) for taxes payable by stamp and not on a return, all of which are tobacco and alcohol taxes.

3. The only statutory collection activity authorized is under 26 U.S.C. §§6331 and 6331(a) of this section only authorizes levy against elected or appointed officers of the U.S. government. The only other type of collection that can occur must be the result of a court order and NOT either a Notice of Levy or a Notice of Seizure.

26 U.S.C.,
Subchapter D - Seizure of Property for Collection of Taxes
Sec. 6331. Levy and distraint

(a) Authority of Secretary

If any person liable to pay any tax neglects or refuses to pay the same within 10 days after notice and demand, it shall be lawful for the Secretary to collect such tax (and such further sum as shall be sufficient to cover the expenses of the levy) by levy upon all property and rights to property (except such property as is exempt under section 6334) belonging to such person or on which there is a lien provided in this chapter for the payment of such tax. Levy may be made upon the accrued salary or wages of any officer, employee, or elected official, of the United States, the District of Columbia, or any agency or instrumentality of the United States or the District of Columbia, by serving a notice of levy on the employer (as defined in section 3401(d)) of such officer, employee, or elected official. If the Secretary makes a finding that the collection of such tax is in jeopardy, notice and demand for immediate payment of such tax may be made by the Secretary and, upon failure or refusal to pay such tax, collection thereof by levy shall be lawful without regard to the 10-day period provided in this section.

(b) Seizure and sale of property

The term "levy" as used in this title includes the power of distraint and seizure by any means. Except as otherwise provided in subsection (e), a levy shall extend only to property possessed and obligations existing at the time thereof. In any case in which the Secretary may levy upon property or rights to property, he may seize and sell such property or rights to property (whether real or personal, tangible or intangible).

4. The only IRS agents who are authorized to execute any of the enforcement activity listed above must carry a pocket commission which designates them as “E” for enforcement rather than “A” for administrative.

5. For the purposes of all taxes above, the term “employee” is defined as follows:

26 U.S.C. §3401(c)

Employee

For purposes of this chapter, the term "employee" includes [is limited to] an officer, employee, or elected official of the United States, a State, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, or any agency or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing. The term "employee" also includes an officer of a corporation.

26 C.F.R. §31.3401(c)-1 Employee: "...the term [employee] includes officers and employees, whether elected or appointed, of the United States, a [federal] State, Territory, Puerto Rico or any political subdivision, thereof, or the District of Columbia, or any agency or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing. The term 'employee' also includes an officer of a corporation."

8 Federal Register, Tuesday, September 7, 1943, §404.104, pg. 12267

Employee: “The term employee specifically includes officers and employees whether elected or appointed, of the United States, a state, territory, or political subdivision thereof or the District of Columbia or any agency or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing.”
5.2.14.8 "resident" means a public officer contractor within the I.R.C.

Most people falsely PRESUME that the word “resident” within the Internal Revenue Code is associated with a geographic place. This presumption is false because:

4. The word “resident” is nowhere associated with a geographic place within the I.R.C. It is therefore a violation of due process of law to PRESUME that it is.

5. As we repeatedly pointed out in the following document, the I.R.C. Subtitles A through C are a franchise, and that all franchises are contracts or agreements:

   [The "Trade or Business" Scam, Form #05.001 http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm]

6. There is a maxim of law that debt and contract are independent of place.

   Debuitum et contractus non sunt nullius loci.
   Debt and contract [franchise agreement, in this case] are of no particular place.

   Locus contractus regit actum.
   The place of the contract [franchise agreement, in this case] governs the act.
   [Bouvier’s Maxims of Law, 1856; SOURCE: http://famguardian.org/Publications/BouvierMaximsOfLaw/BouviersMaxims.htm]

26 C.F.R. §301.7701-5 Domestic, foreign, resident, and nonresident persons.

A domestic corporation is one organized or created in the United States, including only the States (and during the periods when not States, the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii), and the District of Columbia, or under the law of the United States or of any State or Territory. A foreign corporation is one which is not domestic. A domestic corporation is a resident corporation even though it does no business and owns no property in the United States. A foreign corporation engaged in trade or business within the United States is referred to in the regulations in this chapter as a resident foreign corporation, and a foreign corporation not engaged in trade or business within the United States, as a nonresident foreign corporation. A partnership engaged in trade or business within the United States is referred to in the regulations in this chapter as a resident partnership, and a partnership not engaged in trade or business within the United States, as a nonresident partnership. Whether a partnership is to be regarded as resident or nonresident is not determined by the nationality or residence of its members or by the place in which it was created or organized.

Notice the language above:

"Whether a partnership is to be regarded as resident or nonresident is not determined by the nationality or residence of its members or by the place in which it was created or organized."

This is a tacit admission that the status of BEING a “resident” has nothing to do with a geographic place and instead is a FRANCHISE STATUS which is created by the coincidence of the grant of a “congressionally created right” or “public right” AND your consent to adopt the status and franchise PRIVILEGES associated with that right.

Therefore, the ONLY way one can be a statutory “resident” is to be LAWFULLY engaged in a statutory trade or business”, which is defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(26) as “the functions of a public office”.

"The term 'trade or business' includes the performance of the functions of a public office."
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

Why do they do this? Because ALL PUBLIC OFFICES are domiciled in the District of Columbia:

TITLE 26 > CHAPTER 79 > Sec. 7701. [Internal Revenue Code]

Sec. 7701. - Definitions

(a) When used in this title, where not otherwise distinctly expressed or manifestly incompatible with the intent thereof—

(9) United States

The term “United States” when used in a geographical sense includes only the States and the District of Columbia.

(10) State

The term “State” shall be construed to include the District of Columbia, where such construction is necessary to carry out provisions of this title.

Pursuant to the rules of statutory construction, that which is not EXPRESSLY included must be conclusively presumed to be purposefully excluded. Hence, states of the Union are purposefully excluded from being within the “United States” in a geographic sense:

“Expressio unius est exclusio alterius. A maxim of statutory interpretation meaning that the expression of one thing is the exclusion of another. Burgin v. Forbes, 293 Ky. 456, 169 S.W.2d. 321, 325; Newblock v. Bowles, 770 Okl. 487, 40 P.2d. 1097, 1100. Mention of one thing implies exclusion of another. When certain persons or things are specified in a law, contract, or will, an intention to exclude all others from its operation may be inferred. Under this maxim, if statute specifies one exception to a general rule or assumes to specify the effects of a certain provision, other exceptions or effects are excluded.”

Note that all income taxes are based upon domicile, as in the case of the I.R.C. Subtitle A through C “income tax”. However, the domicile is INDIRECT rather than direct. The PUBLIC OFFICE is the thing domiciled in the Federal Zone and not the human being filling it, who can geographically be a “nonresident”.

The other noteworthy thing about this SCAM is that the 26 C.F.R. §301.7701-5 regulation cited above encompasses ALL “persons” within the I.R.C., and NOT just corporations and partnerships. It expressly mentions only corporations and partnerships, but in fact, these ARE the only entities EXPRESSLY included within the definition of “person” for the purposes of BOTH civil AND criminal jurisdiction of the I.R.C., and hence, describes ALL “persons” within the I.R.C.
The term “person” as used in this chapter includes an officer or employee of a corporation, or a member or employee of a partnership, who as such officer, employee, or member is under a duty to perform the act in respect of which the violation occurs.

Why do they mention “partnerships” in the above definition? Because whenever you consent to occupy a public office in the U.S. government, a partnership is formed between the otherwise PRIVATE HUMAN BEING and the PUBLIC OFFICE that the person fills. THAT partnership is how the legal statutory “person” who is the proper subject of the I.R.C. is lawfully created. The problem, however, is that you CANNOT lawfully elect yourself into a public office, even with your consent. In order for a lawful election or appointment to occur, you must take a lawful oath, and only THEN can one become a lawful public officer. If there is a deviation from this procedure for creating public offices, a crime has been committed pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §912.

5.2.14.9 Why it is UNLAWFUL for the I.R.S. to enforce Subtitle A of the Internal Revenue Code within states of the Union

The federal government enjoys NO legislative jurisdiction on land within the exterior limits of a state of the Union that is not its own territory. The authorities for this fact are as follows:

1. The U.S. Supreme Court has stated repeatedly that the United States federal government is without ANY legislative jurisdiction within the exterior boundaries of a sovereign state of Union:

"The difficulties arising out of our dual form of government and the opportunities for differing opinions concerning the relative rights of state and national governments are many; but for a very long time this court has steadfastly adhered to the doctrine that the taxing power of Congress does not extend to the states or their political subdivisions. The same basic reasoning which leads to that conclusion, we think, requires like limitation upon the power which springs from the bankruptcy clause. United States v. Butler, supra."
[Ashton v. Cameron County Water Improvement District No. 1, 298 U.S. 513, 56 S.Ct. 892 (1936)]

"It is no longer open to question that the general government, unlike the states, Hammer v. Dagenhart, 247 U.S. 251, 275, 38 S.Ct. 529, 1 A.L.R. 649, Ann.Cas. 1918E 724, possesses no inherent power in respect of the internal affairs of the states; and emphatically not with regard to legislation."
[Carter v. Carter Coal Co., 298 U.S. 238, 56 S.Ct. 855 (1936)]

If you meet with someone from the IRS, ask them whether the Internal Revenue Code qualifies as “legislation” within the meaning of the above rulings. Tell them you aren’t interested in court cases because judges cannot make law or create jurisdiction where none exists.

2. 40 U.S.C. §3112 creates a presumption that the United States government does not have jurisdiction unless it specifically accepts jurisdiction over lands within the exterior limits of a state of the Union:
PART A - GENERAL
CHAPTER 31 - GENERAL
SUBCHAPTER II - ACQUIRING LAND
Sec. 3112. Federal Jurisdiction

(a) Exclusive Jurisdiction Not Required. - It is not required that the Federal Government obtain exclusive jurisdiction in the United States over land or an interest in land it acquires.

(b) Acquisition and Acceptance of Jurisdiction. - When the head of a department, agency, or independent establishment of the Government, or other authorized officer of the department, agency, or independent establishment, considers it desirable, that individual may accept or secure, from the State in which land or an interest in land that is under the immediate jurisdiction, custody, or control of the individual is situated, consent to, or cession of, any jurisdiction over the land or interest not previously obtained. The individual shall indicate acceptance of jurisdiction on behalf of the Government by filing a notice of acceptance with the Governor of the State or in another manner prescribed by the laws of the State where the land is situated.

(c) Presumption. - It is conclusively presumed that jurisdiction has not been accepted until the Government accepts jurisdiction over land as provided in this section.

3. The Uniform Commercial Code defines the term “United States” as the District of Columbia:

Uniform Commercial Code (U.C.C.)
§ 9-307. LOCATION OF DEBTOR.

(b) [Location of United States.]

The United States is located in the District of Columbia.

4. Article 1, Section 8, Clause 17 of the Constitution expressly limits the territorial jurisdiction of the federal government to the ten square mile area known as the District of Columbia. Extensions to this jurisdiction arose at the signing of the Treaty of Peace between the King of Spain and the United States in Paris France, which granted to the United States new territories such as Guam, Cuba, the Philippines, etc.

5. 4 U.S.C. §72 limits the exercise of all “public offices” and the application of their laws to the District of Columbia and NOT elsewhere except as expressly provided by Congress.

TITLE 4 > CHAPTER 3 > § 72
§ 72. Public offices; at seat of Government

All offices attached to the seat of government shall be exercised in the District of Columbia, and not elsewhere, except as otherwise expressly provided by law.

6. The Internal Revenue Code Subtitle A places the income tax primarily upon a “trade or business”. The U.S. Supreme Court expressly stated that Congress may not establish a “trade or business” in a state of the Union and tax it.

“Congress cannot authorize a trade or business within a State in order to tax it.”
[License Tax Cases, 72 U.S. 462, 18 L.Ed. 497, 5 Wall. 462, 2 A.F.T.R. 2224 (1866)]

7. A “trade or business” is defined as the “functions of a public office” in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(26). See:
The Trade or Business Scam, Form #05.001
http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

8. The U.S. Supreme Court has said that Congress cannot license a “trade or business” within the borders of a state of the Union to tax it:

“Congress cannot authorize a trade or business within a State in order to tax it.”
[License Tax Cases, 72 U.S. 462, 18 L.Ed. 497, 5 Wall. 462, 2 A.F.T.R. 2224 (1866)]

9. The IRS and the DOJ have been repeatedly asked for the statute which “expressly extends” the “public office” that is the subject of the tax upon “trade or business” activities within states of the Union. NO ONE has been able to produce such a statute because IT DOESN’T EXIST. There is no provision of law which “expressly extends” the enforcement of Subtitle A of the Internal Revenue Code to any state of the Union. Therefore, IRS jurisdiction does not exist there.

10. 48 U.S.C. §1612 expressly extends the enforcement of the criminal provisions of the Internal Revenue Code to the Virgin Islands and is the only enactment of Congress that extends enforcement of any part of the Internal Revenue Code to any place outside the District of Columbia.

11. The U.S. Supreme Court commonly refers to states of the Union as “foreign states”. To wit:

We have held, upon full consideration, that although under existing statutes a circuit court of the United States has jurisdiction over habeas corpus to discharge from the custody of state officers or tribunals one restrained of his liberty in violation of the Constitution of the United States, it is not required in every case to exercise its power to that end immediately upon application being made for the writ. ‘We cannot suppose,’ this court has said, ‘that Congress intended to compel those courts, by such means, to draw to themselves, in the first instance, the control of all criminal prosecutions commenced in state courts exercising authority within the same territorial limits, where the accused claims that he is held in custody in violation of the Constitution of the United States. The injunction gives to the circuits power to dispose of the party as law and equity requires.’ [R.S. 761], does not deprive the court of discretion as to the time and mode in which it will exert the powers conferred upon it. That discretion should be exercised in the light of the relations existing, under our system of government, between the judicial tribunals of the Union and of the states, and in recognition of the fact that the public good requires that those relations be not disturbed by unnecessary conflict between courts equally bound to guard and protect rights secured by the Constitution. When the petitioner is in custody by state authority for an act done or omitted to be done in pursuance of a law of the United States, or of an order, process, or decree of a court or judge thereof; or where, being a subject or citizen of a foreign state, and domiciled therein, he is in custody, under like authority, for an act done or omitted under any alleged right, title, authority, privilege, protection, or exemption claimed under the commission, or order, or sanction of any foreign state, or under color thereof, the validity and effect thereof depend upon the law of nations: in such and like cases of urgency, involving the authority and operations of the general government, or the obligations of this country to, or its relations with, foreign nations. [180 U.S. 499, 502] The courts of the United States have frequently interposed by writs of habeas corpus and discharged prisoners who were held in custody under state authority. 12. The Federal Register Act, 44 U.S.C. §1505(a), and the Administrative Procedures Act, 5 U.S.C. §553(a) both require that when a federal agency wishes to enforce any provision of statutory law within a state of the Union, it must write proposed implementing regulations, publish them in the Federal Register, and thereby give the public opportunity for “notice and comment”. Notice that 44 U.S.C. §1508 says that the Federal Register is the official method for providing “notice” of laws that will be enforced in “States of the Union”. There are no implementing regulations authorizing the enforcement of any provision of the Internal Revenue Code within any state of the Union, and therefore it cannot be enforced against the general public domiciled within states of the Union. See the following for exhaustive proof:

13. Various provisions of law indicate that when implementing regulations authorizing enforcement have NOT been published in the Federal Register, then the statutes cited as authority may NOT prescribe a penalty or adversely affect rights protected by the Constitution of the United States:

TITLE 5 • PART 1 • CHAPTER 5 • SUBCHAPTER II • § 552
§ 552. Public information: agency indexes, opinions, orders, records, and proceedings§ 1508. Publication in Federal Register as notice of hearing

Except to the extent that a person has actual and timely notice of the terms thereof, a person may not in any manner be required to resort to, or be adversely affected by, a matter required to be published in the Federal Register and not so published. For the purpose of this paragraph, matter reasonably available to the class of persons affected thereby is deemed published in the Federal Register when incorporated by reference therein with the approval of the Director of the Federal Register.

26 C.F.R. §601.702 Publication and public inspection

(a)(2)(ii) Effect of failure to publish.

Except to the extent that a person has actual and timely notice of the terms of any matter referred to in subparagraph (1) of this paragraph which is required to be published in the Federal Register, such person is not required in any manner to resort to, or be adversely affected by, such matter if it is not so published or is not incorporated by reference therein pursuant to subdivision (i) of this subparagraph. Thus, for example, any such matter which imposes an obligation and which is not so published or incorporated by reference will not adversely change or affect a person’s rights.

14. 44 U.S.C. §1505(a) and 5 U.S.C. §553(a) both indicate that the only case where an enactment of the Congress can be enforced DIRECTLY against persons domiciled in states of the Union absent implementing regulations is for those groups specifically exempted from the requirement. These groups include:
14.2. A matter relating to agency management or personnel or to public property, loans, grants, benefits, or contracts. 5
14.3. Federal agencies or persons in their capacity as officers, agents, or employees thereof. 44 U.S.C. §1505(a)(1).
15. The Internal Revenue Code itself defines and limits the term “United States” to include only the District of Columbia and nowhere expands the term to include any state of the Union. Consequently, states of the Union are not included.

TITLE 26 > Subtitle F > CHAPTER 79 > Sec. 7701.
Sec. 7701 - Definitions

(a) When used in this title, where not otherwise distinctly expressed or manifestly incompatible with the intent thereof—

(9) United States

The term “United States” when used in a geographical sense includes only the States and the District of Columbia.

(10) State

The term “State” shall be construed to include the District of Columbia, where such construction is necessary to carry out provisions of this title.

16. 26 U.S.C. §7601 authorizes enforcement of the Internal Revenue Code and discovery related to the enforcement only within the bounds of internal revenue districts. Any evidence gathered by the IRS outside the District of Columbia is UNLAWFULLY obtained and in violation of this statute, and therefore inadmissible. See Weeks v. United States, 232
U.S. 383 (1914), which says that evidence unlawfully obtained is INADMISSIBLE.
17. 26 U.S.C. §7621 authorizes the President of the United States to define the boundaries of all internal revenue districts.
17.1. The President delegated that authority to the Secretary of the Treasury pursuant to Executive Order 10289.
17.2. Neither the President nor his delegate, the Secretary of the Treasury, may establish internal revenue districts outside of the “United States”, which is then defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) and (a)(10), 26 U.S.C.
§7701(a)(39), and 26 U.S.C. §7408(d) to mean ONLY the District of Columbia.
17.3. Congress cannot delegate to the President or the Secretary an authority within states of the Union that does not have Congress has NO LEGISLATIVE JURISDICTION within a state of the Union.

“It is no longer open to question that the general government, unlike the states, Hammer v. Dagenhart, 247 U.S.
251, 275, 38 S.Ct. 529, 1 J.A.L.R. 649, Ann.Cas.1918E 724, possesses no inherent power in respect of the internal affairs of the states; and emphatically not with regard to legislation.”
[Carter v. Carter Coal Co., 298 U.S. 228, 56 S.Ct. 655 (1936)]

18. Treasury Order 150-02 abolished all internal revenue districts except that of the District of Columbia.
19. IRS is delegate of the Secretary in insular possessions, as “delegate” is defined at 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(12)(B), but NOT in states of the Union.

1. The word “INTERNAL” in the phrase “INTERNAL Revenue Service” means INTERNAL to the federal government or the federal zone. This includes people OUTSIDE the federal zone but who have a domicile there, such as citizens and residents abroad coming under a tax treaty with a foreign country, pursuant to 26 U.S.C. §911. It DOES NOT include persons domiciled in states of the Union. See:

   Why Domicile and Becoming a “Taxpayer” Require Your Consent, Form #05.002
   http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

2. The U.S. Supreme Court has confirmed that there is no basis to believe that any part of the federal government enjoys any legislative jurisdiction within any state of the Union, including in its capacity as a lawmaker for the general government. This was confirmed by one attorney who devoted his life to the study of Constitutional law below:

   “§79. [. . .] There cannot be two separate and independent sovereignties within the same limits or jurisdiction; nor can there be two distinct and separate sources of sovereign authority within the same jurisdiction. The right of commanding in the last resort can be possessed only by one body of people inhabiting the same territory; and can be executed only by those intrusted with the execution of such authority.”

   Our public dis-servants have tried to systematically destroy this separation using a combination of LIES, PROPAGANDA in unreliable government publications, and the abuse of “words of art” in the void for vagueness “codes” they write in order to hunt and trap and enslave you like an animal.

   But this is a people robbed and plundered;
   All of them are snared in [legal] holes, [by the sophistry of rebellious public “servant” lawyers]
   And they are hidden in prison houses;
   They are for prey, and no one delivers;
   For plunder, and no one says, “Restore!”
   Who among you will give ear to this?
   Who will listen and hear for the time to come?
   Who gave Jacob [Americans] for plunder, and Israel [America] to the robbers?
   Was it not the LORD.
   He against whom we have sinned?
   For they would not walk in His ways,
   Nor were they obedient to His law.
   Therefore He has poured on him the fury of His anger
   And the strength of battle;
   It has set him on fire all around,
   Yet he did not know;
   And it burned him,
   Yet he did not take it to heart.
   [Isaiah 42:22-25, Bible, NKJV]

This BUTT WIPE, incidentally, includes ALL the IRS Publications and forms:

5.2.14.10 You can’t earn “income” or “reportable income” WITHOUT being engaged in a public office in the U.S. government

Before IRS can do an assessment, they must have an information return must have the payment of “income”. Information returns include IRS Forms W-2, 1042-S, 1098, 1099, etc. 26 U.S.C. §6041(a) affirms that the ONLY way these information returns can lawfully be filed is if the payment they document occurred in connection with a statutory “trade or business” as defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(26).

(a) Payments of $600 or more

All persons engaged in a trade or business and making payment in the course of such trade or business to another person, of rent, salaries, wages, premiums, annuities, compensations, remunerations, emoluments, or other fixed or determinable gains, profits, and income (other than payments to which section 6042 (a)(1), 6044 (a)(1), 6047 (e), 6049 (a), or 6050N (a) applies, and other than payments with respect to which a statement is required under the authority of section 6042 (a)(2), 6044 (a)(2), or 6045), of $600 or more in any taxable year, or, in the case of such payments made by the United States, the officers or employees of the United States having information as to such payments and required to make returns in regard thereto by the regulations hereinafter provided for, shall render a true and accurate return to the Secretary, under such regulations and in such form and manner and to such extent as may be prescribed by the Secretary, setting forth the amount of such gains, profits, and income, and the name and address of the recipient of such payment.

A statutory “trade or business” is then defined as follows:

(a) When used in this title, where not otherwise distinctly expressed or manifestly incompatible with the intent thereof—

(26) Trade or business

"The term 'trade or business' includes the performance of the functions of a public office."

Nowhere in the entire I.R.C., or any IRS publication is the above definition of "trade or business" expanded to include any activity other than a “public office”, and therefore it is all-inclusive and limited to “public offices”. This is also confirmed by the rules of statutory construction, which say on this subject:

"Expressio unius est exclusio alterius. A maxim of statutory interpretation meaning that the expression of one thing is the exclusion of another. Burgin v. Forbes, 293 Ky. 456, 169 S.W.2d. 321, 325; Newblock v. Bowles, 170 Okl. 487, 40 P.2d. 1097, 1100. Mention of one thing implies exclusion of another. When certain persons or things are specified in a law, contract, or will, an intention to exclude all others from its operation may be inferred. Under this maxim, if statute specifies one exception to a general rule or assumes to specify the effects of a certain provision, other exceptions or effects are excluded.” [Black’s Law Dictionary, Sixth Edition, p. 581]

"When a statute includes an explicit definition, we must follow that definition, even if it varies from that term’s ordinary meaning. Meese v. Keene, 481 U.S. 465, 484-485 (1987) (“It is axiomatic that the statutory definition of the term excludes unstated meanings of that term”); Colautti v. Franklin, 439 U.S. at 392-393, n. 10 (“As a rule, a definition which declares what a term “means” ... excludes any meaning that is not stated”); Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Leowrot, 323 U.S. 490, 502 (1945); Fox v. Standard Oil Co. of N.J., 294 U.S. 87, 95-96 (1935) (Cardozo, J.); see also 2A N. Singer, Sutherland on Statutes and Statutory Construction § 47.07, p. 152, and n. 10 (5th ed. 1992) (collecting cases). That is to say, the statute, read "as a whole," post at 998 (530 U.S. 943) [THOMAS, J., dissenting], leads the reader to a definition. That definition does not include the Attorney General's restriction -- "the child up to the head." Its words, "substantial portion," indicate the contrary.”
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

If you would like to learn more about what a “trade or business” and a “public office” is, see the following, because that subject is beyond the scope of this pamphlet:

The “Trade or Business” Scam, Form #05.001
http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

The vast majority of Americans are not lawfully engaged in a “public office”. Hence, most information returns are FALSE and FRAUDULENT. It is only earnings in connection with the “trade or business”/public office franchise that may lawfully be taxed under Internal Revenue Code Subtitle A. Some in government like to argue against this claim by quoting 26 U.S.C. §871(a), which allegedly taxes earnings NOT connected with the “trade or business” franchise. HOWEVER, even earnings mentioned in this section is associated indirectly with a “trade or business” at 26 U.S.C. §864(c)(3):

TITLE 26 > Subtitle A > CHAPTER 1, Subchapter N > PART 1 > § 864
§ 864. Definitions and special rules

(c) Effectively connected income, etc.

(3) Other income from sources within United States

All income, gain, or loss from sources within the United States (other than income, gain, or loss to which paragraph (2) applies) shall be treated as effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business within the United States.

Hence, even so-called earnings that are NOT directly connected with the “trade or business” franchise in 26 U.S.C. §871(a) are in fact DEEMED to be connected to said franchise. This is why we say that essentially, the entire Internal Revenue Code, Subtitles A and C is really just an excise or franchise tax upon public offices within the government. It is what we call a “public officer kickback program”. Those who are required to participate are specifically identified in 5 U.S.C. §2105(a) as “officers AND individuals”, meaning that the only way you can BECOME a statutory “individual” is to serve in a public office within the federal government. Otherwise, the U.S. Supreme Court has repeatedly held that the ability to regulate PRIVATE conduct is repugnant to the Constitution.

“The power to "legislate generally upon" life, liberty, and property, as opposed to the "power to provide modes of redress" against offensive state action, was "repugnant" to the Constitution. Id., at 15. See also United States v. Reese, 92 U.S. 214, 218 (1876); United States v. Harris, 106 U.S. 629, 639 (1883); James v. Bowman, 190 U.S. 127, 139 (1903). Although the specific holdings of these early cases might have been superseded or modified, see, e.g., Heart of Atlanta Motel, Inc. v. United States, 379 U.S. 241 (1964); United States v. Guest, 383 U.S. 745 (1966), their treatment of Congress’ §5 power as corrective or preventive, not definitional, has not been questioned.”

[City of Boerne v. Flores, Archbishop of San Antonio, 521 U.S. 507 (1997)]

Those who therefore argue against the conclusion that public offices within the government are the only ones who can earn “reportable” and therefore “taxable” income have the burden of explaining how:

1. The IRS can FIND OUT about PRIVATE earnings NOT connected to the “trade or business”/public office franchise, since they are NOT reported.
2. IRS can lawfully tax PRIVATE PROPERTY without in effect executing eminent domain without compensation against PRIVATE property in violation of the Fifth Amendment. The only party who can lawfully convert PRIVATE property to PUBLIC property is the original owner, and it must be DONATED to public use before the public can REGULATE or TAX said use. Taxation, after all, is the process of converting PRIVATE property to PUBLIC property.

5.2.15 Separation of Powers Between State and Federal Governments

States of the Union are sovereign over their territories, as is the U.S. Government over its territories and lands. Sovereignty implies exclusive jurisdiction to govern a geographic area. The 50 Union states therefore control everything within their respective borders with very few exceptions, and we identify what those exceptions are in section 6.4.9 of the Tax Fraud Prevention Manual, Form #06.008. The federal government exclusively controls everything within the District of Columbia and all federal territories, possessions and enclaves within the state, collectively called the “federal zone”. The federal zone does NOT include the 50 Union states but does include “the States”. The definition of “State” in IRC section 7701(a)(10) and 4 U.S.C. §110(d) and the definition of “United States” found in IRC section 7701(a)(9) all agree with this conclusion that the jurisdictions of the state and Federal Governments are mutually exclusive territorially.

TITLE 4 - FLAG AND SEAL, SEAT OF GOVERNMENT, AND THE STATES
CHAPTER 4 - THE STATES

Sec. 110. Same; definitions

(d) The term "State" includes any Territory or possession of the United States.

As we pointed out in section 3.12.1.23, the definition of the term “United States” in I.R.C., Subtitle A only includes the federal territories and possessions and the District of Columbia, including Puerto Rico, Guam, etc, which are all part of the “federal zone”. I.R.C., Subtitles A and C can therefore ONLY apply to persons domiciled in the “federal zone” and not to areas such as the 50 Union states where the federal government has only subject matter but not general/exclusive jurisdiction.

If one of the 50 Union states wants to tax the federal government or its territories, then the federal government must consent to it, which is exactly what the Buck Act of 1940 found in 4 U.S.C. §§105-113 authorizes. Likewise, if the federal government wants to tax one of the 50 Union states or persons domiciled in one of the 50 Union states, then the state and/or the Citizen in the state must explicitly and individually consent to it because both the states and the Citizens in the states are Sovereign.

They manifest this consent by filling out federal forms to misrepresent their domicile as being within the “United States”.

There is a longstanding separation between the state and Federal governments or “political units”. That separation is so distinct, that the states and the incomes of the Americans in each state are “foreign” with respect to each other’s jurisdictions. Likewise the income of Americans of the 50 Union states is “foreign” with respect to the jurisdiction of the federal United States (the federal zone). The below court finding of the Supreme Court helps to justify and clarify this conclusion:

“The United States government is a foreign corporation with respect to a state.”

This conclusion is also in agreement with what happened during the Revolutionary war. Britain had to sign treaties separately with each of the 13 colonies to end the war, rather than with the United States Government alone, because each state was sovereign!

There are two exceptions to this mutual exclusivity of territorial jurisdiction between state and Federal Governments. The first exception is a product of Article 1, Section 8, Clause 3 of the U.S. Constitution:

Article I, Section 8, Clause 3: “To regulate Commerce with foreign Nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian Tribes;”

This means the federal government can, for instance, regulate weights and measures, transportation, and communication systems which facilitate commerce among the several states. This is where the authority for establishing the Bureau of Weights and Measures and the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) comes from. The above clause also conveys the authority to tax imports in the form of excises, duties, and impost. Therefore, within states of the Union, the only type of tax the federal government may impose is a tax on imports. The power over EXTERNAL taxation by the federal government is what is called “plenary” in the legal field, which means it is exclusive. That tax is collected at sea ports, at airports, and at border crossings ONLY. This type of taxing jurisdiction is subject matter jurisdiction, and does not derive from territorial jurisdiction. Every other subject of taxation within states of the Union is under the exclusive and plenary jurisdiction of your state government.

The second point of overlap of jurisdiction is the occurrence of federal property within the 50 Union states. This includes such things as military bases, Indian Reservations, Post Offices, National Parks, etc. The Internal Revenue Code, believe it or not, actually refers to these areas as “States” in section 7701(a)(10). All of these areas are described as “enclaves” within states and count as federal territory over which Congress and the U.S. Government have exclusive, plenary jurisdiction and control which are part of the “federal zone”. If you took all of the federal enclaves within a sovereign state and collected them together, that area would be referred to as a “State” within 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(10) and the Buck Act found in 4 U.S.C. §110(d).

Other than these two exceptions, the Federal Government has no Constitutional authority within the borders of the 50 Union states outside of the “federal zone”.

5.2.16 The 50 Union states are “Foreign Countries” and “foreign states” with Respect to the Federal Government

The terms “foreign” and “domestic” are opposites. There are two contexts in which these terms may be used:

1. Constitutional: The U.S. Constitution is political document, and therefore this context is also sometimes called “political jurisdiction”.
2. Statutory: Congress writes statutes or “acts of Congress” to manage property dedicated to their care. This context is also called “legislative jurisdiction” or “civil jurisdiction”.

Any discussion of the terms “foreign” and “domestic” therefore must start by identifying ONE of the two above contexts. Any attempt to avoid discussing which context is intended should be perceived as an attempt to confuse, deceive, and enslave you by corrupt politicians and lawyers:

“For where envy and self-seeking exist, confusion and every evil thing are there.”
[James 3:16, Bible, NKJV]

The separation of powers makes states of the Union STATUTORILY/LEGISLATIVELY FOREIGN and sovereign in relation to the national government but CONSTITUTIONALLY/POLITICALLY DOMESTIC for nearly all subject matters of legislation. Every occasion by any court or legal authority to say that the states and the federal government are not foreign relates to the CONSTITUTIONAL and not STATUTORY context. Below is an example of this phenomenon, where “sovereignty” refers to the CONSTITUTIONAL/POLITICAL context rather than the STATUTORY/LEGISLATIVE context:

“The United States is not a foreign sovereignty as regards the several states, but is a concurrent, and, within its jurisdiction, paramount sovereignty.”
[Claflin v. Houseman, 93 U.S. 130, 136 (1876)]

The several states of the Union of states, collectively referred to as the United States of America or the “freely associated compact states”, are considered to be STATUTORILY/LEGISLATIVELY “foreign countries” and “foreign states” with respect to the federal government. An example of this is found in the Corpus Juris Secundum legal encyclopedia, in which federal territory is described as being a “foreign state” in relation to states of the Union:

“§1. Definitions, Nature, and Distinctions

"The word 'territory,' when used to designate a political organization has a distinctive, fixed, and legal meaning under the political institutions of the United States, and does not necessarily include all the territorial possessions of the United States, but may include only the portions thereof which are organized and exercise governmental functions under act of congress."

"While the term 'territory' is often loosely used, and has even been construed to include municipal subdivisions of a territory, and 'territories of the United States is sometimes used to refer to the entire domain over which the United States exercises dominion, the word 'territory,' when used to designate a political organization, has a distinctive, fixed, and legal meaning under the political institutions of the United States, and the term 'territory' or 'territories' does not necessarily include only a portion or the portions thereof which are organized and exercise government functions under acts of congress. The term 'territories' has been defined to be political subdivisions of the outlying dominion of the United States, and in this sense the term 'territory' is not a description of a definite area of land but of a political unit governing and being governed as such. The question whether a particular subdivision or entity is a territory is not determined by the particular form of government with which it is, more or less temporarily, invested.

"Territories' or 'territory' as including 'state' or 'states.' While the term 'territories of the United States may, under certain circumstances, include the states of the Union, as used in the Federal Constitution and in ordinary acts of congress 'territory' does not include a foreign state.

"As used in this title, the term 'territories' generally refers to the political subdivisions created by congress, and not within the boundaries of any of the several states."
[86 Corpus Juris Secundum (C.J.S.), Territories, §1 (2003)]

Here is the definition of the term “foreign country” right from the Treasury Regulations:

26 C.F.R. §1.911-2(h): The term “foreign country” when used in a geographical sense includes any territory under the sovereignty of a government other than that of the United States. It includes the territorial waters of the foreign country (determined in accordance with the laws of the United States), the air space over the foreign country, and the seabed and subsoil of those submarine areas which are adjacent to the territorial waters of the foreign country and over which the foreign country has exclusive rights, in accordance with international law, with respect to the exploration and exploitation of natural resources.
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

Black’s Law Dictionary, Sixth Edition, p. 498 helps make the distinction clear that the 50 Union states are foreign countries:

Dual citizenship. Citizenship in two different countries. Status of citizens of United States who reside within a state; i.e., person who are born or naturalized in the U.S. are citizens of the U.S. and the state wherein they reside.

If we examine other U.S. codes, we find the following hints to confirm the above assertion and conclusion:

Sec. 297. - Assignment of judges to courts of the freely associated compact states

(a) The Chief Justice or the chief judge of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit may assign any circuit or district judge of the Ninth Circuit, with the consent of the judge so assigned, to serve temporarily as a judge of any duly constituted court of the freely associated compact states whenever an official duly authorized by the laws of the respective compact state requests such assignment and such assignment is necessary for the proper dispatch of the business of the respective court.

(b) The Congress consents to the acceptance and retention by any judge so authorized of reimbursement from the countries referred to in subsection (a) of all necessary travel expenses, including transportation, and of subsistence, or of a reasonable per diem allowance in lieu of subsistence. The judge shall report to the Administrative Office of the United States Courts any amount received pursuant to this subsection.

Note that Congress, in subparagraph (a) above refers to the “freely associated compact states” in subparagraph (b) as “countries”. That is because they fit in every respect the description of “foreign country” found above in 26 C.F.R. §1.911-2(h):

“Generally, the states of the Union sustain toward each other the relationship of independent sovereigns or independent foreign states, except in so far as the United States is paramount as the dominating government, and in so far as the states are bound to recognize the fraternity among sovereignties established by the federal Constitution, as by the provision requiring each state to give full faith and credit to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of the other states...

[81A Corpus Juris Secundum (C.J.S.), United States, §29 (2003)]

The California Supreme Court agreed with the conclusions of this section when it stated in the case of People ex re. Atty. Gen. v. Naglee, 1 Cal. 234 (1850):

“In determining the boundaries of apparently conflicting powers between states and the general government, the proper question is, not so much what has been, in terms, reserved to the states, as what has been, expressly or by necessary implication, granted by the people to the national government; for each state possess all the powers of an independent and sovereign nation, except so far as they have been ceded away by the constitution. The federal government is but a creature of the people of the states, and, like an agent appointed for definite and specific purposes, must show an express or necessarily implied authority in the charter of its appointment, to give validity to its acts.

The power of taxation in independent nations, is unrestricted as to things, and, with the exception of foreign ambassadors and agents, and their retinue, is unlimited as to persons; and is deemed a power indispensable to their welfare and even their existence. The several states may, therefore, subject to the above restrictions, tax everything within their territorial limits, and every person, whether citizen or foreigner, who resides under the protection of their respective governments.”

Title 28, Judiciary and Judicial Procedure, describes the jurisdiction and operation of the federal district and circuit (appellate) courts. Section 1603 contains definitions and includes a very interesting and related definition of the term “foreign state”:

TITLE 28 - PART IV -
CHAPTER 97 - JURISDICTIONAL IMMUNITIES OF FOREIGN STATES
Sec. 1603. - Definitions
For purposes of this chapter -
(a) A "foreign state", except as used in section 1608 of this title, includes a political subdivision of a foreign state or an agency or instrumentality of a foreign state as defined in subsection (b).

(b) An "agency or instrumentality of a foreign state" means any entity:

(1) which is a separate legal person, corporate or otherwise, and

(2) which is an organ of a foreign state or political subdivision thereof, or a majority of whose shares or other ownership interest is owned by a foreign state or political subdivision thereof, and

(3) which is neither a citizen of a State of the United States as defined in section 1332 (c) and (d) of this title, nor created under the laws of any third country.

(c) The "United States" includes all territory and waters, continental or insular, subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

Likewise, the legal encyclopedia, Corpus Juris Secundum (C.J.S.), says about the subject of "sovereignty":

"Generally, the states of the Union sustain toward each other the relationship of independent sovereigns or independent foreign states, except in so far as the United States is paramount as the dominating government, and in so far as the states are bound to recognize the fraternity among sovereignties established by the federal Constitution, as by the provision requiring each state to give full faith and credit to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of the other states..."

[81A Corpus Juris Secundum (C.J.S.), United States, §29 (2003), legal encyclopedia]

The phrase “except in so far as the United States is paramount” refers to subject matters delegated to the national government under the United States Constitution. For all such subject matters ONLY, “acts of Congress” are NOT foreign and therefore are regarded as “domestic”. All such subject matters are summarized below. Every other subject matter is legislatively “foreign” and therefore “alien”:

1. Excise taxes upon imports from foreign countries. See Article 1, Section 8, Clause 1 of the U.S. Constitution. Congress may NOT, however, tax any article exported from a state pursuant to Article 1, Section 9, Clause 5 of the Constitution.

Other than these subject matters, NO national taxes are authorized:

"The States, after they formed the Union, continued to have the same range of taxing power which they had before, barring only duties affecting exports, imports, and on tonnage, 2 Congress, on the other hand, to lay taxes in order 'to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defence and general Welfare of the United States', Art. 1, Sec. 8, U.S.C.A.Const., can reach every person and every dollar in the land with due regard to Constitutional limitations as to the method of laying taxes."

[Graves v. People of State of New York, 306 U.S. 466 (1939)]

"The difficulties arising out of our dual form of government and the opportunities for differing opinions concerning the relative rights of state and national governments are many, but for a very long time this court has steadfastly adhered to the doctrine that the taxing power of Congress does not extend to the states or their political subdivisions. The same basic reasoning which leads to that conclusion, we think, requires like limitation upon the power which springs from the bankruptcy clause. United States v. Butler, supra."

[Ashton v. Cameron County Water Improvement District No. 1, 298 U.S. 513; 56 S.Ct. 892 (1936)]

"Thus, Congress having power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes, may, without doubt, provide for granting coasting licenses, licenses to pilots, licenses to trade with the Indians, and any other licenses necessary or proper for the exercise of that great and extensive power; and the same observation is applicable to every other power of Congress, to the exercise of which the granting of licenses may be incident. All such licenses confer authority, and give rights to the licensee.

But very different considerations apply to the internal commerce or domestic trade of the States. Over this commerce and trade Congress has no power of regulation nor any direct control. This power belongs exclusively to the States. No interference by Congress with the business of citizens transacted within a State is warranted by the Constitution, except such as is strictly incidental to the exercise of powers clearly granted to the legislature. The power to authorize a business within a State is plainly repugnant to the exclusive power of the State over the same subject. It is true that the power of Congress to tax is a very extensive power. It is given in the Constitution, with only one exception and only two qualifications. Congress cannot tax exports, and it must..."
impose direct taxes by the rule of apportionment, and indirect taxes by the rule of uniformity. Thus limited, and thus only, it reaches every subject, and may be exercised at discretion. But, it reaches only existing subjects.
Congress cannot authorize a trade or business within a State in order to tax it.”
[License Tax Cases, 72 U.S. 462, 18 L.Ed. 497, 5 Wall. 462, 2 A.F.T.R. 2224 (1866)]

2. Postal fraud. See Article 1, Section 8, Clause 7 of the U.S. Constitution.
3. Counterfeiting under Article 1, Section 8, Clause 6 of the U.S. Constitution.
4. Treason under Article 4, Section 2, Clause 3 of the U.S. Constitution.
5. Interstate commercial crimes under Article 1, Section 8, Clause 3 of the U.S. Constitution.
6. Jurisdiction over naturalization and exportation of Constitutional aliens.

“Other authorities to the same effect might be cited. It is not open to doubt that Congress may enforce the Thirteenth Amendment by direct legislation, punishing the holding of a person in slavery or in involuntary servitude except as a punishment for a crime. In the exercise of that power Congress has enacted these sections denouncing peonage, and punishing one who holds another in that condition of involuntary servitude. This legislation is not limited to the territories or other parts of the strictly national domain, but is operative in the states and wherever the sovereignty of the United States extends. We entertain no doubt of the validity of this legislation, or of its applicability to the case of any person holding another in a state of peonage, and this whether there be municipal ordinance or state law sanctioning such holding. It operates directly on every citizen of the Republic, wherever his residence may be.”
[Clyatt v. U.S., 197 U.S. 207 (1905)]

The Courts also agrees with this interpretation:

“It is no longer open to question that the general government, unlike the states, Hammer v. Dagenhart, 247
U.S. 251, 275., 38 S.Ct. 529, 3 A.F.R. 649, Ann.Cas.1918E 724, possesses no inherent power in respect of the internal affairs of the states; and emphatically not with regard to legislation.”
[Carter v. Carter Coal Co., 298 U.S. 238, 56 S.Ct. 855 (1936) ]

“The difficulties arising out of our dual form of government and the opportunities for differing opinions concerning the relative rights of state and national governments are many; but for a very long time this court has steadfastly adhered to the doctrine that the taxing power of Congress does not extend to the states or their political subdivisions. The same basic reasoning which leads to that conclusion, we think, requires like limitation upon the power which springs from the bankruptcy clause. United States v. Butler, supra.”
[Ashton v. Cameron County Water Improvement District No. 1, 298 U.S. 513, 56 S.Ct. 892 (1936)]

“The States between each other are sovereign and independent. They are distinct and separate sovereignties, except so far as they have parted with some of the attributes of sovereignty by the Constitution. They continue to be nations, with all their rights, and under all their national obligations, and with all the rights of nations in every particular; except in the surrender by each to the common purposes and objects of the Union, under the Constitution. The rights of each State, when not so yielded up, remain absolute.”
[Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 38 U.S. (13 Pet.) 519, 10 L.Ed. 274 (1839)]

“In determining the boundaries of apparently conflicting powers between states and the general government, the proper question is, not so much what has been, in terms, reserved to the states, as what has been, expressly or by necessary implication, granted by the people to the national government; for each state possess all the powers of an independent and sovereign nation, except so far as they have been ceded away by the constitution. The Federal government is but a creature of the people of the states, and, like an agent appointed for definite and specific purposes, must show an express or necessarily implied authority in the charter of its appointment, to give validity to its acts.”
[People ex re. Atty. Gen. v. Naglee, 1 Cal. 234 (1850)]

The motivation behind this distinct separation of powers between the state and federal government was described by the Supreme Court. Its ONLY purpose for existence is to protect our precious liberties and freedoms. Hence, anyone who tries to confuse the CONSTITUTIONAL and STATUTORY contexts for legal terms is trying to STEAL your rights.
“We start with first principles. The Constitution creates a Federal Government of enumerated powers. See U.S. Const., Art. I, 8. As James Madison wrote, “[t]he powers delegated by the proposed Constitution to the federal government are few and defined. Those which are to remain in the State governments are numerous and indefinite.” The Federalist No. 45, pp. 292-293 (C. Rossiter ed. 1961). This constitutionally mandated division of authority “was adopted by the Framers to ensure protection of our fundamental liberties.” Gregory v. Ashcroft, 501 U.S. 452, 458 (1991) (internal quotation marks omitted). "Just as the separation and independence of the coordinate branches of the Federal Government serves to prevent the accumulation of excessive power in any one branch, a healthy balance of power between the States and the Federal Government will reduce the risk of tyranny and abuse from either front." Ibid. [U.S. v. Lopez, 514 U.S. 549 (1995)]

We therefore have no choice to conclude, based on the definitions above that the sovereign 50 Union states of the United States of America are considered “foreign states”, which means they are outside the legislative jurisdiction of the federal courts in most cases. This conclusion is the inescapable result of the fact that the Tenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution reserves what is called “police powers” to the states and these police powers include most criminal laws and every aspect of public health, morals, and welfare. See section 4.9 for further details. There are exceptions to this general rule, but most of these exceptions occur when the parties involved reside in two different “foreign states” or in a territory (referred to as a “State”) of the federal United States and wish to voluntarily grant the federal courts jurisdiction over their issues to simplify the litigation. The other interesting outcome of the above analysis is that We the People are “instrumentalities” of those foreign states, because we fit the description above as:

1. A separate legal person.
2. An organ of the foreign state, because we:
   2.1. Fund and sustain its operations with our taxes.
   2.2. Select and oversee its officers with our votes.
   2.3. Change its laws through the political process, including petitions and referendums.
   2.4. Control and limit its power with our jury and grand jury service.
   2.5. Protect its operation with our military service.

The people govern themselves through their elected agents, who are called public servants. Without the involvement of every citizen of every “foreign state” in the above process of self-government, the state governments would disintegrate and cease to exist, based on the way our system is structured now. The people, are the sovereigns, according to the Supreme Court: Juidillard v. Greenman, 110 U.S. 421 (1884); Perry v. U.S., 294 U.S. 330 (1935); Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356 (1886). Because the people are the sovereigns, then the government is there to serve them and without people to serve, then we wouldn’t need a government! How much more of an “instrumentality” can you be as a natural person of the body politic of your state? We refer you back to section 4.1 to reread that section to find out just how very important a role you play in your state government. By the way, here is the definition of “instrumentality” right from Black’s Law Dictionary, Sixth Edition, page 801:

Instrumentality: Something by which an end is achieved; a means, medium, agency. Perkins v. State, 61 Wis.2d. 341, 212 N.W.2d. 141, 146.

Another section in that same Chapter 97 above says these foreign states have judicial immunity:

TITLE 28 > PART IV > CHAPTER 97 > Sec. 1602.
Sec. 1602. - Findings and declaration of purpose

The Congress finds that the determination by United States courts of the claims of foreign states to immunity from the jurisdiction of such courts would serve the interests of justice and would protect the rights of both foreign states and litigants in United States courts. Under international law, states are not immune from the jurisdiction of foreign courts insofar as their commercial activities are concerned, and their commercial property may be levied upon for the satisfaction of judgments rendered against them in connection with their commercial activities. Claims of foreign states to immunity should henceforth be decided by courts of the United States and of the States in conformity with the principles set forth in this chapter

Why is this important? Because as you will find out below, your earnings qualify as “foreign income” and you qualify as a “nonresident alien” who lives in a foreign country if you were born outside of the federal zone and inside a state of the Union and are domiciled there and are engaged in a public office. This is important because if you have only earnings not connected with a “trade or business” in the United States and you are a non-resident non-person, then your income is not subject to municipal income taxes for the federal corporation called the “United States”:
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t LIABLE to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

26 C.F.R. §1.864-2 Trade or business within the United States.

(b) Performance of personal services for foreign employer--(1) Excepted services. For purposes of paragraph (a) of this section, the term “engaged in trade or business within the United States” does not include the performance of personal services--

(i) For a nonresident alien individual, foreign partnership, or foreign corporation, not engaged in trade or business within the United States at any time during the taxable year, or

26 C.F.R. §1.871-7

Taxation of nonresident alien individuals not engaged in trade or U.S. business.—

Imposition of tax. (1) “...a nonresident alien individual...is NOT subject to the tax imposed by Section 1” [Subtitle A, Chapter 1]

IRS Publication 515 (Nov. 2001), Withholding Tax on Nonresident Aliens and Foreign Entities, confirms the nontaxability of income earned outside of the federal United States (or federal zone) by a Nonresident Alien on page 21:

“Services performed outside the United States. Compensation paid to a nonresident alien (other than a resident of Puerto Rico, discussed later) for services performed outside the [federal] United States is NOT considered wages and is NOT subject to graduated withholding or 30% withholding.” [IRS Publication 515 (Nov. 2001), Withholding Tax on Nonresident Aliens and Foreign Entities, p. 21]

Now can you see why your deceitful government might not want you to know that as a human being domiciled in one of the several states and outside the federal zone with no earnings from a public office, you live in a “foreign country” and are a statutory “non-resident non-person”, and are therefore not liable for municipal income taxes of what Mark Twain called “The District of Criminals”?

5.2.17 “foreign” means outside the federal zone and “foreign income” means outside the country in the context of the Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A Subtitle A of Title 26, the Internal Revenue Code, frequently uses the term “foreign” but never defines the meaning of the term. The term “foreign corporation” and “domestic corporation” are defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701, but not “foreign” by itself. There is a very good reason for this: The Congress and IRS don’t want you to know that “United States” in the Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A means the District of Columbia. We were so intrigued by this omission that we decided to further investigate and reveal the results of our research in this section. This subject is really interesting and enlightening and clarifies so much about the applicability of the tax code once you understand it. There are two contexts that the word “foreign” is used in: 1. The Internal Revenue Code; 2. The Constitution. The basis for these two contexts is that in the U.S. Constitution, the term “United States” means the federated states of the Union, while in most federal statutes, “United States” means the federal zone only. We’ll cover both and end this section with a summary of our findings.

We’ll now try to provide a statutory definition of the word “foreign”. Following is the definition of “foreign” right from the Merriam Webster Dictionary of Law:

foreign: not being within the jurisdiction of a political unit (as a state)

esp
: being from or in a state other than the one in which a matter is being considered

Example: a foreign company doing business in South Carolina
Example: a foreign executor submitting to the jurisdiction of this court Example: a foreign judgment (compare domestic)

Note that the reference in the legal definition of “foreign" is to a political unit, and NOT a country. The U.S. Codes, title 26, are written by the government of the “United States”, which term is defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701 as:

United States

The term “United States” when used in a geographical sense includes only the States and the District of Columbia.

And then in 26 U.S.C. §7701 we see the definition of “State” within the internal revenue code:

State

The term “State” shall be construed to include the District of Columbia, where such construction is necessary to carry out provisions of this title.

The “State” above is a federal “State”, not a sovereign “state” as shown below:

TITLE 4 - FLAG AND SEAL, SEAT OF GOVERNMENT, AND THE STATES
CHAPTER 4 - THE STATES

Sec. 110. Same; definitions
(d) The term "State" includes any Territory or possession of the United States.

Therefore, the real meaning of “United States” is:

United States

The term “United States” when used in a geographical sense includes federal States and the District of Columbia, all of which are subject to the general sovereignty and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States as described under Article 1, Section 8, Clause 17 of the U.S. Constitution.

This definition agrees with that of section 4.8 earlier, entitled “The Federal Zone”. The only thing the U.S. Congress has exclusive jurisdiction over is the “federal zone", which includes the District of Columbia and the federal enclaves, possessions, and territories and not the sovereign states directly. The reason the “United States" under the tax code has to be limited to the District of Columbia is because of the following two considerations:

1. Article 1, Section 8, Clause 17 of the Constitution limits the United States government to the District of Columbia and makes the District the “Seat" of government:

   Article 1, Section 8, Clause 17

   To exercise exclusive Legislation in all Cases whatsoever, over such District (not exceeding ten Miles square) as may, by Cession of Particular States, and the Acceptance of Congress, become the Seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like Authority over all Places purchased by the Consent of the Legislature of the State in which the Same shall be, for the Erection of Forts, Magazines, Arsenals, dock-Yards and other needful Buildings:--

2. 4 U.S.C. §72, written in pursuance to the authority delegated by Article 1, Section 8, Clause 17 of the Constitution, limits the United States government to the District of Columbia and says it cannot exist elsewhere.

   TITLE 4 - CHAPTER 3 - Sec. 72
   Sec. 72. - Public offices; at seat of Government

   All offices attached to the seat of government shall be exercised in the District of Columbia, and not elsewhere, except as otherwise expressly provided by law.

With the above background out of the way, we are now left to consider the true legal meaning of the term “foreign” in the context of federal statutes and “acts of Congress”. Since foreign means “not being within the jurisdiction of a political unit” and the political unit in question is the seat of government found geographically only in the District of Columbia and called the “United States”, then according to the Internal Revenue Code Subtitle A, all income that originates from outside the District of Columbia (or the federal zone) originates from “without the United States”! The IRS’ own publications confirm this. In IRS Publication 54, on page 12 of the year 2000 version says:
A "foreign country" usually is any territory (including the air space and territorial waters) under the sovereignty of a government other than that of the United States.

The term “foreign country” does not include Puerto Rico, Guam, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Virgin Islands, or U.S. possessions such as American Samoa. For purposes of the foreign earned income exclusion, the foreign housing exclusion, and the foreign housing deduction, the terms “foreign,” “abroad,” and “overseas” refer to areas outside the United States, American Samoa, Guam, the Commonwealth of Northern Mariana Islands, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and the Antarctic region.

The above citation also appears in the regulations at 26 C.F.R. §1.911-2(h):

(h) Foreign country.

The term "foreign country when used in a geographical sense includes any territory under the sovereignty of a government other than that of the United States. It includes the territorial waters of the foreign country (determined in accordance with the laws of the United States), the air space over the foreign country, and the seabed and subsoil of those submarine areas which are adjacent to the territorial waters of the foreign country and over which the foreign country has exclusive rights, in accordance with international law, with respect to the exploration and exploitation of natural resources.

So in the context of federal statutes and “acts of Congress”, the 50 Union states of the United States of America qualify entirely and completely as foreign countries under the IRS’ own definition above right from their Publication 54 and 26 C.F.R. §1.911-2(h)! That is why we can legitimately file as non-resident non-persons. We discuss and explain this completely in section 5.3 entitled “Know Your Proper Filing Status by Citizenship and Residency!” Below are a few definitions from Black’s Law Dictionary which confirm these conclusions:

Foreign Laws: “The laws of a foreign country or sister state.”

Foreign States: “Nations outside of the United States...Term may also refer to another state; i.e. a sister state. The term foreign nations...should be construed to mean all nations and states other than that in which the action is brought; and hence, one state of the Union is foreign to another, in that sense.”

The legal profession has been systematically hiding realities like the above over time. For instance, the Sixth and Seventh editions of Black’s Law Dictionary have the term “foreign government” removed from their dictionary after they had it in the Fifth edition. Likewise, the Seventh Edition removed the definition for the term “United States”, even though it was in the Sixth edition. Could there be a conspiracy afoot here by the legal profession to extend the jurisdiction of the U.S. government beyond its rightful bounds and to make everyone a slave to the income tax and to federal jurisdiction?

Another way of looking at this is that the “United States” is a small geographic area that is a “subcontractor” to the states of the Union, and all the states of the Union are legally “foreign” from the federal government as far as legislative jurisdiction, which includes the Internal Revenue Code. The “contract” that binds the states to the federal government “contractor” is the “U.S. Constitution”, the U.S. Codes, and the Uniform Commercial Code (UCC). That’s why Congress puts source rules for taxable income under section 861 within the following hierarchy in the tax code:

United States Code
TITLE 26 - INTERNAL REVENUE CODE
Subtitle A - Income Taxes
CHAPTER 1 - NORMAL TAXES AND SURTAXES
Subchapter N - Tax Based on Income From Sources Within or Without the United States
PART I - SOURCE RULES AND OTHER GENERAL RULES RELATING TO FOREIGN INCOME § 861. Income from sources within the United States.

Even more interesting is the fact that the title of Part I under versions of the code prior to 1988 was “Determination of sources of income”, which we describe in section 6.5.5 as one of Congress’ cover-ups. After that, Congress added the word “foreign” to hide the truth better. We are then left to believe with the new title of this section and earlier discussion that “foreign income” is anything that derives from importation by federally registered corporations from sources geographically outside the federal zone and that the “person” who earns it must maintain a domicile within the “federal zone”, which is the District of Columbia and federal possessions. We must conclude this because of the definition of the term “United States” in 26
U.S.C. §7701 and the fact that the federal zone is the only area over which the federal government has exclusive jurisdiction and general (not limited) sovereignty. However, most people fall back on the common definition of the term “foreign” found in the layman’s (nonlegal) dictionary, which only confuses the average person and deceives them into reaching the wrong conclusion. The layman’s definition of “foreign” is:

Foreign: 1: situated outside a place or country: esp: situated outside one's own country. 2: born in, belonging to, or characteristic of some place or country other than the one under consideration.
[Webster’s Ninth New Collegiate Dictionary, 1983, Merriam-Webster, p. 483]

Did you notice the BIG difference between the legal definition of “foreign” terms found in Black’s Law Dictionary and the everyday, more common definition of “foreign”? Of the two definitions of “foreign”, the correct definition is the legal definition and not the layman’s definition when we are reading federal statutes. If you have learned anything by now, it should be that you should always use the legal definition and ignore layman’s dictionaries when reading the law or the governments “words of art” will deceive you about the jurisdiction of the law. Can you see how the IRS and Congress might want you to use or believe the layman’s version of the word instead of the legal version of it? It would certainly benefit them from a tax collection standpoint! If you think like most people mistakenly do that “foreign” is relative to your country instead of relative to the federal United States (District of Columbia), then you will think that Part I of the Internal Revenue Code doesn’t apply to you as a “national” of the 50 United States with income from the 50 Union states! You will therefore instead have to refer to section 61 of the IRC which talks about “gross income” as being any type of income and with no definition of the word “source” to go from. And since Congress removed the pointer in section 61 of the IRC back to section 861 in about 1982, you won’t even think to look in section 861 to determine taxable sources of income, and you won’t believe people who tell you that only foreign income earned from within the District of Columbia and abroad pursuant to 26 U.S.C. §911 but not within states of the Union are taxable under 26 C.F.R. §1.861-8(f)!

There’s a reason why the wording of the Internal Revenue Code hasn’t changed significantly since the code was enacted in 1921: because the law is very carefully and deceitfully crafted to cover-up and obfuscate the truth about income tax liability.
In the following sections and especially in our discussion of “taxable sources” or “sources”, keep this definition of “foreign” in the back of your mind so the meaning and significance of IRC Section 861 is clear! We also talk more about this in section court ruling helps clarify the meaning of the terms “foreign” and “domestic” (derived from section 5.9) and also explains why the Internal Revenue Code had to explicitly define the meaning of the term “foreign corporation” but not define the meaning of the word “foreign”:

“The United States government is a foreign corporation with respect to a state.”

Once again, we’d emphasize that the “void for vagueness” doctrine discussed in section 5.22 (entitled “Why the ‘Void for Vagueness Doctrine’ should be invoked by the courts to render the Internal Revenue Code Unconstitutional in Total”) really applies here, and that the Internal Revenue Code ought to be nullified by the courts because of vagueness, on something as simple as the definition of “foreign income”. That term “foreign” needs to be much better defined to prevent unnecessary litigation or misinterpretation, because absent a proper, unambiguous legal definition, the only thing we have to refer to in the code is the definition of “foreign corporation” in 26 U.S.C. §7701. We are then lead to believe based on the above definitions that ALL earnings of “taxpayers” that originates from outside the District of Columbia and other parts of the “federal zone” (foreign to the political unit of the “United States” federal government) is “foreign income”. And our interpretation must stick, because according to the U.S. Supreme Court:

“Keeping in mind the well-settled rule that the citizen is exempt from taxation unless the same is imposed by clear and unequivocal language, and that where the construction of a tax law is doubtful, the doubt is to be resolved in favor of those upon whom the tax is sought to be  laid.”
[Spreckels Sugar Refining Co. v. McClain, 192 U.S. 397 [1904]]

The context of “words of art” is very important! We have covered the meaning of the term “foreign” in the context of the Internal Revenue Code, but what about the Constitution? In the Constitution, the term “United States” has a completely different meaning than that of the Internal Revenue Code, and it means the states of the Union collectively, and not the federal zone or federal United States. Article 1, Section 8 of the Constitution and Clause 3 of that section is the main taxing section of the Constitution, and it uses the following emphasized phrase:
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

“The Congress shall have the power.... To regulate Commerce with foreign Nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian Tribes;”

Recall that the United States is not a “nation”, but a Union or federation according to the Supreme Court in Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 Dall. (U.S.) 419, 1 L.Ed. 440 (1793). Therefore, the term “foreign nations” means any nation outside of the confederation of states called the “United States”, meaning the country United States. On the surface, this would appear to conflict with the Internal Revenue Code Subtitle A, which we just said uses the word “foreign” to refer to anything outside of the federal zone. In fact, there is no conflict between the I.R.C. and the Constitution because the “person” who is the subject of the tax must first reside within the federal United States before the Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A even applies, and the income must be received and earned from “sources within” the federal United States (meaning the District of Columbia and territories and possessions) under 26 U.S.C. §861 and the implementing regulations at 26 C.F.R. §1.861-8(f).

The “sources within” all relate to Foreign Sales Corporations (FSCs) and Domestic International Sales Corporations (DISCs) registered and licensed with the federal government under 26 U.S.C. §7001. Some people point to 26 U.S.C. §862 as a justification for the false conclusion that sources “without the United States” are also taxable, but in fact, this section uses the same regulations as 26 U.S.C. §861 for computing “income from sources within and without the United States”, which is 26 C.F.R. §1.861-8(f).

The original Constitution didn’t define whether territories of the United States were to be treated as part of the “United States” for the purposes of “foreign commerce”. The Supreme Court would later have to analyze this deficiency around the turn of the century in 1901, leading it to extend the meaning of “United States” to include territories for the purposes of defining “foreign income” within the Constitution and the Internal Revenue Code in the cases of Downes v. Bidwell and De Lima v. Bidwell in 1901. You can also confirm these conclusions by reading the following cases for yourself:

1. De Lima v. Bidwell, 182 U.S. 1 (1901): Supreme Court ruled that the new territory of Puerto Rico was no longer a foreign country and imports from this territory could no longer be taxed because no longer foreign income.
2. Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U.S. 244 (1901): Supreme Court ruled that Porto Rico became a part of the United States within the meaning of the Constitution, and therefore, trade with that country was no longer considered “foreign” and no longer subject to taxes on foreign commerce.
3. Eisner v. Macomber, 252 U.S. 189 (1920): defines the term “income” and says that Congress does not have the authority to legislatively define the word “income”.
4. Balzac v. Porto Rico, 258 U.S. 298 (1922): Supreme Court explained that the “United States” in the context of the Constitution only includes the Union of states, and not territories of the federal government. Therefore “foreign income” in the context of the Constitution can only mean income earned from other countries.

5.2.18 Constitutional Federal Taxes under the I.R.C. apply to imports, Foreign Income of Aliens and Corporations, and domiciliaries Living Abroad

To some, the title of this section may seem ambiguous or misleading. Allow us to clarify our terms. We must always remember that there are two systems of taxation described within the Internal Revenue Code, as explained earlier at the beginning of section 5.1.11:

1. Legitimate, Constitutional “Federal income taxes” described under Subtitles D and E of the Internal Revenue Code. This revenue system operates exclusively within states of the Union on nonfederal land and also within admiralty or maritime jurisdiction.
2. “national” or “municipal” taxes of the District of Columbia described under Subtitles A through C of the I.R.C. This revenue system operates only within exclusive jurisdiction of the federal government and coming under Article I, Section 8, Clause 17 of the Constitution. It is implemented only within the District of Columbia, federal enclaves within the states, territories and possessions of the United States and it is addressed exclusively by Subtitles A through C of the Internal Revenue Code. We call this a “municipal tax of the District of Columbia”, as distinguished from a “federal income tax” applying exclusively within the states of the Union and admiralty jurisdiction.

All of the above aside, we can now delve into taxation exclusively within states of the Union on nonfederal land. The taxing approach of the federal government within states of the Union has always had is:

“Citizens abroad and foreigners at home.”

TOP SECRET: For Official Treasury/IRS Use Only (FOOU) Copyright Family Guardian Fellowship http://famguardian.org/
In the context of municipal income taxes, “home” means the federal zone and “abroad” means outside the country “United States”. This is the same taxing scheme advocated by Jesus in the Bible. Jesus Christ first addressed the tax issue in Matthew 17:24-27, which says:

After Jesus and his disciples arrived in Capernaum, the collectors of the two-drachma tax came to Peter and asked, “Doesn’t your teacher pay the temple tax?”

“Yes, he does,” he replied.

When Peter came into the house, Jesus was the first to speak. “What do you think, Simon?” he asked. “From whom do the kings of the earth collect duty and taxes--from their own sons or from others?"

“From others,” Peter answered.

‘Then the sons [of the King, Constitutional but not statutory citizens and sovereign “national” and “non-resident non-persons”] are EXEMPT.’

The Founders understood because of their Christian faith that "the sons [nationals] are exempt" and, in their wisdom, designed our Constitutional Republic so that the sovereign People domiciled in states of the Union would be free from direct taxation by the government; so that the day-to-day operations of the federal government would be funded through indirect excise taxes in the form of duties and tariffs to be paid by foreigners wishing to sell into our vast markets. Below is confirmation of this fact by the supreme Court of the United States:

“Now, the Federal Government can no more regulate the commerce of a State than a State can regulate the commerce of the Federal government; and domestic bills or promissory notes are as necessary to the commerce of a State as foreign bills to the commerce of the Union. And if a tax on the exchange broker who deals in foreign bills be a regulation of foreign commerce, or commerce among the States, much more would a tax upon state paper, by Congress, be a tax on the commerce of a State.”
[Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall (U.S.) 168, 19 L.Ed. 357 (1868)]

“No interference by Congress with the business of citizens transacted within a state is warranted by the Constitution, except such as is strictly incidental to the exercise of powers clearly granted to the legislature.”
[License Tax Cases, 72 U.S. 462 (1866)]

The Internal Revenue Code implementing regulations also confirm the conclusion that federal taxation is limited to foreign commerce and aliens as well. For instance, 26 C.F.R. §1.1-1(a)(2)(ii) indicates that married and unmarried “individuals” are all defined as aliens and the definition does not include “citizens”:

NORMAL TAXES AND SURTAXES
DETERMINATION OF TAX LIABILITY
Tax on Individuals
Sec. 1.1-1 Income tax on individuals.
(a)(2)(ii) For taxable years beginning after December 31, 1970, the tax imposed by section 1(d), as amended by the Tax Reform Act of 1969, shall apply to the income effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business in the United States by a married alien individual who is a nonresident of the United States for all or part of the taxable year or by a foreign estate or trust. For such years the tax imposed by section 1(c), as amended by such Act, shall apply to the income effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business in the United States by an unmarried alien individual (other than a surviving spouse) who is a nonresident of the United States for all or part of the taxable year. See paragraph (b)(2) of section 1.871-8.” [26 C.F.R. §1.1-1(a)(2)(ii)]

The above definition of “individual” is also confirmed elsewhere in the regulations at 26 C.F.R. §1.1441-1(c):

WITHHOLDING OF TAX ON NONRESIDENT ALIENS AND FOREIGN CORPORATIONS AND TAX-FREE COVENANT BONDS
Nonresident Aliens And Foreign Corporations
Sec. 1.1441-1 Requirement for the deduction and withholding of tax on payments to foreign persons.
(c) Definitions

(3) Individual.
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

(i) Alien individual.

The term alien individual means an individual who is not a citizen or a national of the United States. See Sec. 1.1-1(c).

(ii) [Reserved]

Do you see “citizen” or “national” listed anywhere in the above definition of “individual”? Not only this, but if you look at the regulations at 26 C.F.R. §301.6109-1(d)(3) which govern the assignment of “Individual Taxpayer Identification Numbers (TINs)”, the only people who can be assigned these numbers are “residents”, which we will prove later in section 5.5.2 means a ONLY a “resident alien”!

26 C.F.R. §301.6109-1(d)(3): Identifying Numbers

(3) IRS individual taxpayer identification number –

(i) Definition.

The term IRS individual taxpayer identification number means a taxpayer identifying number issued to an alien individual by the Internal Revenue Service, upon application, for use in connection with filing requirements under this title. The term IRS individual taxpayer identification number does not refer to a social security number or an account number for use in employment for wages. For purposes of this section, the term alien individual means an individual who is not a citizen or national of the United States.

In the tax code, people born in or domiciled within states of the Union are “nationals” and “non-resident non-persons”. They only earn “gross income” if they are holding a public office in the United States government or receive payments from the federal government, as confirmed by the following statutes and implementing regulations:

1. 26 U.S.C. §7701(b)(1)(B) defines “nonresident aliens” as persons who are neither “citizens” or “residents” and that is exactly what a “national” born in a state of the Union is. 26 C.F.R. §1.1441-1(c)(3)(i) also shows that “nationals” are not “aliens”.
2. 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(26) defines “trade or business” as the functions of a public office. See section 5.6.12 and following later entitled “The Trade or Business Scam”.
4. “Gross income” for nonresident aliens is defined under 26 U.S.C. §871, and is limited to income originating from the District of Columbia that is:
   4.1. Connected directly to a “trade or business” under 26 U.S.C. §871(b) or 4.2. Connected indirectly to a “trade or business” under 26 U.S.C. §871(a).
5. 26 U.S.C. §861(a)(3)(C), 26 C.F.R. §1.1861-8(f)(1)(iv), and 26 C.F.R. §31.3401(a)(6)-1(b) all limit “gross income” to earnings derived from conduct “effectively connected with a trade or business in the United States government”.

Consequently, you can only be a compelled “taxpayer” under I.R.C., Subtitle A if you are:

1. Domiciliaries of the federal zone who are temporarily abroad for no more than nine months per year under 26 U.S.C. §911, including:
   1.1. “residents” and “resident aliens”.

The term “statutory U.S. citizens” above, by the way also includes federal “corporations” incorporated in the District of Columbia but excludes state chartered corporations under the Internal Revenue Code. This is what the I.R.C. refers to as “domestic corporations”. Any other type of “corporation” is a “foreign corporation” under 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(5). Here is a quote from the legal encyclopedia Corpus Juris Secundum confirming this conclusion:

“A corporation is a citizen, resident, or inhabitant of the state or country by or under the laws of which it was created, and of that state or country only.”
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

We assert that these corporate “citizens” and statutory “U.S. citizens” (under 8 U.S.C. §1401) residing temporarily abroad but domiciled in the federal “United States” are technically the only types of “citizens” that are the proper subject of Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A because the definition of “income” can only mean “corporate profit” derived only from foreign commerce according to the Supreme Court, as we will point out later in section 5.6.5. Even the IRS 1040 Instruction Booklet for 2001 confirms on page 20 that the only “income” that should be reported on form 1040 is “Foreign-Source Income”, which is profit derived from commerce with countries outside of ours:

Income

Foreign-Source Income

You must report unearned income, such as interest, dividends, and pensions, from sources outside the United States unless exempt by law or tax treaty. You must also report earned income, such as wages and tips, from sources outside the United States.

If you worked abroad, you may be able to exclude part of all of your earned income. For details, see Pub. 54 and Form 2555 or 2555-EZ.

[IRS 1040 Instruction Booklet (2001), p. 20]

While the general power to “lay and collect taxes” (U.S. Constitution, Article I, Section 8, Clause 1) combined with the power to “regulate commerce with foreign nations” (U.S Constitution, Article I, Section 8, Clause 3) undoubtedly gives Congress the power to impose an income tax on income derived from foreign commerce (William E. Peck & Co. v. Lowe, 247 U.S. 165 (1918)), mere receipt of income from intrastate commerce cannot be a proper subject of a federal excise tax. This restriction exists because of Article 1, Section 9, Clause 5 of the U.S. Constitution, which states:

“No Tax or Duty shall be laid on Articles exported from any State.”

Both the Supreme Court (Stanton v. Baltic Mining, 240 U.S. 103 (1916)) and the Secretary of the Treasury (Treasury Decision 2303) agree that the income tax is in fact an “indirect” excise. Indirect taxes are taxes only on artificial entities such as corporations and partnerships and not on natural persons.

The preceding discussion so far which describes the Constitutional limits of federal taxing jurisdiction by showing that it is limited ONLY to foreign commerce. This limits also happen to be entirely consistent with the stated legislative intent of the Constitution revealed in the Federalist Papers. Here is an excerpt from Federalist Paper #45 backing that up:

“The powers delegated by the proposed Constitution to the Federal Government, are few and defined. Those which are to remain in the State Governments are numerous and indefinite. The former will be exercised principally on external objects, as war, peace, negotiation and foreign commerce; with which last the power of taxation will for the most part be connected. The powers reserved to the several States will extend to all the objects, which, in the ordinary course of affairs, concern the lives, liberties and properties of the people; and the internal order, improvement, and prosperity of the State.”

[Federalist Paper #45, James Madison]

The status of being a statutory “U.S. citizen” under “acts of Congress” (that is, a person born or naturalized in the District of Columbia or other federal territory) creates a means or nexus for the U.S. government to obtain jurisdiction over us that it will abuse to illegally compel payment of income taxes citizen regardless of where they live, including in a state of the Union or abroad. The reason we have to pay the tax when we are abroad in a foreign country is to pay the cost of “defending” and “protecting” us while we are abroad. Even in that scenario though, this only applies to those who legitimately are 8 U.S.C. §1401 statutory federal “U.S. citizens” under “acts of Congress”, which people born in states of the Union are not. Most persons born on nonfederal land in the 50 states of the Union are, in fact, “nationals” under federal law, as defined in 8 U.S.C.
§1101(a)(21). In the U.S. Constitution Annotated, under the Fifth Amendment (see [http://caselaw.lp.findlaw.com/data/constitution/amendment05/13.html - 6]), here is what it says about this subject:

“In laying taxes, the Federal Government is less narrowly restricted by the Fifth Amendment than are the States by the Fourteenth. The Federal Government may tax property belonging to its [domiciled, statutory but not constitutional] citizens, even if such property is never situated within the jurisdiction of the United States, and it may tax the income of a citizen resident abroad, which is derived from property located at his residence. The difference is explained by the fact that protection of the Federal Government follows the citizen wherever he goes, whereas the benefits of state government accrue only to persons and property within the State's borders. “

[Annotated Fifth Amendment, Findlaw]

However, the above findings do not translate into a power by Congress to tax natural persons inside the 50 states of the Union on nonfederal land, because of the limitations on direct taxes found in Article 1, Section 9, Clause 4, and Article 1, Section 2, Clause 3 of the U.S. Constitution. This is in spite of the fact that for the purposes of police powers and legislative jurisdiction (e.g. "acts of Congress"), the states of the Union are "foreign countries" and "foreign states" with respect to the federal government. This means that no federal territorial jurisdiction for direct taxes are authorized in the 50 Union states for natural persons.

“In the states, there reposes the sovereignty to manage their own affairs except only as the requirements of the Constitution otherwise provide. Within these constitutional limits the power of the state over taxation is plenary.”

In case you don't know what “plenary” means, it means unrestrained, absolute, exclusive rights NOT shared with the federal government. Likewise, even though the U.S. government has jurisdiction for direct taxes overseas, the income must still derive from taxable sources identified in 26 U.S.C. §862, which then points to 26 C.F.R. §1.861-8(f) as the implementing regulation for determining taxable sources of income. That section of regulations, in turn, only defines as "gross income" those profits associated with privileged Domestic International Sales Corporations (DISCs) or Foreign Sales Corporations (FSCs), both of whom are involved directly and only in foreign commerce with other countries.

In fact, not only is the income tax under Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A only imposed on foreign commerce external to the country as required under Art. 1, Section 8, Clause 3 of the Constitution, but the people participating in such commerce are licensed “individuals” in receipt of federal privileges and residing within the federal zone under 26 U.S.C. §7001:

TITLE 26 > Subtitle F > CHAPTER 72 > Subchapter A > Sec. 7001.
Sec. 7001. - Collection of foreign items

(a) License

All persons undertaking as a matter of business or for profit the collection of foreign payments of interest or dividends by means of coupons, checks, or bills of exchange shall obtain a license from the Secretary and shall be subject to such regulations enabling the Government to obtain the information required under subtitle A (relating to income taxes) as the Secretary shall prescribe.

(b) Penalty for failure to obtain license

For penalty for failure to obtain the license provided for in this section, see section 7231

The Code of Federal Regulations, when published in the Federal Register, are the official notification to the public of what the law requires of them (44 USC). These regulations must give specifics. For decades, the regulations defining "gross income" specifically stated that income of “persons” (artificial entities such as corporations and partnerships) derived from "foreign commerce" must be included in their "gross income," and also described income of foreigners, and income of those who receive most of their income from federal possessions (Regulations 62, Article 31 (1922), 26 C.F.R. §39.22(a)-1 (1956)).

Congress cannot gain jurisdiction over an event, or regulate an event not otherwise constitutionally under federal jurisdiction (such as intrastate commerce), simply by exerting such control via taxation legislation. "To give such magic to the word 'tax' would be to break down all constitutional limitation of the powers of Congress" (Bailey v. Drexel Furniture Co., 259 U.S. 20 (1922)), and such a law "cannot be sustained as an exercise of the taxing power of Congress conferred by section 8, article 1" (Hill v. Wallace, 259 U.S. 44 (1922)). This is not to say that the income tax is in any way invalid; it is merely to show why the income tax statutes and regulations themselves limit the tax to those engaged in international or foreign commerce only.

When it comes to taxation, the truth can sometimes be stranger than fiction! For further study on the right of Congress to tax federal/U.S. citizens living abroad, who are called “nonresident citizens”, we refer you to the Supreme Court case of Cook v. Tait, 265 U.S. 47 (1924) and to IRS Publication 54.

5.2.19 “Employee” in the Internal Revenue Code means ONLY public officers and instrumentalities of the federal government

Most people are shocked to learn that they are not considered “employees” as defined in the Internal Revenue Code. IRC section 3401(c ) provides the following definition of “employee” within the context of income tax withholding:

26 U.S.C. §3401(c ) Employee

For purposes of this chapter, the term "employee" includes [is limited to] an officer, employee, or elected official of the United States, a [federal] State, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, or any agency or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing. The term "employee" also includes an officer of a corporation.

8 Federal Register, Tuesday, September 7, 1943. §404.104, pg. 12267

Employee: “The term employee specifically includes officers and employees whether elected or appointed, of the United States, a state, territory, or political subdivision thereof or the District of Columbia or any agency or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing.”

26 C.F.R. §31.3401(c ) Employee: “...the term [employee] includes officers and employees, whether elected or appointed, of the United States, a [federal] State, Territory, Puerto Rico or any political subdivision, thereof, or the District of Columbia, or any agency or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing. The term 'employee' also includes an officer of a corporation.”

Now isn't that interesting? You aren't considered an “employee” as far as payroll deductions unless you are an officer, an appointee, or elected official of the United States who is in direct receipt of government privileges! This is because the income tax is an excise/privilege tax according to the U.S. Supreme Court and the Congressional Research Service. But then the IRS will deny adamantly that the income tax is an excise/privilege tax if you ask them. Self-serving hypocrites! That means the U.S. Government has no authority whatsoever to be telling private employers to withhold pay or hold them liable for not withholding! Likewise, if you aren’t an “employee”, then the person you work for also isn’t an “employer”, as defined in section 3401(d) of the IRC, because an “employer” is defined as someone with “employees”.

Even more interesting is the definition of "employee" found in 5 U.S.C. §2105:

2105. DEFINITIONS

(a) For the purpose of this title, "employee", except as otherwise provided by this section or when specifically modified, means an officer and an individual who is:

(1) appointed in the civil service by one of the following acting in an official capacity:

(A) the President;
(B) a Member or Members of Congress, or the Congress;
(C) a member of a uniformed service;
(D) an individual who is an employee under this section;
(E) the head of a Government controlled corporation; or
(F) an adjutant general designated by the Secretary concerned under section 709(c) of title 32;

(2) engaged in the performance of a Federal function under authority of law or an Executive act; and

(3) subject to the supervision of an individual named by paragraph (1) of this subsection while engaged in the performance of the duties of his position.

The Great IRS Hoax: Why We Don’t Owe Income Tax, version 4.54
TOP SECRET: For Official Treasury/IRS Use Only (FOUO) Copyright Family Guardian Fellowship http://famguardian.org/
Another very interesting insight comes from 26 C.F.R. §31.3401(c)-1, which states:

(c) Generally, physicians, lawyers, dentists, veterinarians, contractors, subcontractors, public stenographers, auctioneers, and others who follow an independent trade, business, or profession, in which they offer their services to the public, are not employees.

Basically then, you aren’t a “federal employee” unless you work in the District of Columbia (the proper United States) and were directly appointed by the delegated authority of an elected official or elected by the public. Any other situation implies that you are practicing a business trade or profession that does not depend on the taxable privileges incident to political “public office”. Further confirmation of this fact is found in the definition of the term “trade or business”, which is defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(26) as being associated with the performance of the functions of a public office. All “gross income” and “taxable income” which is associated with a “trade or business in the [federal] United States” must meet this test for natural persons. Once again, the key to understanding this situation is to recognize that jurisdiction by the government to tax results from the acceptance of government privileges in exchange for consent to waive one’s rights to not pay taxes.

The key to staying tax free is to be never accept any government privileges.

The subject of the definition of “employee” above is something that some academics indicate does not include everyone covered by the internal revenue code. They say that the word “includes” as far as the IRC is not meant to be inclusive, but rather “expansive” and that there may be other things the words mean that aren’t in the code. This is nonsense, as we explain in 3.12.1.8 “Includes” and is just meant to in effect deceive people and convince them that they can’t trust the law and English language to explicitly define the taxes they owe. The courts have struck this approach down many times over, and conflict of interest and downright greed on the part of federal judges is the only reason they wouldn’t strike it down. See statutory 28 U.S.C. 455, which makes such conflict of interest a crime.

5.2.20 You’re not a STATUTORY “citizen” under the Internal Revenue Code

As we proved exhaustively earlier in Chapter 4 starting with section 4.11, there are TWO contexts in which one may be a “citizen”, and these two contexts are mutually exclusive and not overlapping:

1. Statutory: Relies on statutory definitions of “United States”, which mean federal territory that is no part of any state of the Union.
2. Constitutional: Relies on the Constitutional meaning of “United States”, which means states of the Union and excludes federal territory.

Within the field of citizenship, CONTEXT is everything in discerning the meaning of geographical terms. By “context”, we mean ONE of the two contexts as indicated above:

“Citizenship of the United States is defined by the Fourteenth Amendment and federal statutes, but the requirements for citizenship of a state generally depend not upon definition but the constitutional or statutory context in which the term is used. Risewick v. Davis, 19 Md. 82, 93 (1862); Halaby v. Board of Directors of University of Cincinnati, 162 Ohio St. 290, 293, 123 N.E.2d 3 (1954) and authorities therein cited.

The decisions illustrate the diversity of the term’s usage. In Field v. Adreon, 7 Md. 209 (1854), our predecessors held that an unnaturalized foreigner, residing and doing business in this State, was a citizen of Maryland within the meaning of the attachment laws. The Court held that the absconding debtor was a citizen of the State for commercial or business purposes, although not necessarily for political purposes, Dorsey v. Kyle, 30 Md. 512, 538 (1869), is to the same effect. Judge Alvey, for the Court, said in that case, that the term citizen, used in the formula of the affidavit prescribed by the 4th section of the Article of the Code referred to, is to be taken as synonymous with inhabitant or permanent resident.”
Other jurisdictions have equated residence with citizenship of the state for political and other non-commercial purposes. In re Weitz, 16 Wis. 443, 446 (1863), held that the Wisconsin statute designating "all able-bodied, white, male citizens" as subject to enrollment in the militia included an unnaturalized citizen who was a resident of the state. "Under our complex system of government," the court said, "there may be a citizen of a state, who is not a citizen of the United States in the full sense of the term." McKenzie v. Munn, 24 Ark. 155, 159 (1863), held that an alien, domiciled in the state for over ten years, was entitled to the homestead exemptions provided by the Arkansas statute to "every free white citizen of this state, male or female, being a household or head of a family." The court said: "The word 'citizen' is often used in common conversation and writing, as meaning only an inhabitant, a resident of a town, state, or county, without any implication of political or civil privileges; and we think it is so used in our constitution." Halaby v. Board of Directors of University, supra, involved the application of a statute which provided free university instruction to citizens of the municipality in which the university is located. The court held that the plaintiff, an alien minor whose parents were residents of and conducted a business in the city, was entitled to the benefits of that statute, saying: "It is to be observed that the term, 'citizen,' is often used in legislation where 'domicile' is meant and where United States citizenship has no reasonable relationship to the subject matter and purpose of the legislation in question."

Closely in point to the interpretation of the constitutional provision here involved is a report of the Committee of Elections of the House of Representatives, made in 1823. A petitioner had objected to the right of a Delegate to retain his seat from what was then the Michigan Territory. One of the objections was that the Delegate had not resided in the Territory one year previous to the election in the status of a citizen of the United States. An act of Congress passed in 1819, 3 Stat. 483 provided that "every free white male citizen of said Territory, above the age of twenty-one years, who shall have resided therein one year next preceding an election shall be entitled to vote at such election for a delegate to Congress. An act of 1823, 3 Stat. 769 provided that all citizens of the United States having the qualifications set forth in the former act shall be eligible to any office in the Territory. The Committee held that the statutory requirement of citizenship of the Territory for a year before the election did not mean that the aspirant for office must also have been a United States citizen during that period. The report said: 'It is the person, who is [221 A.2d 435] in the petition, who is [221 A.2d 435] among the qualifications of residence, age, freedom, &c. at the time he offers to vote, or is to be voted for * * *.' Upon the filing of the report, and the submission of a resolution that the Delegate was entitled to his seat, the contestant of the Delegate's election withdrew his protest, and the sitting Delegate was confirmed.

There is no express requirement in the Maryland Constitution that sheriffs be United States citizens. Voters must be, under Article I, Section 1, but Article IV, Section 44 does not require that sheriffs be voters. A person does not have to be a voter to be a citizen of either the United States or of a state, as in the case of native-born minors. In Maryland, from 1776 to 1802, the Constitution contained requirements of property ownership for the exercise of the franchise; there was no exception as to native-born citizens of the State. Steiner, Citizenship and Suffrage in Maryland (1895) 27, 31.

Closely in point to the interpretation of the constitutional provision here involved is a report of the Committee of Elections of the House of Representatives, made in 1823. A petitioner had objected to the right of a Delegate to retain his seat from what was then the Michigan Territory. One of the objections was that the Delegate had not resided in the Territory one year previous to the election in the status of a citizen of the United States. An act of Congress passed in 1819, 3 Stat. 483 provided that "every free white male citizen of said Territory, above the age of twenty-one years, who shall have resided therein one year next preceding an election shall be entitled to vote at such election for a delegate to Congress. An act of 1823, 3 Stat. 769 provided that all citizens of the United States having the qualifications set forth in the former act shall be eligible to any office in the Territory. The Committee held that the statutory requirement of citizenship of the Territory for a year before the election did not mean that the aspirant for office must also have been a United States citizen during that period. The report said: 'It is the person, who is [221 A.2d 435] in the petition, who is [221 A.2d 435] among the qualifications of residence, age, freedom, &c. at the time he offers to vote, or is to be voted for * * *.' Upon the filing of the report, and the submission of a resolution that the Delegate was entitled to his seat, the contestant of the Delegate's election withdrew his protest, and the sitting Delegate was confirmed.

There is no express requirement in the Maryland Constitution that sheriffs be United States citizens. Voters must be, under Article I, Section 1, but Article IV, Section 44 does not require that sheriffs be voters. A person does not have to be a voter to be a citizen of either the United States or of a state, as in the case of native-born minors. In Maryland, from 1776 to 1802, the Constitution contained requirements of property ownership for the exercise of the franchise; there was no exception as to native-born citizens of the State. Steiner, Citizenship and Suffrage in Maryland (1895) 27, 31.

The Maryland Constitution provides that the Governor, Judges and the Attorney General shall be qualified voters, and therefore, by necessary implication, citizens of the United States. Article II, Section 5, Article IV, Section 2, and Article V, Section 4. The absence of a similar requirement as to the qualifications of sheriffs is significant. So also, in our opinion, is the absence of any period of residence for a sheriff except that he shall have been a citizen of the State for five years. The Governor, Judges and Attorney General in addition to being citizens of the State and qualified voters, must have been a resident of the State, for various periods. The conjuction of the requisite period of residence with state citizenship in the qualifications for sheriff strongly indicates that, as in the authorities above referred to, state citizenship, as used in the constitutional qualifications for this office, was meant to be synonymous with domicile, and that citizenship of the United States is not required, even by implication, as a qualification for this office. The office of sheriff, under our Constitution, is ministerial in nature; a sheriff's function and province is to execute duties prescribed by law. See Buckeye Dev. Corp. v. Brown & Schilling, Inc., Md., 220 A.2d. 922, filed June 23, 1966 and the concurring opinion of Le Grand, C. J. in Mayor & City Council of Baltimore v. State, ex rel. Bd. of Police, 15 Md. 372, 370, 400-400 (1860).

It may well be that the phrase, 'a citizen of the State,' as used in the constitutional provisions as to qualifications, implies that a sheriff cannot owe allegiance to another nation. By the naturalization act of 1779, the Legislature provided that, to become a citizen of Maryland, an alien must swear allegiance to the State. The oath or affirmation provided that the applicant renounced allegiance 'to any king or prince, or any other State or Government.' Act of July, 1779, Ch. VI; Steiner, op. cit. 15. In this case, on the admitted facts, there can be no question of the appellant's undivided allegiance.

The court below rested its decision on its conclusion that, under the Fourteenth Amendment, no state may confer state citizenship upon a resident alien until such resident alien becomes a naturalized citizen of the United States. The court held that, upon City of Minneapolis v. Reum, 56 F. 57, the petitioner was not barred from this appeal. The case was decided in 1893. In that case, an alien resident of Minnesota, who declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States but had not been naturalized, brought a suit, based on diversity of citizenship, against the city in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Minnesota under Article III, Section 2 of the United States Constitution which provides that the federal judicial power shall extend to 'Controversies between * * * a State, or the Citizens thereof, and foreign States, Citizens or Subjects.' At the close of the evidence, the defendant moved to dismiss the action for want of jurisdiction, on the [221 A.2d 436] ground that the evidence failed to establish the allegation that the plaintiff was an alien. The court denied the motion, the plaintiff recovered judgment, and

The confusion over citizenship prevalent today is caused by a deliberate confusion of the above two contexts with each other so as to make every American appear to be a statutory citizen and therefore an public officer of the "United States Inc" government corporation. This fact was first identified by the U.S. Supreme Court as follows:

"Under our own systems of polity, the term 'citizen', implying the same or similar relations to the government and to society which appertain to the term, 'subject' in England, is familiar to all. Under either system, the term used is designed to apply to man in his individual character and to his natural capacities -- to a being or agent [PUBLIC OFFICER!] possessing social and political rights and sustaining social, political, and moral obligations. It is in this acceptation only, therefore, that the term 'citizen', in the article of the Constitution, can be received and understood. When distributing the judicial power, that article extends it to controversies between 'citizens' of different states. This must mean the natural physical beings composing those separate communities, and can by no violence of interpretation be made to signify artificial, incorporeal, theoretical, and invisible creations. A corporation, therefore, being not a natural person, but a mere creature of the mind, invisible and intangible, cannot be a citizen of a state, or of the United States, and cannot fall within the terms or the power of the above mentioned article, and can therefore neither plead nor be impleaded in the courts of the United States."

[Sandle v. Delaware & Raritan Canal Company 55 U.S. 80, 99 (1852) from dissenting opinion by Justice Daniel]

"The principal issue in this petition is the territorial scope of the term "the United States" in the Citizenship Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, U.S. Const. amend. XIV, § 1 ("All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside.") (emphasis added). Petitioner, who was born in the Philippines in 1934 during its status as a United States territory, argues she was "born ... in the United States" and is therefore a United States citizen."

[Doctrines of Lord Coke were founded upon an apprehension of the law now treated as antiquated and obsolete. His lordship did not anticipate an improvement by which a corporation could be transformed into a citizen, and by that transformation be given a physical existence, and endowed with soul and body too. The incongruities here attempted to be shown as necessarily deducible from the decision of the cases of Bank of the United States v. Deveaux and of Cincinnati & Louisville Railroad Company v. Letson afford some illustration of the effects which must ever follow a departure from the settled principles of the law. These principles are always traceable to a wise and deeply founded experience; they are therefore ever consentaneous and in harmony with themselves and with reason, and whenever abandoned as guides to the judicial course, the aberration must lead to bewildering uncertainty and confusion."

[Rundle v. Delaware & Raritan Canal Company 55 U.S. 80, 99 (1852) from dissenting opinion by Justice Daniel]
Petitioner's argument is relatively novel, having been addressed previously only in the Ninth Circuit. See Rabang v. INS, 35 F.3d 1449, 1452 (9th Cir.1994) ("No court has addressed whether persons born in a United States territory are born 'in the United States,' within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment."); cert. denied sub nom. Secundad v. INS, 515 U.S. 1130, 115 S.Ct. 2554, 132 L.Ed.2d 809 (1995). In a split decision, the Ninth Circuit held that "birth in the Philippines during the territorial period does not constitute birth 'in the United States' under the Citizenship Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, and thus does not give rise to United States citizenship." Rabang, 35 F.3d at 1452. We agree.44

Despite the novelty of petitioner's argument, the Supreme Court in the Insular Cases 45 provides authoritative guidance on the territorial scope of the term "the United States" in the Fourteenth Amendment. The Insular Cases were a series of Supreme Court decisions that addressed challenges to duties on goods transported from Puerto Rico to the continental United States. Puerto Rico, like the Philippines, had been recently ceded to the United States. The Court considered the territorial scope of the term "the United States" in the Constitution and held that this term as used in the uniformity clause of the Constitution was territorially limited to the states of the Union. U.S. Const. art. I, § 8 ("[A]ll Duties, Imposts and Excises shall be uniform throughout the United States." (emphasis added)); see Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U.S. 244, 251, 21 S.Ct. 770, 773, 45 L.Ed. 1088 (1901) ("[I]f we can nowhere be inferred that the territories were considered a part of the United States. The Constitution was created by the people of the United States, as a union of States, to be governed solely by representatives of the States; ... In short, the Constitution deals with States, their people, and their representatives."). Rabang, 35 F.3d at 1452. Puerto Rico was merely a territory "appurtenant and belonging to the United States, but not a part of the United States within the revenue clauses of the Constitution." Downes, 182 U.S. at 287, 21 S.Ct. at 787.

The Court's conclusion in Downes was derived in part by analyzing the territorial scope of the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Amendments. The Thirteenth Amendment prohibits slavery and involuntary servitude "within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction." U.S. Const. amend. XIII, § 1 (emphasis added). The Fourteenth Amendment states that persons "born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside." U.S. Const. amend XIV, § 1 (emphasis added). The disjunctive "or" in the Thirteenth Amendment demonstrates that there may be places within the jurisdiction of the United States that are not part of the Union to which the Thirteenth Amendment would apply. Downes, 182 U.S. at 251, 21 S.Ct. at 773. Citizenship under the Fourteenth Amendment, however, "is not extended to persons born in any place 'subject to [the United States'] jurisdiction,'" but is limited to persons born or naturalized in the States. Downes, 182 U.S. at 251, 21 S.Ct. at 773 (emphasis added); see also id. at 263, 21 S.Ct. at 777 ("In dealing with foreign sovereignties, the term 'United States' has a broader meaning than when used in the Constitution, and includes all territories subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal government, wherever located.").46

Following the decisions in the Insular Cases, the Supreme Court confirmed that the Philippines, during its status as a United States territory, was not a part of the United States. See Hooven & Allison Co. v. Evatt, 324 U.S. 652, 678, 65 S.Ct. 870, 883, 89 L.Ed. 1252 (1945) ("As we have seen, [the Philippines] are not a part of the United States in the sense that they are subject to and enjoy the benefits or protection of the Constitution, as do the states which are united by and under it."); see id. at 673-74, 65 S.Ct. at 881 (Philippines "are territories belonging to, but not a part of, the Union of states under the Constitution," and therefore imports "brought from the Philippines into the United States ... are brought from territory, which is not a part of the United States, into the territory of the United States.").

Accordingly, the Supreme Court has observed, without deciding, that persons born in the Philippines prior to its independence in 1946 are not [CONSTITUTIONAL] citizens of the United States. See Barber v. Gonzales, 347 U.S. 637, 639 n. 1, 74 S.Ct. 822, 823 n. 1, 98 L.Ed. 1009 (1954) (stating that although the inhabitants of the Philippines during the territorial period were "nationals" of the United States, they were not "United States citizens"); Rabang v. Boyd, 353 U.S. 427, 432 n. 12, 77 S.Ct. 985, 988 n. 12, 1 L.Ed.2d 956 (1957) ("The 44 For the purpose of deciding this petition, we address only the territorial scope of the phrase "the United States" in the Citizenship Clause. We do not consider the distinct issue of whether citizenship is a "fundamental right" that extends by its own force to the inhabitants of the Philippines under the doctrine of territorial incorporation. Dorr v. United States, 195 U.S. 138, 146, 24 S.Ct. 808, 812, 49 L.Ed. 128 (1904) (" Doubtless Congress, in legislating for the Territories would be subject to those fundamental limitations in favor of personal rights which are formulated in the Constitution and its amendments." (citation and internal quotation marks omitted)); Rabang, 35 F.3d at 1453 n. 8 ("We note that the territorial scope of the phrase 'the United States' is a distinct inquiry from whether a constitutional provision should extend to a territory." (citing Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U.S. 244, 249, 21 S.Ct. 770, 772, 45 L.Ed. 1088 (1901))) The phrase "the United States" is an express territorial limitation on the scope of the Citizenship Clause. Because we determine that the phrase "the United States" did not include the Philippines during its status as a United States territory, we need not determine the application of the Citizenship Clause to the Philippines under the doctrine of territorial incorporation. Cf. United States v. Verdugo-Urquidez, 494 U.S. 259, 291 n. 11, 110 S.Ct. 1056, 1074 n. 11, 108 L.Ed.2d 222 (1990) (Brennan, J., dissenting) (arguing that the Amendment may be applied extraterritorially, in part, because it does not contain an "express territorial limitation [J]").

46 Congress, under the Act of February 21, 1871, ch. 62, § 34, 16 Stat. 419, 426, expressly extended the Constitution and federal laws to the District of Columbia. See Downes, 182 U.S. at 261, 21 S.Ct. at 777 (stating that the "mere cession of the District of Columbia" from portions of Virginia and Maryland did not "take [the District of Columbia] out of the United States or from under the aegis of the Constitution.").

inhabitants of the Islands acquired by the United States during the late war with Spain, not being citizens of the United States, do not possess right of free entry into the United States," (emphasis added) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted)).

[Valmonte v. I.N.S., 136 F.3d 914 (C.A.2, 1998)]

The STATUTORY context for the term "citizen" described in 26 C.F.R. §1.1-(c ) and 26 U.S.C. §3121(e) relies on the geographical term "United States" found in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) and (a)(10) and 4 U.S.C. §110(d), which means federal territory and not a state of the Union. Therefore, the "citizen" and "U.S. person" found in the Internal Revenue Code is a TERRITORIAL rather than a STATE citizen. For details on why STATUTORY "citizens" are all public officers and not private humans, read:

Why Statutory Civil Law is Law for Government and Not Private Persons, Form #05.037

The U.S. Supreme Court has held in Hooven & Allison Co. v. Evatt, 324 U.S. 652 (1945), that there are THREE different meanings and contexts for the word "United States". Hence, there are THREE different types of "citizens of the United States" as used in federal statutes and the Constitution. All three types of citizens are called "citizens of the United States", but each relies on a different meaning of the "United States". The meaning that applies depends on the context. For instance, the meaning of "United States" as used in the Constitution implies states of the Union and excludes federal territory, while the term "United States" within federal statutory law means federal territory and excludes states of the Union. Here is an example demonstrating the Constitutional context. Note that they use "part of the United States within the meaning of the Constitution", and the word "the" and the use of the singular form of "meaning" implies only ONE meaning, which means states of the Union and excludes federal territory:

"As the only judicial power vested in Congress is to create courts whose judges shall hold their offices during good behavior, it necessarily follows that, if Congress authorizes the creation of courts and the appointment of judges for limited time, it must act independently of the Constitution upon territory which is not part of the United States within the meaning of the Constitution."

[O'Donohue v. United States, 289 U.S. 516, 53 S.Ct. 740 (1933)]

The U.S. Supreme Court and lower courts have also held specifically that:

1. The statutes conferring citizenship in Title 8 of the U.S. Code are a PRIVILEGE and not a CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT, and are therefore not even necessary in the case of state citizens.

"Finally, this Court is mindful of the years of past practice in which territorial citizenship has been treated as a statutory [PRIVILEGE!], and not a constitutional, right."

2. A citizen of the District of Columbia is NOT equivalent to a constitutional citizen. Note also that the "United States" as defined in the Internal Revenue Code, for instance, includes the "District of Columbia" and nowhere expressly includes states of the Union in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) and (a)(10). We therefore conclude that the statutory term "citizen of the United States" as used in 8 U.S.C. §1401 includes District of Columbia citizens and all those domiciled on federal territory "statutory citizens" and EXCLUDES those domiciled within states of the Union:

"The 1st section of the 14th article [Fourteenth Amendment], to which our attention is more specifically invited, opens with a definition of citizenship—not only citizenship of the United States[], but citizenship of the states. No such definition was previously found in the Constitution, nor had any attempt been made to define it by act of Congress. It had been the occasion of much discussion in the courts, by the executive departments and in the public journals. It had been said by eminent judges that no man was a citizen of the United States[] except as he was a citizen of one of the states composing the Union. Those therefore, who had been born and resided always in the District of Columbia or in the territories, though within the United States[], were not citizens."

3. An the 8 U.S.C. §1401 "national and citizen of the United States at birth" born on federal territory is NOT a CONSTITUTIONAL citizen mentioned in the Fourteenth Amendment when it said:

"The Court today holds that Congress can indeed rob a citizen of his citizenship just as long as five members of this Court can satisfy themselves that the congressional action was not 'unreasonable, arbitrary,' ante, at 831; 'misplaced or arbitrary,' ante, at 832; or 'irrational or arbitrary or unfair,' ante, at 833. My first comment is that not one of these 'tests' appears in the Constitution. Moreover, it seems a little strange to find such 'tests' as these announced in an opinion which condemns the earlier decisions it overrules for their resort to clichés, which it describes as 'too handy and too easy, and, like most clichés, can be misleading.' Ante, at 835. That description precisely fits those words and clauses which the majority uses, but which the Constitution does not.

The Constitution, written for the ages, cannot rise and fall with this Court's passing notions of what is 'fair,' or 'reasonable,' or 'arbitrary.' [. . .]

The Court today holds that the Citizenship Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment has no application to Bellei. The Court first notes that Afroyim was essentially a case construing the Citizenship Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Since the Citizenship Clause declares that: 'All persons born or naturalized in the United States * * * area citizens of the United States * * *'; the Court reasons that the protections against involuntary expatriation declared in Afroyim do not protect all American citizens, but only those 'born or naturalized in the United States.' Afroyim, the argument runs, was naturalized in this country so he was protected by the Citizenship Clause, but Bellei, since he acquired his American citizenship at birth in Italy as a foreign-born child of an American citizen, was neither born nor naturalized in the United States and, hence, falls outside the scope of the Fourteenth Amendment guarantees declared in Afroyim. One could hardly call this a generous reading of the great purposes the Fourteenth Amendment was adopted to bring about. While conceding that Bellei is an American citizen, the majority states: 'He simply is not a Fourteenth-Amendment-first-sentence citizen.' Therefore, the majority reasons, the congressional revocation of his citizenship is not barred by the Constitution. I cannot accept the Court's conclusion that the Fourteenth Amendment protects the citizenship of some Americans and not others. [. . .]

The Court today puts aside the Fourteenth Amendment as a standard by which to measure congressional action with respect to citizenship, and substitutes in its place the majority's own vague notions of 'fairness.' The majority takes a new step with the recurring theme that the test of constitutionality is the Court's own view of what is 'fair, reasonable, and right.' Despite the concession that Bellei was admittedly an American citizen, and despite the holding in Afroyim that the Fourteenth Amendment has put citizenship, once conferred, beyond the power of Congress to revoke, the majority today upholds the revocation of Bellei's citizenship on the ground that the congressional action was not 'irrational or arbitrary or unfair.' The majority applies the 'shock-the-conscience' test to uphold, rather than strike, a federal statute. It is a dangerous concept of constitutional law that allows the majority to conclude that, because it cannot say the statute is 'irrational or arbitrary or unfair,' the statute must be constitutional.

Since the Court this Term has already downgraded citizens receiving public welfare, Wyman v. James, 400 U.S. 309, 91 S.Ct. 381, 27 L.Ed.2d 408 (1971), and citizens having the misfortune to be illegitimate, Labine v. Vincent, 401 U.S. 532, 91 S.Ct. 1917, 28 L.Ed.2d. 288, I suppose today's decision downgrading citizens born outside the United States should have been expected. Once again, as in James and Labine, the Court's opinion makes evident that its holding is contrary to earlier decisions. Concededly, petitioner was a citizen at birth, not by constitutional right, but only through operation of a federal statute. [Rogers v. Bellei, 401 U.S. 815 (1971)]

The Internal Revenue Code relies on the statutory definition of "United States", which means federal territory. The term "citizen" is nowhere defined within the Internal Revenue Code and is defined twice within the implementing regulations at 26 C.F.R. §1.1-1 and 26 C.F.R. §31.3121(e)-1. Below is the first of these two definitions:

26 C.F.R. §1.1-1 Income tax on individuals

c) Who is a citizen.

Every person born or naturalized in the United States and subject to its jurisdiction is a citizen. For other rules governing the acquisition of citizenship, see chapters 1 and 2 of title III of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1401-1459). For rules governing loss of citizenship, see sections 349 to 357, inclusive, of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1481-1489), Schneider v. Rusk, (1964) 377 U.S. 163, and Rev.Rul. 70-506, C.B. 1970-2, 1. For rules pertaining to persons who are nationals but not citizens at birth, e.g., a person born in American Samoa, see section 308 of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1408). For special rules applicable to certain expatriates who have lost citizenship with a principal purpose of avoiding certain taxes, see section 877. A foreigner who has filed his declaration of intention of becoming a citizen but who has not yet been admitted to citizenship by a final order of a naturalization court is an alien.

Notice the term “born or naturalized in the United States and subject to its jurisdiction”, which means the exclusive legislative jurisdiction of the federal government within the District of Columbia and its territories and possessions under Article 1, Section 8, Clause 17 of the Constitution and Title 48 of the U.S. Code. If they meant to include states of the Union, they would have used “their jurisdiction” or “the jurisdiction” as used in section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment instead of “its jurisdiction”.

“The 13th Amendment to the Constitution, prohibiting slavery and involuntary servitude ‘within the United States, or in any place subject to their jurisdiction,’ is also significant as showing that there may be places within the jurisdiction of the United States that are not part of the Union. To say that the phraseology of this amendment was due to the fact that it was intended to prohibit slavery in the seceded states, under a possible interpretation that those states were no longer a part of the Union, is to confess the very point in issue, since it involves an admission that, if those states were not a part of the Union, they were still subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

Upon the other hand, the 14th Amendment, upon the subject of citizenship, declares only that ‘all persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States, and of the state wherein they reside. Here there is a limitation to persons born or naturalized in the United States, which is not extended to persons born in any place subject to their jurisdiction.’”

[Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U.S. 244 (1901)]

The above definition of “citizen” applying exclusively to the Internal Revenue Code reveals that it depends on 8 U.S.C. §1401, which we said earlier in section 4.11.3 and its subsections means a human being and NOT artificial person born anywhere in the country but domiciled in the federal United States/federal zone, which includes territories or possessions and excludes states of the Union. These people possess a special “non-constitutional” class of citizenship that is not covered by the Fourteenth Amendment or any other part of the Constitution.

We also showed in section 4.11.4 that people born in states of the Union are technically not STATUTORY “citizens and nationals of the United States” under 8 U.S.C. §1401, but instead are STATUTORY “non-resident non-persons” with a legislatively but not constitutionally foreign domicile under 8 U.S.C. §1101(a)(21). The term “national” is defined in 8 U.S.C. §1101(a)(21) as follows:

(a) (21) The term “national” means a person owing permanent allegiance to a state.

In the case of "nationals" who are also statutory “non-resident non-persons” under 8 U.S.C. §1101(a)(21), these are people who owe their permanent allegiance to the confederation of states in the Union called the "United States of America" and NOT the “United States*”, which is the government and legal person they created to preside ONLY over community property of states of the Union and foreign affairs but NOT internal affairs within the states..

The definition of “citizen of the United States” found in 26 C.F.R. §31.3121(e)-1 corroborates the above conclusions, keeping in mind that “United States” within that definition means the federal zone instead of the states of the Union. Remember: “United States” or “United States of America” in the Constitution means the states of the Union while “United States” in federal statutes means the federal zone only and excludes states of the Union.

26 C.F.R. §31.3121(e)-1 State, United States, and citizen

(e)...The term 'citizen of the United States' includes a citizen of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico or the Virgin Islands, and, effective January 1, 1961, a citizen of Guam or American Samoa.

Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, and American Samoa are all U.S. territories and federal “States” that are within the federal zone. They are not “states” under the Internal Revenue Code. The proper subjects of Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A are only the people who are born in these federal “States”, and these people are the only people who are in fact “citizens and nationals of the United States” under 8 U.S.C. §1401 and under 26 C.F.R. §1.1-1(e).

The basis of citizenship in the United States is the English doctrine under which nationality meant “birth within allegiance of the king”. The U.S. Supreme Court helped explain this concept precisely in the case of U.S. v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U.S. 649 (1898) :

“The supreme court of North Carolina, speaking by Mr. Justice Gaston, said: 'Before our Revolution, all free persons born within the dominions of the king of Great Britain, whatever their color or complexion, were native-born British subjects; those born out of his allegiance were aliens.' Upon the Revolution, no other change took place in the law of North Carolina than was consequent upon the transition from a colony dependent on an European king to a free and sovereign [169 U.S. 649, 664] state, 'British subjects in North Carolina became North Carolina freemen;' 'and all free persons born within the state are born citizens of the state. The term 'citizen,' as understood in our law, is precisely analogous to the term 'subject' in the common law, and the change of phrase has entirely resulted from the change of government. The sovereignty has been transferred from the man to the collective body of the people; and he who before was a 'subject of the king' is now 'a citizen of the state,' State v. Manuel (1838) 4 Dev. & b. 20, 24-26."

[U.S. v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U.S. 649 (1898)]
In our country following the victorious Revolution of 1776, the “king” was therefore replaced by “the people”, who are collectively and individually the “sovereigns” within our republican form of government. The group of people within whatever “body politic” one is referring to who live within the territorial limits of that “body politic” are the thing that you claim allegiance to when you claim “nationality” to any one of the following three distinctive political bodies:

1. A state the Union.
2. The country “United States”, as defined in our Constitution.
3. The municipal government of the federal zone called the “District of Columbia”, which was chartered as a federal corporation under 16 Stat. 419 §1 and 28 U.S.C. §3002(15)(A).

Each of the three above political bodies have “citizens” who are distinctively their own. When you claim to be a “citizen” of any one of the three, you aren’t claiming allegiance to the government of that “body politic”, but to the people (the sovereigns) that the government serves. If that government is rebellious to the will of the people, and is outside the boundaries of the Constitution that defines its authority so that it becomes a “de facto” government rather than the original “de jure” government it was intended to be, then your allegiance to the people must be superior to that of the government that serves the people. In the words of Jesus Himself in John 15:20:

> “Remember the word that I said to you, ‘A servant is not greater than his master.’”
> [John 15:20, Bible, NKJV]

The “master” or “sovereign” in this case, is the people, who have expressed their sovereign will through a written and unchangeable Constitution.

> “The glory of our American system of government is that it was created by a written constitution which protects the people against the exercise of arbitrary, unlimited power, and the limits of which instrument may not be passed by the government it created, or by any branch of it, or even by the people who ordained it, except by amendment or change of its provisions.”
> [Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U.S. 244, 21 S.Ct. 770 (1901)]

This is a crucial distinction you must understand in order to fully comprehend the foundations of our republican system of government. Let’s look at the definition of “citizen” according to the U.S. Supreme Court in order to clarify the points we have made so far on what it means to be a “citizen” of our glorious republic:

> “There cannot be a nation without a people. The very idea of a political community, such as a nation is, implies an association of persons for the promotion of their general welfare. Each one of the persons associated becomes a member of the nation formed by the association. He owes it allegiance and is entitled to its protection. Allegiance and protection are, in this connection, reciprocal obligations. The one is a compensation for the other; allegiance for protection and protection for allegiance.

> “For convenience it has been found necessary to give a name to this membership. The object is to designate by a title the person and the relation he bears to the nation. For this purpose the words ‘subject,’ ‘inhabitant,’ and ‘citizen’ have been used, and the choice between them is sometimes made to depend upon the form of the government. Citizen is now more commonly employed, however, and as it has been considered better suited to the description of one living under a republican government, it was adopted by nearly all of the States upon their separation from Great Britain, and was afterwards adopted in the Articles of Confederation and in the Constitution of the United States. When used in this sense it is understood as conveying the idea of membership of a nation, and nothing more.”

> “To determine, then, who were citizens of the United States before the adoption of the amendment it is necessary to ascertain what persons originally associated themselves together to form the nation, and what were afterwards admitted to membership.

> “Looking at the Constitution itself we find that it was ordained and established by ‘the people of the United States,’ and then going further back, we find that these were the people of the several States that had before dissolved the political bands which connected them with Great Britain, and assumed a separate and equal station among the powers of the earth, and that had by Articles of Confederation and Perpetual Union, in which they took the name of ‘the United States of America,’ entered into a firm league of [88 U.S. 162, 167] friendship with each other for their common defense, the security of their liberties and their mutual and general welfare, binding themselves to assist each other against all force offered to or attack made upon them, or any of them, on account of religion, sovereignty, trade, or any other pretense whatever.

> “Whoever, then, was one of the people of either of these States when the Constitution of the United States was adopted, became ipso facto a citizen—a member of the nation created by its adoption. He was one of the persons associating together to form the nation, and was, consequently, one of its original citizens. As to this there has never been a doubt. Disputes have arisen as to whether or not certain persons or certain classes of persons were part of the people at the time, but never as to their citizenship if they were."

[Minor v. Happersett, 88 U.S. 162 (1874), emphasis added]

The thing to focus on in the above is the phrase “he owes allegiance and is entitled to its protection”. People domiciled in states of the Union have dual allegiance and dual nationality: They owe allegiance to two governments not one, so they are “dual-nationals”. They are “dual nationals” because the states of the Union are independent nations:

Dual citizenship. Citizenship in two different countries. Status of citizens of United States who reside within a state; i.e., person who are born or naturalized in the U.S. are citizens of the U.S. and the state wherein they reside.

Likewise, those people who live in a federal “State” like Puerto Rico also owe dual allegiance: one to the District of Columbia, which is municipal government and which possesses the police powers that protect them, and the other allegiance to the government of the United States of America, which is the general government for the whole country. As we said before, Congress wears two hats and operates in two capacities or jurisdictions simultaneously, each of which covers a different and mutually exclusive geographical area:

1. As the municipal government for the District of Columbia and all U.S. territories. All “acts of Congress” or federal statutes passed in this capacity are referred to as “private international law”. This political community is called the “National Government”.

2. As the general government for the states of the Union. All “acts of Congress” or federal statutes passed in this capacity are called “public international law”. This political community is called the “Federal Government.”

Each of the two capacities above has different types of “citizens” within it and each is a unique and separate “body politic”. Most laws that Congress writes pertain to the first jurisdiction above only. Below is a summary of these two classes of “citizens”:

The U.S. Supreme Court recognized the above two separate political and legislative jurisdictions and their respective separate types of “citizens” when it held the following:

“The 1st section of the 14th article [Fourteenth Amendment], to which our attention is more specifically invited, opens with a definition of citizenship—not only citizenship of the United States[], but citizenship of the states. No such definition was previously found in the Constitution, nor had any attempt been made to define it by act of Congress. It had been the occasion of much discussion in the courts, by the executive departments and in the public journals. It had been said by eminent judges that no man was a citizen of the United States[] except as he was a citizen of one of the states composing the Union. Those therefore, who had been born and resided always in the District of Columbia or in the territories, though within the United States[], were not citizens. Whether this proposition was sound or not had never been judicially decided.”

As we pointed out earlier in section 4.11.4, federal statutes and “acts of Congress” do not and cannot prescribe the STATUTORY citizenship status of human beings born in and domiciled in states of the Union and outside of the exclusive or general legislative jurisdiction of Congress. 8 U.S.C. §1408(2) comes the closest to defining their citizenship status, but even that definition doesn’t address most persons born in states of the Union neither of whose parents ever resided in the 47 See Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 38 U.S. (13 Pet.) 519, 10 L.Ed. 274 (1839), in which the Supreme Court ruled:

federal zone. No federal statute or “act of Congress” directly can or does prescribe the citizenship status of persons born in states of the Union because state law, and not federal law, prescribes their status under the Law of Nations. The reason is because no government may write civil laws that apply outside of their subject matter or exclusive territorial jurisdiction, and states of the Union are STATUTORILY but not CONSTITUTIONALLY “foreign” to the United States government for the purposes of police powers and legislative jurisdiction. Here is confirmation of that fact which the geographical definitions within federal also CONFIRM:

“Judge Story, in his treatise on the Conflict of Laws, lays down, as the basis upon which all reasonings on the law of comity must necessarily rest, the following maxims: First, ‘that every nation possesses an exclusive sovereignty and jurisdiction within its own territory’; secondly, ‘that no state or nation can by its laws directly affect or bind property out of its own territory, or bind persons not resident therein, whether they are natural born subjects or others.’ The learned judge then adds: ‘From these two maxims or propositions there follows a third, and that is that whatever force and obligation the laws of one country have in another depend solely upon the laws and municipal regulation of the matter; that is to say, upon its own proper jurisdiction and polity, and upon its own express or tacit consent.’ Story on Conflict of Laws, §23.”

Congress is given the authority under the Constitution, Article I, Section 8, Clause 4 to write “an uniform Rule of Naturalization” and they have done this in Title 8 of the U.S. Code called the "Aliens and Nationality", but they were never given any authority under the Constitution to prescribe laws for the states of the Union relating to citizenship by birth rather than naturalization. That subject is, and always has been, under the exclusive jurisdiction of states of the Union. Naturalization is only one of two ways by which a person can acquire citizenship, and Congress has jurisdiction only over one of the two ways of acquiring citizenship.

“The question, now agitated, depends upon another question; whether the State of Pennsylvania, since the 26th of March, 1790, (when the act of Congress was passed) has a right to naturalize an alien? And this must receive its answer from the solution of a third question; whether, according to the constitution of the United States, the authority to naturalize is exclusive, or concurrent? We are of the opinion, then, that the States, individually, still enjoy a concurrent authority upon this subject; but that their individual authority cannot be exercised so as to contravene the rule established by the authority of the Union.

“The true reason for investing Congress with the power of naturalization has been assigned at the Bar: --It was to guard against too narrow, instead of too liberal, a mode of conferring the rights of citizenship. Thus, the individual States cannot exclude those citizens, who have been adopted by the United States; but they can adopt citizens upon easier terms, than those which Congress may deem it expedient to impose.

“But the act of Congress itself, furnishes a strong proof that the power of naturalization is concurrent. In the concluding proviso, it is declared, ‘that no person heretofore proscribed by any State, shall be admitted a citizen as aforesaid, except by an act of the Legislature of the State, in which such person was proscribed.’ Here, we find, that Congress has not only circumscribed the exercise of its own authority, but has recognized the authority of a State Legislature, in one case, to admit a citizen of the United States; which could not be done in any case, if the power of naturalization, either by its own nature, or by the manner of its being vested in the Federal Government, was an exclusive power.”

[Collet v. Collet, 2 U.S. 294, 1 L.Ed. 387 (1792)]

Many freedom fighters overlook the fact that the STATUTORY “citizen” mentioned in 26 C.F.R. §1.1-1 can also be a corporation, and this misunderstanding is why many of them think that they are the only proper subject of the Subtitle A federal income tax. In fact, a corporation is also a STATUTORY “person” and an “individual” and a “citizen” within the meaning of the Internal Revenue Code.

“A corporation is a citizen, resident, or inhabitant of the state or country by or under the laws of which it was created, and of that state or country only.”

[19 Corpus Juris Secundum (C.J.S.), Corporations, §§86 (2003); Legal encyclopedia]

Corporations, however, cannot be either a CONSTITUTIONAL “person” or “citizen” nor can they have a legal existence outside of the sovereignty that they were created in.

Not being citizens of the United States, corporations accordingly have been declared unable “to claim the protection of that clause of the Fourteenth Amendment which secures the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States against abridgment or impairment by the law of a State.” Orient Ins. Consequently, the only corporations who are “citizens” and the only “corporate profits” that are subject to tax under Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A are those that are formed under the laws of the District of Columbia, and not those under the laws of states of the Union. Congress can ONLY tax or regulate that which it creates as a VOLUNTARY franchise, and corporations are just such a franchise. Here is why:

“Now, a grant of corporate existence is a grant of special privileges to the corporators, enabling them to act for certain designated purposes as a single individual, and exempting them (unless otherwise specifically provided) from individual liability. The corporation being the mere creation of local law, can have no legal existence beyond the limits of the sovereignty where created. As said by this court in Bank of Augusta v. Earle, ‘It must dwell in the place of its creation and cannot migrate to another sovereignty.’ The recognition of its existence even by other States, and the enforcement of its contracts made therein, depend purely upon the comity of those States—a comity which is never extended where the existence of the corporation or the exercise of its powers are prejudicial to their interests or repugnant to their policy.”

[Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. (U.S.) 168, 19 L.Ed. 357 (1868)]

In conclusion, you aren’t the STATUTORY “citizen” described in 26 C.F.R. §1.1-1 who is the proper subject of Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A, nor are you a “resident” of the “United States” defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) if you were born in a state of the Union and are domiciled there. Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A only applies to persons domiciled in the federal zone and payments originating from within the United States government. If you are domiciled in a state of the Union, then you aren’t domiciled in the federal zone. Consequently, the only type of person you can be as a person born in a state of the Union is:

2. A CONSTITUTIONAL “person”.
3. A statutory “non-resident non-person”.
4. NOT any of the following:
   4.1. A STATUTORY "person".
   4.3. A statutory "national and citizen of the United States at birth" as defined in 8 U.S.C. §1401.

We call the confluence of the above a "non-resident non-person " as described below:

Non-Resident Non-Person Position, Form #05.020

You only become a statutory "nonresident alien" as defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(b)(1)(B) when you surrender your PRIVATE, sovereign status and sovereign immunity by entering into contracts with the government, such as accepting a public office or a government "benefit".

The reason most Americans falsely think they owe income tax and why they continue to illegally be the target of IRS enforcement activity is because they file the wrong tax return form and thereby create false presumptions about their status in relation to the federal government. IRS Form 1040 is only for use by resident aliens, not those who are non-residents such as:.

as state nationals. The "individual" mentioned in the upper left corner of the form is defined in 26 C.F.R. §1.1441-1(c)(3) as an "alien". STATUTORY "citizens" (under 8 U.S.C. §1401) are not included in the definition and this is the only definition of "individual" anywhere in the I.R.C. or the Treasury Regulations. It also constitutes fraud for a state national to declare themselves to be a resident alien. A state national who chooses a domicile in the federal zone is classified as a statutory "U.S. citizen" pursuant to 8 U.S.C. §1101(a)(22)(A) and NOT a "resident" (alien). It is furthermore a criminal violation of 18 U.S.C. §911 for a state national to impersonate a statutory "U.S. citizen". The only tax return form a state national can file without committing fraud or a crime is IRS Form 1040NR, and even then he or she is committing a fraud unless lawfully serving in a public office in the national government.

Fourteenth Amendment

Some tax protesters argue that all Americans are citizens of individual states as opposed to citizens of the United States, and that the United States therefore has no power to tax citizens or impose other federal laws outside of Washington D.C. and other federal enclaves[7][20] The first sentence of Section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment states:

All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside.

The power to tax of the national government extends to wherever STATUTORY "citizens" or federal territory are found, including states of the Union. HOWEVER, those domiciled in states of the Union are NOT STATUTORY "citizens" under 8 U.S.C. §1401 or 26 C.F.R. §1.1-1 and the ONLY statutory "citizens" or STATUTORY "taxpayers" described in the Internal Revenue Code Subtitles A or C are in fact PUBLIC OFFICERS within the national but not state government. 5.2.21 Rebutted DOJ and Judicial Deception Regarding Federal Jurisdiction

The federal government on a number of occasions has committed fraud in attempting to deny that its jurisdiction is limited to persons domiciled in the federal zone and payments from the U.S. government in the case of Subtitle A income taxes. For instance, section 40.14[2] of the Department of Justice (DOJ), Tax Division, Criminal Tax Manual (DOJTDCTM) at the following address on our website:

denies the claim generally that the Federal government has jurisdiction only inside the federal zone. Here is the quote from that section:

40.14[2] District Court Jurisdiction of Title 26 Offenses

Despite protestors’ claims to the contrary, it is clear that United States District Courts have jurisdiction over criminal offenses enumerated in the Internal Revenue Code, notwithstanding want of a statute within Title 26 conferring such jurisdiction. Generally, this is based on the reasoning that 18 U.S.C. § 3231 gives the district courts original jurisdiction over “all offenses against the laws of the United States” and the Internal Revenue Code defines offenses against the laws of the United States. United States v. Huguenin, 950 F.2d 23, 25 n.2 (1st Cir. 1991); United States v. Isenhower, 754 F.2d 489, 490 (3d Cir. 1985); United States v. Eilerton, 707 F.2d 108, 109 (4th Cir. 1983); United States v. Masat, 948 F.2d 923, 934 (5th Cir. 1991); Salberg v. United States, 969 F.2d 379, 384 (7th Cir. 1992); United States v. Bressler, 772 F.2d 287, 293 n.5 (7th Cir. 1985); United States v. Rosnow, 977 F.2d 399, 412 (8th Cir. 1992), cert. denied sub nom. Dewey v. United States, 113 S.Ct. 1596 (1993); United States v. Prebyla, 737 F.2d 828, 829 (9th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1099 (1985); United States v. Collins, 920 F.2d 619, 629 (10th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 111 S.Ct. 2022 (1991) (citing cases); United States v. Ward, 833 F.2d 1538, 1539 (11th Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 485 U.S. 1022 (1988). See also United States v. McMullen, 755 F.2d. 65, 67 (6th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 829 (1985). The argument that the United States has jurisdiction only over Washington, D.C., federal enclaves and territories, and possessions of the United States has similarly been rejected. See Ward, 833 F.2d at 1539.

We agree with the DOJ that the United States can have extraterritorial jurisdiction, but only in the following cases:

1. Federal employees and instrumentalities, regardless of where they are situated, pursuant to 26 U.S.C. §871(b). All such instrumentalities are engaged in a “trade or business”, which the I.R.C. defines as a “public office” in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(26). This includes:
   1.1. Federal employees.
   1.2. Federal corporations.
   1.3. Federal benefit recipients.
2. Federal payments not connected with a “trade or business”, as defined in 26 U.S.C. §871(a).
3. Persons domiciled in the statutory but not constitutional “United States”, which is limited to the District of Columbia per 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) and (a)(10), and who are located abroad under 26 U.S.C. §911.

We will also prove later, starting in section 5.4 and its subsections, that all extraterritorial (outside the federal zone) jurisdiction the federal government exercises MUST originate from voluntary consent in some form. That consent is manifested in any of the following forms:

1. The voluntary choice of domicile within the federal zone. See section 5.4.8 and following.
2. The voluntary choice to engage in privileged, excise taxable activities, such as a “trade or business”, which is the equivalent of a business partnership with the federal government. See: The “Trade or Business” Scam, Family Guardian Fellowship http://famguardian.org/Subjects/Taxes/Articles/TradeOrBusinessScam.htm
3. The act of incorporating a corporation.

The court held that the first company’s charter was a contract between it and the state, within the protection of the constitution of the United States, and that the charter to the last company was therefore null and void., Mr. Justice DAVIS, delivering the opinion of the court, said that, if anything was settled by an unbroken chain of decisions in the federal courts, it was that an act of incorporation was a contract between the state and the stockholders, a departure from which now would involve dangers to society that cannot be foreseen, would shock the sense of justice of the country, unhinge its business interests, and weaken, if not destroy, that respect which has always been felt for the judicial department of the government.’ [New Orleans Gas Co. v. Louisiana Light Co., 115 U.S. 650 (1885)]

4. Authority delegated in the constitution itself on any of the following subjects:

4.1. Use of mail. (see U.S. Constitution, Article 1, Section 8, Clause 7 and 18 U.S.C. §1341)
4.2. Federal insurance (see 18 U.S.C. §2113)
4.3. Interstate commerce (see U.S. Constitution, Article 1, Section 8, Clause 3 and 18 U.S.C. §2314)
4.5. Excise taxes (duties, imposts, etc) on foreign commerce under Subtitles D and E of the Internal Revenue Code (see U.S. Constitution, Article 1, Section 8, Clause 3)

Of the above, the only one that could have fit Mr. Ward was item 2 above, a “trade or business”. Chances are, information returns were filed against him that he never rebutted which connected him with a public office in the U.S. government and unwittingly made him into a “taxpayer”. If he had rebutted these returns, the outcome of his case probably would have been very different.

We looked up the ruling on VersusLaw (http://www.versuslaw.com) and repeat below for your benefit:

United States v. Ward, 833 F.2d. 1538 (11th Cir. 12/16/1987)

[1] UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE ELEVENTH CIRCUIT
[2] No. 87-3271
[5] UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, PLAINTIFF-APPELLEE, V.
ARTHUR D. WARD, DEFENDANT-APPELLANT
[8] Robert W. Merkle, USA; Bruce Hinshelwood, AUSA, for Appellee.
[10] Author: Per Curiam

First, he suggests that the United States has jurisdiction over only Washington, D.C., the federal enclaves within the states, and the territories and possessions of the United States. Secondly, he interprets the term “individual” within the Internal Revenue Code to apply only to those individuals located within this jurisdiction of the United States. Ward reaches this twisted conclusion by misinterpreting a portion of the Income Tax Code. The 1913 Act defined the words “state” or “United States” to “include” United States territories and the District of Columbia; Ward asks this court to interpret the word “include” as a term of limitation, rather than of definition.

Finally, Ward maintains that the only persons expressly and statutorily liable for income tax are the withholding agents of nonresident aliens and foreign corporations.

[12] We find each of appellant’s contentions to be utterly without merit. The district court properly denied Ward’s motions for acquittal, and properly refused to instruct the jury as to Ward’s theory of his defense. The opinion of the district court is AFFIRMED.

Attorney Larry Becraft represented Mr. Ward. Below are his words on the subject:

Back in 1987, I tried a tax evasion case in Orlando where the defendant's name was Arthur D. Ward. He was convicted and we appealed.

In Sept. 1987, AUSA Bruce Hinshelwood filed his brief in that appeal wherein he stated as follows:

"The government is unable, therefore, to offer case authority for the universally accepted proposition that a citizen of the United States, working and residing in the United States, subject to federal law, earning wages, and responsible for filing an income tax return, is liable for taxation."

See attached PDF of parts of his brief. Notwithstanding this statement, Ward’s conviction was affirmed; see United States v. Ward, 833 F.2d. 1538 (11th Cir. 1988).
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

Back in 1987, I circulated to a small confidential group a letter outlining the arguments in that appeal, and today there has circulated on the Net what appears to be a redraft of that letter, which I no longer have. I hope what I state in this e-mail explains today’s “amazing” e-mail, which did not originate with me.

Larry Becraft

The PDF that Larry Becraft attached is found below:

Note that this is the ONLY case the DOJ hangs its hat on in denying that federal jurisdiction under Subtitle A only applies to persons domiciled in the federal zone. Remember, however, that the Supreme Court has never ruled in this manner on such issues or it would have been cited as precedent in this case, and that even the IRS’ own Internal Revenue Manual in section 4.10.7.2.9.8 says that cases below the Supreme Court such as the one above do not apply generally to all taxpayers, but only to the “single taxpayer” litigating the case.

Internal Revenue Manual (I.R.M.), Section 4.10.7.2.9.8 (05/14/99): Importance of Court Decisions

1. “Decisions made at various levels of the court system are considered to be interpretations of tax laws and may be used by either examiners or taxpayers to support a position.

2. Certain court cases lend more weight to a position than others. A case decided by the U.S. Supreme Court becomes the law of the land and takes precedence over decisions of lower courts. The Internal Revenue Service must follow Supreme Court decisions. For examiners, Supreme Court decisions have the same weight as the Code.

3. Decisions made by lower courts, such as Tax Court, District Courts, or Claims Court, are binding on the Service only for the particular taxpayer and the years litigated. Adverse decisions of lower courts do not require the Service to alter its position for other taxpayers.”

Therefore, the above case, at least in the case of Subtitle A income taxes, cannot and should not be cited as a precedent by the Department of Justice. They did it anyway in the case of the DOJTDCTM because it benefits them financially, even though the case appears to be a void judgment because of its lack of specificity and lack of any evidence of jurisdiction identified by the judge in the ruling.

Another person, Bernard Sussman, also correctly argues that the federal government’s jurisdiction is not limited to the federal zone. You can read his arguments and our response to them below:

5.3 Know Your Proper Income Tax Filing Status!

"If the Lord had meant us to pay income taxes, he’d have made us smart enough to prepare the return.”
[Kirk Kirkpatrick]

"People who complain about taxes can be divided into two classes: men and women.”
[Unknown]

Every successful battle begins with studying your enemy and yourself. We started this chapter off by showing you the limits on federal authority right from the Constitution itself. This is not enough. Before you even think about taking on a brutal and dishonest opponent, you must also know where you stand in relation to him. That relationship is described by your citizenship and filing status so you know what legal position you are fighting from in relation to your enemy. Sun Tzu, a Chinese contemporary of Confucius and author of The Art of War, wrote:

"Know your enemy, win some of your battles...know yourself, win some of your battles...know your enemy and know yourself, win all of your battles”.
[Sun Tzu]

We already know that your goal is to be a sovereign, who isn’t the proper subject of any law. But do you know what status that is in the Internal Revenue Code and what forms, if any, a sovereign would file to prove he is a sovereign? What is your filing status as a sovereign? That, it turns out, is a result of your citizenship status. We covered the citizenship subject in great detail in Chapter 4 of this book and before you read this section, if you haven’t already, you might want to read Chapter 4 again and especially section 4.11 and its subsections. Below is a table summarizing what we learned from those sections showing the relationship between your “citizenship status” under Title 8 of the U.S. Code and your “tax status” under Title 26 of the U.S. Code.

In this section, we’ll show you that you have been filing your taxes incorrectly all these years, and that you really needed to be using the IRS Form 2555 AND the IRS Form 1040, instead of the form 1040 ONLY if you are claiming to be a “U.S. citizen”, which we assert later in this chapter is a very bad idea. This surprises many people, no doubt, to find that they have been filing incorrectly for so long and yet the IRS hasn’t corrected them in all these years. Why? Because you will pay considerably less taxes if you file in a way that reflects your proper status and the IRS wants your money so it conveniently looks the other way!

We start this subsection off with the notion of “the matrix”, which the Bible describes as the Beast. Anyone who has seen the movie called The Matrix will understand what we mean when we say that having a Socialist Security Number is the umbilical, or “the Mark of the Beast” described in Revelation 13:16-18 that connects the back of our head into “the matrix” and makes us into slaves and drones of the socialist state and host organisms for the parasite called the U.S. Government. That’s why we tell people over and over throughout this book to do everything they can to get rid of the number and avoid using it. Another kind of “matrix” to consider is the one below that defines when we are connected, or subservient to this “matrix” or biblical beast described above through slavery to the income tax. We want to give you plenty of ways to look at this so you understand completely what your obligations are relative to federal taxes:

NOTES:

1. For all the Subtitle A income taxes above, the tax is imposed in 26 U.S.C. §1(1)(1) and 26 C.F.R. §1.1-1(a)(1). It is imposed ONLY on STATUTORY U.S. citizens “resident” abroad and on “nonresident aliens” with income described in 26 U.S.C. §871(b) or 26 U.S.C. §877(b) (Expatriation to avoid tax). It is NOT imposed on nonresident aliens who do not hold public office or who do not have income associated with a “trade or business” in the federal United States, which is the condition that describes most Americans. It is also not imposed upon state citizens.

2. For all the taxes above, liability for tax is created by 26 C.F.R. §1.1-1(b), which is an “illegal regulation” as we describe in section 5.6.1. This regulation is illegal because it exceeds that scope of the statute that it implements found in 26 U.S.C. §1.1.
To conclude this section, below is a graphical diagram that shows all the classifications of alien and citizenship status and the associated tax filing status.
5.3.1 “Taxpayer” v. “Nontaxpayer”: Which One are You?

"The taxpayer-- that's someone who works for the federal government but doesn't have to take the civil service examination."

[President Ronald W. Reagan]

The word “taxpayer” is defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(14) and 26 U.S.C. §1313 as someone who is “liable for” and “subject to” the income tax in Internal Revenue Code Subtitle A.

The “person” they are referring to above is further characterized as a STATUTORY “citizen of the United States” or STATUTORY “resident of the United States” (alien). The tax is not on nonresident aliens, but on their INCOME, therefore they cannot lawfully be “taxpayers”:

Thus, the Court has frequently held that domicile or residence, more substantial than mere presence in transit or sojourn, is an adequate basis for taxation, including income, property, and death taxes. Since the Fourteenth Amendment makes one a citizen of the state wherein he resides, the fact of residence creates universally reciprocal duties of protection by the state and of allegiance and support by the citizen. The latter obviously includes a duty to pay taxes, and their nature and measure is largely a political matter. Of course, the situs of property may tax it regardless of the citizenship, domicile, or residence of the owner, the most obvious illustration being a tax on realty laid by the state in which the realty is located.”

[Miller Brothers Co. v. Maryland, 347 U.S. 340 (1954)]

“domicile. A person’s legal home. That place where a man has his true, fixed, and permanent home and principal establishment, and to which whenever he is absent he has the intention of returning. Smith v. Smith, 206 Pa.Super. 310, 213 A.2d. 94. Generally, physical presence within a state and the intention to make it one’s home are the requisites of establishing a “domicile” therein. The permanent residence of a person or the place to which he intends to return even though he may actually reside elsewhere. A person may have more than one residence but only one domicile. The legal domicile of a person is important since it, rather than the actual residence, often controls the jurisdiction of the taxing authorities and determines where a person may exercise the privilege of voting and other legal rights and privileges.”

Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

Those who don’t want to pay the tax or be “taxpayers” simply don’t partake of the government protection franchise and instead declare themselves as “non-resident non-persons” with no “residence” or “permanent address” within the jurisdiction of the taxing authority on every government form they fill out. That is why “non-resident non-persons” cannot be “taxpayers” unless and until they lawfully occupy a public office. For further details, see:

Why Domicile and Becoming a “Taxpayer” Require Your Consent, Form #05.002
http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

The IRS refers to everyone as “taxpayers” because that is what they want everyone to be. Here is the way one of our readers describes how he reacts to being habitually called “taxpayer” by the IRS:

I refuse to allow any IRS or State revenue officer to call me or any client a “taxpayer”. Just because I may look like one or have the attributes of one does not necessarily make me one. To one IRS lady, and I have no reason to doubt that she fits this category, I use the following example. “Miss you have all of the equipment to be a whore, but that does not make you one by presumption.” Until it is proven by a preponderance of evidence I must assume you are a lady and you will be treated as such. Please have the same respect for me, and don’t slander my reputation and defame my character by calling me a whore for the government, which is what a “taxpayer” is.

[Eugene Pringle]

Funny! But guess what? This is not a new idea. We refer you to the Bible book of Revelation, Chapter 17, which describes precisely who this whore or harlot is: Babylon the Great! Check out that chapter, keeping in mind that “Babylon the Great” is symbolic of the city full of all the ignorant and idolatrous people who have unwittingly made themselves into government whores by becoming surety for government debts in the pursuit of taxable government privileges and benefits they didn’t need to begin with. The Bible describes these harlots and adulterers below:

“Adulterers and adulteresses! Do you not know that friendship [and citizenship] with the world [and the governments/states of the world] is enmity with God? Whoever therefore wants to be a friend of the world makes himself an enemy of God.”

[James 4:4, Bible, NKJV]

“When thou sawest a thief [the IRS] then thou consentedst with him, and hast been partaker with adulterers.”

[Ps 50:18]

“Where do wars and fights [and tyranny and oppression] come from among you? Do they not come from your desires for pleasure [pursuit of government “privileges”] that war in your members?....You ask [from your government and its THIEF the IRS] and do not receive, because you ask amiss...Adulterers and adulteresses [and HARLOTS]! Do you not know that friendship with the world is enmity with God? Whoever therefore wants to be a friend of the world makes himself an enemy of God.”

[James 4:3-4, Bible, NKJV]

These “taxpayer” and citizen government idolaters have made government their new pagan god (neo-god), their friend, and their source of false man-made security. That is what the “Security” means in “Social Security”. The bible mentions that there is something “mysterious” about “Babylon the Great Harlot”:

“And on her forehead a name was written: MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS AND OF THE ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH.”

[Rev. 17:5, Bible, NKJV]

GOVERNMENT ANNOUNCEMENT April 15, 20__

[Washington, D.C.]

The federal government announced today that it is changing its emblem from an eagle to a condom, because that more clearly reflects its political stance. A condom stands up to inflation, halts production, destroys the next generation, protects a bunch of pricks, and gives you a sense of security while it’s actually screwing you.

The mystery about this harlot/adulterous woman described in Rev. 17:5 is symbolic of the ignorance and apathy that these people have about the law and their government. For a fascinating read into this subject, we refer you to the free book on the internet below referred to us by one of our readers:

The Great IRS Hoax: Why We Don’t Owe Income Tax, version 4.54

TOP SECRET: For Official Treasury/IRS Use Only (FOUO)

Copyright Family Guardian Fellowship http://fam guardian.org/
The IRS DOES NOT have the authority conferred by law under Internal Revenue Code. Subtitle A to bestow the status of “taxpayer” on any natural person who doesn’t first volunteer for that “distinctive” title. Below are some facts confirming this:

1. There is no statute making anyone liable for the income tax. Therefore, the only way you can become subject is by volunteering. Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A is therefore “private law” and “special law” that only applies to those who individually consent by connecting their earnings to a “trade or business”, which is a “public office” in the United States government. These people are referred to in the Treasury Regulations as “effectively connected with a trade or business”. BEFORE they consent, they are called "nontaxpayers". AFTER they consent, they are called "taxpayers".

2. The federal courts agree that the IRS cannot involuntarily make you a “taxpayer” when they said the following:

   "To the extent that regulations implement the statute, they have the force and effect of law: The regulation implements the statute and cannot vitiate or change the statute." [Spreckles v. C.I.R., 119 F.2d, 667]

   "...liability for taxation must clearly appear from statute imposing tax]."
   [Higley v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 69 F.2d. 160 (1934)]

   "While Congress might have the power to place such a personal liability upon trust beneficiaries who did not renounce the trust, yet it would require clear expression of such intent, and it cannot be spelled out from language (as that here) which can be given an entirely natural and useful meaning and application excluding such intent."
   [Higley v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 69 F.2d. 160 (1934)]

   "A tax is a legal imposition, exclusively of statutory origin (37 Cyc. 724, 725), and, naturally, liability to taxation must be read in statute, or it does not exist."
   [Bente v. Bugbee, 137 A. 552, 103 N.J. Law. 608 (1927)]

   "...the taxpayer must be liable for the tax. Tax liability is a condition precedent to the demand. Merely demanding payment, even repeatedly, does not cause liability."
   [Terry v. Bothke, 713 F.2d. 1405, at 1414 (1983)]

If you want to know more about this subject see:

1. Section 5.6.1 later, which covers the subject of no liability in excruciating detail.

2. The following link is the online version of the above section: http://famguardian.org/Subjects/Taxes/Articles/NoStatuteLiable.htm

3. Sections 5.4.6 through 5.4.6.6 later prove that the Internal Revenue Code is “private law” and a private contract/agreement. Those who have consented are called “taxpayers” and those who haven’t are called “nontaxpayers”.

2. The federal courts agree that the IRS cannot involuntarily make you a “taxpayer” when they said the following:

   "A reasonable construction of the taxing statutes does not include vesting any tax official with absolute power of assessment against individuals not specified in the statutes as a person liable for the tax without an opportunity for judicial review of this status before the appellation of 'taxpayer' is bestowed upon them and their property is seized..."
   [Botta v. Scanlon, 288 F.2d. 504, 508 (1961)]

3. IRS has no statutory authority to convert employment withholding taxes under I.R.C., Subtitle C into “income taxes” under I.R.C., Subtitle A. We show later in section 5.6.8 that employment withholding taxes deducted under the authority of Subtitle C of the Internal Revenue Code using a W-4 voluntary withholding agreement and that the IRS classifies them in IRS Document 6209 as “Tax Class 5”, which is “Estate and gift taxes”. Therefore, they are gifts to the U.S. government, not taxes that may not be enforced. We also show in section 5.6.8 that taxes paid under the authority of Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A are classified as Tax Class 2, “Individual Income Tax”. We also exhaustively prove with evidence later in section 5.6.16 that IRS has no statutory or regulatory authority to convert what essentially amounts to a voluntary “gift” paid through withholding to a “tax”. Only you can do that by assessing yourself. That is why the 1040 form requires that you attach the information returns to it, such as the W-2: So that the gift and the tax are reconciled and so that the accuracy of the W-2, which is unsigned hearsay evidence, is guaranteed by the penalty of perjury signature on the 1040 form itself.
The consequence of the IRS not having any lawful authority to make anyone into a “taxpayer” is that they cannot do a lawful Substitute For Return (SFR) or penalty assessment under I.R.C., Subtitle A, as you will learn later. This is also confirmed by the following document:

Why the Government Can’t Lawfully Assess Human Beings With an Income Tax Liability Without Their Consent, Form #05.011

http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

If you have been the victim of an involuntary IRS assessment and do a Freedom Of Information Act (FOIA) request for assessment documents as we have, and you examine all of the documents returned, you will not see even one document signed by any IRS employee that purports to be an assessment and which has your name on it as the only subject of the assessment. The reason they won’t sign the assessment document, such as the 23C or the IRS RACS 006 Report, under penalty of perjury is that no one is STUPID enough to accept legal liability for violating the Constitution and the rights of those they have done wrongful assessments against. The IRS knows these people are involved in wrongdoing, which is why they assign “pseudo names” (false names) to their employees: To protect them from lawsuits against them for their habitual violation of the law. The documents you will get back from the IRS in response to your FOIA include the following forms, none of which are signed by the IRS employee:

1. IRS Form 886-A: Explanation of Terms
2. IRS Form 1040: Substitute For Return (SFR)
3. IRS Form 3198: Special Handling Notice
4. IRS Form 4549: Income Tax Examination Changes
5. IRS Form 4700: Examination Work Papers
6. IRS Form 5344: Examination Closing Record
7. IRS Form 5546: Examination Return Charge-Out
8. IRS Form 5564: Notice of Deficiency Waiver
9. IRS Form 5600: Statutory Notice Worksheet
10. IRS Form 12616: Correspondence Examination History Sheet
11. IRS Form 13496: IRC Section 6020(b) Certification

If you want to look at samples of the above forms, see section 6 of the link below, under the column "Examples":

http://famguardian.org/TaxFreedom/Forms/IRS/IRSFormsPubs.htm

We have looked at hundreds of these assessment documents and every one of them is required by 26 U.S.C. §6065 to be signed under penalty of perjury by the IRS employee who prepared them but none are. As a matter of fact, the examination documents prepared by the IRS Examination Branch to do the illegal Substitute for Returns (involuntary assessments) purport to be a “proposal” rather than an involuntary assessment, have no signature of an IRS employee, and the only signature is from the “taxpayer”, who must consent to the assessment in order to make it lawful. See, for instance, IRS Forms 4549 and 5564. What they do is procure the consent invisibly using a commercial default process by ignoring your responsive correspondence, and therefore “assume” that you consented. This, ladies and gentlemen, is constructive FRAUD, not justice. It is THEFT! The Form 12616 above is the vehicle by which they show that the “taxpayer” consented to the involuntary assessment, because they can’t do ANYTHING without his consent.

Furthermore, 28 U.S.C. §2201 also removes the authority of federal courts to declare the status of “taxpayer” on a sovereign American also!

TITLE 28 - JUDICIA E Y JUDICIAL PROCEDURE

PART VI - PARTICULAR PROCEEDINGS

CHAPTER 151 - DECLARATORY JUDGMENTS

Sec. 2201. Creation of remedy

(a) In a case of actual controversy within its jurisdiction, except with respect to Federal taxes other than actions brought under section 7428 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, a proceeding under section 505 or 1146 of title 11, or in any civil action involving an antidumping or countervailing duty proceeding regarding a class or kind of merchandise of a free trade area country (as defined in section 516A(f)(10) of the Tariff Act of 1930), as determined by the administering authority, any court of the United States, upon the filing of an
The federal courts themselves agree that they do not have the jurisdiction to bestow the status of “taxpayer” upon someone who is a “nontaxpayer”:

"And by statutory definition the term “taxpayer” includes any person, trust or estate subject to a tax imposed by the revenue act. . .Since the statutory definition of taxpayer is exclusive, the federal [and state] courts do not have the power to create nonstatutory taxpayers for the purpose of applying the provisions of the Revenue Acts..."

[C.I.R. v. Trustees of L. Inv. Ass’n., 100 F.2d. 18 (1939)]

26 U.S.C. §1461 is the only statute within the Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A which creates an explicit liability or “legal duty”. That duty is enforceable only against those subject to the I.R.C., who are “taxpayers” with “gross income” above the exemption amount identified in 26 U.S.C. §6012. All amounts reported by third parties on Information Returns, such as the W-2, 1042-S, 1098, and 1099, document receipt of “trade or business” earnings. All “trade or business” earnings, as defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(26), are classified as “gross income”. A “non-resident alien non-person” who has these information returns filed against him or her becomes his or her own “withholding agent”, and must reconcile their account with the federal government annually by filing a tax return. This is a requirement of all those who are engaged in a “public office”, which is a type of business partnership with the federal government. That business relationship is created through the operation of private contract and private law between you, the natural human, and the federal government. The method of consenting to that contract is any one of the following means:

1. Assessing ourselves with a liability shown on a tax return.
2. Voluntarily signing an IRS Form W-4, which is identified in the regulations as an “agreement” to include all earnings in the context of that agreement as “gross income” on a 1040 tax return. See 26 C.F.R. §31.3402(p)-1(a). For a person who is not a “public official” or engaged in a “public office”, the signing of the W-4 essentially amounts to an agreement to procure “social services” and “social insurance”. You must bribe the Beast with over half of your earnings in order to convince it to take care of you in your old age.
3. Completing, signing, and submitting an IRS Forms 1040 or 1040NR and indicating a nonzero amount of “gross income”. Nearly all “gross income” and all information returns is connected with an excise taxable activity called a “trade or business” pursuant to 26 U.S.C. §871(b) and 26 U.S.C. §6041, which activity then makes you into a “resident”. See older versions of 26 C.F.R. §301.7701-5: http://famguardian.org/TaxFreedom/CitesByTopic/Resident-26cfr301.7701-5.pdf
4. Filing information returns on ourself or not rebutting information returns improperly filed against us, such as the Forms W-2, 1042-S, 1098, and 1099. Pursuant to 26 U.S.C. §6041(a), all of these federal forms associate all funds documented on them with the taxable activity called a “trade or business”. If you are not a federal “employee” or a “public officer”, then you can’t lawfully earn “trade or business” income. See the following for details:

5. Allowing Currency Transaction Reports (CTR’s), IRS Form 8300, to be filed against us when we withdraw 10,000 or more in cash from a financial institution. The statutes at 31 U.S.C. §5331 and the regulation at 31 C.F.R. §103.30(d)(2) only require these reports to be filed in connection with a “trade or business”, and this “trade or business” is the same “trade or business” referenced in the Internal Revenue Code at 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(26) and 26 U.S.C. §162. If you are not a “public official” or if you do not consent to be treated as one in order to procure “social insurance”, then banks and financial institutions are violating the law to file these forms against you. See:

6. Completing and submitting the Social Security Trust document, which is the SSA Form SS-5. This is an agreement that imposes the “duty” or “fiduciary duty” upon the natural person and makes him into a “trustee” and an officer of a federal corporation called the “United States”. The definition of “person” for the purposes of the criminal provisions of the Internal Revenue Code, codified in 26 U.S.C. §7343, incidentally is EXACTLY the same as the above. Therefore, all tax crimes require that the violator must be acting in a fiduciary capacity as a Trustee of some kind or another, whether it be as an Executor over the estate of a deceased “taxpayer”, or over the Social Security Trust maintained for the benefit of a living trustee/employee of the federal corporation called the “United States Government”. Unless and until we do any of the above, voluntarily, and absent duress, deceit silence or fraud by the government, our proper title is “nontaxpayer”. The foundation of American Jurisprudence is the presumption that we are “innocent until proven guilty”, which means that we are a “nontaxpayer” until the government proves with court-admissible evidence signed under penalty of perjury that we are a “taxpayer” who is participating in government franchises that are subject to the excise tax upon a “trade or business” which is described in I.R.C., Subtitle A. For cases dealing with the term “nontaxpayer” see: Long v. Rasmussen, 281 F. 236, 238 (1922); Rothensis v. Ullman, 110 F.2d. 590(1940); Raffaele v. Granger, 196 F.2d. 620 (1952); Bullock v. Latham, 306 F.2d. 45 (1962); Economy Plumbing & Heating v. United States, 470 F.2d. 585 (1972); and South Carolina v. Regan, 465 U.S. 367 (1984).

“[The revenue laws are a code or system in regulation of tax assessment and collection. They relate to taxpayers, and not to nontaxpayers. The latter are without their scope. No procedure is prescribed for nontaxpayers, and no attempt is made to annul any of their rights and remedies in due course of law. With them Congress does not assume to deal, and they are neither of the subject nor of the object of the revenue laws...”

[Long v. Rasmussen, 281 F. 236, 238 (1922)]

Since the above ruling, Congress has added new provisions to the I.R.C. which obtusely mention “nontaxpayers”, but not by name, because they don’t want people to have a name to describe their proper status. The new provision is found in 926 U.S.C. §7426, and in that provision of the I.R.C., “nontaxpayers” are referred to as “Persons other than taxpayers”. So far as we know, this is the ONLY provision within the I.R.C. that provides any remedy or standing to a “nontaxpayer”. The behavior of the IRS confirms the above conclusions. See the following IRS internal memo proving that a return that is signed under penalty of perjury and saying “not liable” or words to that effect is treated as a non-return:

Look what the above internal top secret IRS memo says (are they trying to hide something?.. cover-up and obstruction of justice!). Pay particular attention to the use of the word “taxpayer” in this excerpt, by the way, which doesn’t include most people:

“A taxpayer can also negate the penalties of perjury statement with an addition. In Schmitt v. U.S., 140 B.R. 571 (Bank W.D. Okl. 1992), the taxpayers filed a return with the following statement at the end of the penalties of perjury statement, “SIGNED UNDER DURESS, SEE STATEMENT ATTACHED.” In the addition, the taxpayers denied liability for tax on wages. The Service argued that the statement, added to the “return”, qualified the penalties of perjury statement, thus making the penalties of perjury statement ineffective and the return a nullity. Id. at 572.

In agreeing with the Service, the court pointed out that the voluntary nature of our tax system requires the Service to rely on a taxpayer’s self-assessment and on a taxpayer’s assurance that the figures supplied are true to the best of his or her knowledge. Id. Accordingly, the penalties of perjury statement has important significance in our tax system. The statement connects the taxpayer’s attestation of tax liability (by the signing of the statement) with the Service’s statutory ability to summarily assess the tax.
The reason is clear: If you are a “nontaxpayer” who is “not liable”, then you essentially are outside their jurisdiction and can’t even ask for a refund of the money you paid in. All of your property is consequently classified as a “foreign estate”, as defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(31):

If you indeed are a “nontaxpayer” and act like one, the IRS will pretend like you don’t even exist, that is, until in their ignorance and greed they try years later to go after you wrongfully and unlawfully for willful failure to file, notice of deficiency, or some other contrived nonsense to terrorize you into paying and filing again. That’s how they make “nontaxpayers” “volunteer” into becoming “taxpayers”: with terrorism and treason against the rights of sovereign Americans, starting with “mailing threatening, false, and harassing communications” in violation of 18 U.S.C. §876. Lawyer hypocrites! Jesus was right!

“Woe to you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! For you pay tithe of mint and anise and cummin, and have neglected the weightier matters of the law: justice and mercy and faith. These you ought to have done, without leaving the others undone.”

[Matt. 23:23, Bible]

Now that we understand the difference between “taxpayer” and a “nontaxpayer”, allow us to make a very critical distinction that is the Achilles Heel of the IRS fraud. Ponder for a moment in your mind the following very insightful question:

“Is a person in law always either a ‘taxpayer’ or a ‘nontaxpayer’ as a whole? Can a person simultaneously be BOTH?”

Once you understand the answer to this crucial question, you will understand how to get your money back in an IRS refund claim without litigating! The answer, by the way, is YES! Let us now explain why this is the case.

We said above that if you are a “nontaxpayer”, the IRS will basically try to completely ignore your refund claim and you are lucky if they even respond. At worst, they will illegally try to penalize you and at best, they will ignore you. We must remember, however, that it is “taxable income” that makes you a “taxpayer”. “Taxable income” is “gross income” minus “deductions”, as described in 26 U.S.C. §63(a). Therefore, we must earn “gross income” as legally defined in order to have “taxable income”. One cannot earn “gross income” unless they fit into one of the following categories:

1. Domestic taxable activities: Activities within the “United States”, which is defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) and (a)(10) as the District of Columbia.

1.1. Federal “Employees”, “Agencies, and “Public officers” – meaning those who are federal “public officers”, federal “employees”, and elected officials of the national government. This is one reason why 26 U.S.C. §6331(a) lists... only federal officers, federal employees, federal instrumentalities, and elected officials as ones who can be served with a levy upon their compensation, which is actually a payment from the federal government.

1.2. Federal benefit recipients. These people are receiving “social insurance” payments such as Medicare, Social Security, or Unemployment. These benefits are described as “gross income” in 26 U.S.C. §871(a)(3). When they signed up for these programs, they became “trustees,” “employees”, and instrumentalities of the U.S. government. They are described as “federal personnel” in the Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. §552a(a)(13). Neither the Constitution nor the Social Security Act authorize these benefits to be offered to anyone domiciled outside of federal territories and possessions. For details on this scam, see:

Resignation of Compelled Social Security Trustee, Family Guardian Fellowship

1.3. Those who operate in a representative capacity in behalf of the federal government via contract. This includes those who have a valid Taxpayer Identification Number, which constitutes a constructive trust contract with the federal government and use that federal property [number] as per 20 C.F.R. §422.103(d). They are identified as federal trustees and/or federal employees as referenced in 20 C.F.R. “Employee Benefits”. For details on this scam, see:

Resignation of Compelled Social Security Trustee, Family Guardian Fellowship

2. Foreign taxable activities: Activities in the states of the Union or abroad.

2.1. Domiciliaries of the federal zone abroad and in a foreign country pursuant to 26 U.S.C. §911 who are engaged in a “trade or business”.
2.1.1. Statutory “U.S. citizens” - those are federal statutory creations of Congress and defined specifically at 8 U.S.C. §1401 to be those who were born in a U.S. territory or possession AND who have a legal domicile there.
2.1.2. Statutory “Residents” (aliens). These are foreign nationals who have a legal domicile within the District of Columbia or a federal territory or possession. They are defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(b)(1)(A) and 8 U.S.C. §1101(a)(2). If you would like to know more about why the above are the only foreign subjects of taxation, see:

Why Domicile and Becoming a “Taxpayer” Require Your Consent, Form #05.002
http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

2.2. States of the Union. Neither the IRS nor the Social Security Administration may lawfully operate outside of the federal zone. See:
2.2.1. 4 U.S.C. §72 limits all “public offices” to the District of Columbia. It says that the “public offices” that are the subject of the tax upon a “trade or business” must be exercised ONLY in the District of Columbia and not elsewhere, except as expressly provided by law.
2.2.2. 26 U.S.C. §7601 limits IRS enforcement to internal revenue districts. The President is authorized to establish internal revenue districts pursuant to 26 U.S.C. §7621, but he delegated that authority to the Secretary of the Treasury pursuant to Executive Order 10289. Treasury Order 150-02, signed by the Secretary of the Treasury, says that the only remaining internal revenue district is in the District of Columbia. It eliminated all the other internal revenue districts.
2.2.3. 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) and (a)(10) define the term “United States” as the District of Columbia. Nowhere anyplace else is the tax described in Subtitle A expanded to include anyplace BUT the “United States”.
2.2.4. The U.S. Supreme Court said Congress enjoys NO LEGISLATIVE JURISDICTION within states of the Union and the Internal Revenue Code is “legislation.”

“it is no longer open to question that the general government, unlike the states, Hammer v. Dagenhart, 247 U.S. 251, 275, 38 S.Ct. 529, 3 A.L.R. 649, Ann.Cas.1918E 724, possesses no inherent power in respect of the internal affairs of the states; and emphatically not with regard to legislation.”
[Carter v. Carter Coal Co., 298 U.S. 238, 56 S.Ct. 855 (1936)]

“the difficulties arising out of our dual form of government and the opportunities for differing opinions concerning the relative rights of state and national governments are many, but for a very long time this court has steadfastly adhered to the doctrine that the taxing power of Congress does not extend to the states or their political subdivisions. The same basic reasoning which leads to that conclusion, we think, requires like limitation upon the power which springs from the bankruptcy clause. United States v. Butler, supra.”
[Ashton v. Cameron County Water Improvement District No. 1, 298 U.S. 513, 56 S.Ct. 892 (1936)]

2.2.5. The U.S. Supreme Court said Congress Cannot establish a “trade or business” in a state and tax it. A “trade or business” is the main subject of Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A. See the following court cite:
Can a person be simultaneously BOTH a 'taxpayer' and a 'nontaxpayer'?

Based on options above, most people do not have “gross income” as legally defined, and they are actually deceiving the government if they put anything but zero on their income tax return. Because none of the earnings of the typical person who is employed in the private sector can legally be classified as either “income” or “gross income”, what you put down for “gross income” on your tax return boils down to the question of:

“How much of my receipts do I want to ‘volunteer’ or ‘elect’ or ‘choose’ to call ‘income’ or ‘gross income’ for the purposes of federal taxes?”

How you choose to answer that question then determines the net “donation” (not “tax”, but “donation”) you are making to the federal government based on the tax rate schedule that your fictitious and fabricated “gross income” falls into. As we said at the beginning of this chapter in section 5.1.8, the income tax is “voluntary” and we really meant it! Not only that, but the U.S. Supreme Court agrees with us!

“Our system of taxation is based upon voluntary assessment and payment, not distraint.”

Returning to our original question, then, “Can a person be simultaneously BOTH a ‘taxpayer’ and a ‘nontaxpayer’?”, the answer is YES. Why? Because so long as we as biological people aren’t federal “public officers”, any amount we put down for “gross income” on our tax return is a voluntary choice and not REAL “gross income” as legally defined. That amount, and ONLY that amount, which we volunteer to define as “gross income” on our tax return makes us into a “taxpayer”, but only for the specific sources of revenue we voluntarily identified as “gross income”! All other monies that we earned are, by definition and implication, not taxable and not “gross income”, which means that for those “sources” of revenue that are not “gross income”, we are a “nontaxpayer” and NOT a “taxpayer”.

So when someone asks you if you are a “taxpayer”, both the question and your answer must be put in the context of a specific source of income. You should respond by first asking: “for which revenue source?” The answer can seldom be a general “yes” or “no” for ALL RECEIPTS. Consequently, if we put down one cent for “gross income” on our tax return, then ONLY for that source of revenue do we become “taxpayers”. All other sources of revenue for us are, by implication, NOT either “gross income” or “taxable income”, which means that for those revenues and receipts, we are a “nontaxpayer”. Furthermore, once we make the determination of “gross income” and self-assessment on the tax return that only we can do on ourselves, the IRS has NO AUTHORITY to make us into a “taxpayer” or assess us an involuntary liability associated with any receipts other than those that we specifically identify as “gross income”:

“Our tax system is based on individual self-assessment and voluntary compliance.”

[Mortimer Caplin, Internal Revenue Audit Manual (1975)]

Remember, the only amount we are responsible for paying is the amount we assess ourselves that appears on a tax return that ONLY WE FILL OUT. The Internal Revenue Manual (I.R.M.), Section 5.1.11.6.8 confirms that the IRS is NOT AUTHORIZED to do a Substitute For Return (SFR) on our behalf for the IRS Form 1040 or any of its derivatives (e.g. 1040X, 1040EZ, 1040NR, etc). Furthermore, 26 C.F.R. §1.6151-1 confirms that you are only responsible for paying the amount shown on a return (because it says “shall pay”).
26 U.S.C. §6020(b) does not authorize the IRS to do an assessment on you because only you (as the “sovereign”) can do an assessment on yourself for a voluntary donation program called the Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A. The only exception to this rule is under 26 U.S.C. §6014, where you can delegate to the IRS the authority to do a return on your behalf, which we don’t recommend. Are you beginning to see through the fog? It took us four years of diligent study to figure this scam out and we are trying to save you some time.

How do we apply this wonderful new discovery to the pursuit of an administrative refund of monies paid into the IRS using a request for refund? First of all, we already established earlier in this section that if you put zero on your return for “gross income”, the IRS will basically treat you as a “nontaxpayer” in entirety and either ignore you completely or try to penalize you illegaly as we indicated earlier in section 5.4.16. See the discussion of the IRS internal memo earlier in this section for details. But what if we put down one red cent as “gross income”, then we are “taxpayers” but at the same time the IRS is not authorized to assess us a greater liability. They will try to propose a corrected return amount and act like they have the authority to assess you a greater amount, but we know that they can’t. They may also threaten a penalty if you don’t go along with their proposed new assessment, but this is a fraud too because penalties imposed without a judicial trial are a Bill of Attainder that is prohibited by the Constitution. The way to prevent them scamming us when we use this technique to get our money back is to clarify on our administrative refund request the following facts, which completely ties their hands to do anything BUT refund all the money you paid in mistakenly or under duress. The below qualification that you can add to your refund request will completely tie the IRS’ hands and back them into a corner so that they have no choice but to give you a refund and not penalize you. It uses their own rules and guidance against them so they cannot ignore your filing but also can’t get any more money out of you than you volunteer to pay:

1. This return constitutes a “conditional self-assessment”. I am only indicating a nonzero “gross income” in order to procure a refund of all taxes paid over the period in question. I do not, in fact, make any “gross income” as legally defined but am electing to say that I have “gross income” in order to compel you to process my “return” and provide a refund of all taxes paid. In the past, I have filed “zero returns” and have found that they were ignored because I was not a “taxpayer” so that you had no jurisdiction to respond. Now, I am claiming that I have only one cent of “taxable income” and “gross income” so that you can no longer ignore my return or claim you have no jurisdiction.

2. In the event that the refund requested is not obtained, this conditional self-assessment and attached return is null and void in its entirety ab initio (from the beginning) because only a voluntarily executed return submitted absent duress or compulsion is valid and admissible as evidence according to the Supreme Court in Weeks v. United States, 232 U.S. 383 (1914). However, you should keep a copy of the return in your records as proof that I filed “something” so that the statute of limitations clock starts for all criminal and civil issues. The only thing that has to appear on the return is a signature under penalty of perjury, which it has, in order to be considered a valid filing according to the federal courts.

3. The attached tax return and any determinations by the IRS that are based on it is false, fraudulent, incorrect, and involuntarily submitted if anything on it is changed or altered in any way by either me or the IRS or if the IRS proposes or makes without my written, explicit consent, any change in the assessment appearing on the return or in their computer system. That means you can’t alter the IMF to be inconsistent with what appears on your return or alter the return itself.
That is why my return is submitted in pen. In effect, I am delegating VERY SPECIFIC authority to only process the return AS IS with NO CHANGES and no penalties or to withdraw the return from processing but not entry into my IRS administrative file.

4. The IRS does not have my permission or consent to do any of the following without my explicit written and notarized consent, and if it does, I withdraw my consent and my self-assessment and change the value of “gross income” on the return to ZERO.

4.1. Propose an amended assessment or execute a “Substitute For Return” (SFR).

4.2. Correct anything appearing on this return.

4.3. Enter anything appearing on this return into any kind of information system.

4.4. Share any of the information provided to any agency, person, government organization, or private party who is outside of the IRS and not directly involved in processing this request for refund.

5. I am not now and never have been an “employee” as defined or used in 26 U.S.C. §6331, 26 U.S.C. §3401(c), or 26 C.F.R. §31.3401(c)-1.

6. Any reports of “income” or “wages” provided to you by banks or employers on forms W-2 and 1099 and associated with the SSN attached to my name are hereby declared and presumed to be incorrect, fraudulent, and may not be relied upon as a basis for good faith belief, because they:

6.1. Are not signed

6.2. Are not submitted under penalty of perjury.

6.3. Are hearsay evidence.

6.4. Are only lawfully required in the case of “employees” under Subtitle C of the Internal Revenue Code, which I just declared in the previous item I am not.

6.5. Are a violation of the Privacy Act, because when private employers illegally volunteer to act as agents of the federal government under the color of law, they are also bound to comply with other laws relating to federal agencies, including the Privacy Act. They in effect become a voluntary federal agency under the color of law in processing federal forms. The Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. §552a says that agencies may not provide Privacy Act information to other federal agencies unless authorized by the employee and as required by law in the performance of their lawful functions. Because they are not located on federal property and federal criminal statutes under 18 U.S.C. and civil statutes under 26 U.S.C. do not apply outside of federal property, then they have no jurisdiction as federal agents or “federal police” to be involved in any kind of “police power” enforcement activity related to tax collection.

These financial forms therefore create false presumptions on your part about me that are completely incorrect, unauthorized by law, and which I never consented or authorized my bank voluntarily to provide to you or about me.

7. The number attached to my name which you call a Social Security Number, is NOT MY number. To be MY number, I have to request it and consent to using it. Since I didn’t apply for this number and my parents did without my consent, and since I use it under unlawful duress and compulsion from both government and financial institutions, then I cannot and should not be held responsible for using or correctly specifying that which is not “mine”. Do not attempt to refer to that number as “taxpayer identification number”, because it can only be so if I am a “taxpayer”, which I am not for all but one red (communist) cent of monies received which I have elected to call “gross income” for the purposes of obtaining a refund. Even that one cent isn’t really “gross income” but I’m electing to call it that so that you can’t ignore my return by calling me a “nontaxpayer” if I have zero for “gross income”.

8. Because I claim that all monies or revenues I earned other than the one cent appearing on my return are NOT “gross income”, then for those monies, I am classified as a “nontaxpayer” and therefore DO NOT have any kind of burden of proving that they are non-taxable under 26 U.S.C. §7491. Instead, the burden of proving that any monies listed on any W-2 or 1099 forms you may have received about me are “taxable income” or “gross income” rests squarely and exclusively on you and only you. Respect for my due process rights under the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments demands that you and not me satisfy the burden of proving that these monies qualify as “taxable income” or “gross income”. Any “presumptions” you might want to make to the contrary about this are hereby refuted and I demand evidence of both the law and the facts that validate any such false presumption.

9. Pursuant to Internal Revenue Manual (I.R.M.), Section 5.11.16.8, you are NOT AUTHORIZED to prepare an amended or Substitute For Return (SFR) changing the “gross income” defined on my form 1040NR. Such returns are only proposed assessment, but not actual legal assessments. The GAO audit of the IRS in November 1999 documented in GAO report number GAO/GGD-00-60R entitled “Substitute for Returns Program” available on the website at:

http://famguardian.org/PublishedAuthors/Govt/GAO/GAO-GGD-00-60R-SFR.pdf

quotes employees of the IRS officially stating, and I quote:
“In its response to this letter, IRS officials indicated that they do not generally prepare actual tax returns. Instead, they said IRS prepares substitute documents that propose assessments. Although IRS and legislation refer to this as the substitute for return program, these officials said that the document does not look like an actual tax return.” [Report, page 1]

10. Pursuant to 26 U.S.C. §6020(b), IRS is not authorized to do an assessment under Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A. Only I, as the sovereign, can do a self-assessment. No one but me can make me liable for the income tax.

11. There’s no liability statute anywhere in the Internal Revenue Code making me liable to pay any tax, and federal courts say one is required in order to collect a tax:

[Spreckles v. C.I.R., 119 F.2d, 667]

“. . . liability for taxation must clearly appear from statute imposing tax.”
[Higley v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 69 F.2d. 160 (1934)]

“While Congress might have the power to place such a personal liability upon trust beneficiaries who did not renounce the trust, yet it would require clear expression of such intent, and it cannot be spelled out from language (as that here) which can be given an entirely natural and useful meaning and application excluding such intent.”
[Higley v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 69 F.2d. 160 (1934)]

“A tax is a legal imposition, exclusively of statutory origin (37 Cyc. 724, 725), and, naturally, liability to taxation must be read in statute, or it does not exist.”
[Bente v. Bugbee, 137 A. 552, 103 N.J. Law. 608 (1927)]

“...the taxpayer must be liable for the tax. Tax liability is a condition precedent to the demand. Merely demanding payment, even repeatedly, does not cause liability.”
[Terry v. Bothke, 713 F.2d. 1405, at 1414 (1983)]

The implementing regulation at 26 C.F.R. §1.1-1 that uses the word “liable to” is null and void, because the Secretary of the Treasury is nowhere conferred the authority to legislate or make law or exceed the scope of the statute at 26 U.S.C. §1 that imposes the tax:

“When enacting §7206(1) Congress undoubtedly knew that the Secretary of the Treasury is empowered to prescribe all needful rules and regulations for the enforcement of the internal revenue laws, so long as they carry into effect the will of Congress as expressed by the statutes. Such regulations have the force of law. The Secretary, however, does not have the power to make law. Dixon v. United States, supra.”
[United States v. Levy, 533 F.2d. 969 (1976)]

Therefore, any amount I indicate on my tax return as a natural person as “gross income” is nothing more than a method of making a “donation” to the federal government and cannot be classified as a “tax” without committing fraud. As a matter of fact, it is FRAUD on the part of the IRS and the government to even call the “income tax” a “tax” in my case because nowhere in the Constitution is such “tax” even authorized. Without the specific authority of the Constitution, whatever you may do or propose to do under the “color of law”, including collecting a “voluntary” donation, is null, void, and unenforceable ab initio.

“We start with first principles. The Constitution creates a Federal Government of enumerated powers. See U.S. Const., Art. I, 8. As James Madison wrote, “[t]he powers delegated by the proposed Constitution to the federal government are few and defined. Those which are to remain in the State governments are numerous and indefinite.” The Federalist No. 45, pp. 292-293 (C. Rossiter ed. 1961). This constitutionally mandated division of authority "was adopted by the Framers to ensure protection of our fundamental liberties." Gregory v. Ashcroft, 501 U.S. 452, 458 (1991) (internal quotation marks omitted). “Just as the separation and independence of the coordinate branches of the Federal Government serves to prevent the accumulation of excessive power in any one branch, a healthy balance of power between the States and the Federal Government will reduce the risk of tyranny and abuse from either front.” Ibid."

Show me where your power to tax internal to the country and upon natural persons is specifically enumerated in the Constitution, because it didn’t come from the Constitution and it didn’t come from the Sixteenth Amendment,
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax 5-338

“...the 16th Amendment conferred no new power of taxation, but simply prohibited the previous complete and plenary power of income taxation possessed by Congress from the beginning from being taken out of the category of indirect taxation [on corporations and businesses rather than individuals] to which it inherently belonged, and being placed in the category of direct taxation.”
[Stanton v. Baltic Mining Co., 240 U.S. 103, 112-13, 36 S.Ct. 278 (1916)]

As a matter of fact, before the Sixteenth Amendment, the case of Pollock v. Farmers’ Loan and Trust Company, 157 U.S. 429, 158 U.S. 601 (1895) ruled that direct income taxes on biological people like me are unconstitutional, so what change in the constitution since that case in 1895 other than the Sixteenth Amendment modified that? As the Supreme Court said in Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137 (1803):

“The government of the United States has been emphatically termed a government of laws, and not of men. It will certainly cease to deserve that high appellation, if the laws furnish no remedy for the violation of a vested legal right.”
[Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137, 1 Cranch 137, 2 L.Ed. 60 (1803)]

So where is not only the Constitutional authority for what you are doing, but also please provide the following as evidence of your personal authority:
11.1. Your Delegation order.
11.3. The source of your authority to exercise the equivalent of “police powers” as a federal agency within the borders of the sovereign union states. The Supreme Court has ruled hundreds of times that the federal government has no police powers inside the borders of the states of the Union, and that is where I am writing to you from. The act of collecting taxes is a police power. Here is the definition of “police power” from Black’s Law Dictionary:

Police power. An authority conferred by the American constitutional system in the Tenth Amendment, U.S. Const., upon the individual states, and, in turn, delegated to local governments, through which they are enabled to establish a special department of police; adopt such laws and regulations as tend to prevent the commission of fraud and crime, and secure generally the comfort, safety, morals, health, and prosperity of the citizens by preserving the public order, preventing a conflict of rights in the common intercourse of the citizens, and insuring to each an uninterrupted enjoyment of all the privileges conferred upon him or her by the general laws.

The power of the State to place restraints on the personal freedom and property rights of persons for the protection of the public safety, health, and morals or the promotion of the public convenience and general prosperity. The police power is subject to limitations of the federal and State constitutions, and especially to the requirement of due process. Police power is the exercise of the sovereign right of a government to promote order, safety, security, health, morals and general welfare within constitutional limits and is an essential attribute of government. Marshall v. Kansas City, Mo., 355 S.W.2d. 877, 883.

12. It is the height of hypocrisy and arrogance on your part for you to be on the one hand effectively illegally soliciting donations and bribery from me under the “color of law” to then either attempt to penalize me illegally in the process or make demands about any aspect of the conditions under which I choose or volunteer to “donate”. I simply refuse to “donate” if you refuse to let me decide the terms under which I can or will donate. Compelled charity in that case would not be charity at all, but slavery disguised as charity. Slavery is illegal under the Thirteenth Amendment.
13. I am not now and never have been a “fiduciary” for any entity or “income” (taxable or not) in any way and if you have records indicting the contrary, then I:
13.1. Have enclosed an IRS Form 56 eliminating all such fiduciary relationships.
13.2. Demand that you send to me the authority by which such a relationship was established, because I never authorized it. Failure to provide evidence of the existence of fiduciary duty within 30 days shall constitute a nihil dicit judgment under common law of the fact that none exists.
14. I am not now and never have been a “transferee” for U.S. government property as defined in 26 U.S.C. §6901 and I demand any evidence you might have that might suggest the contrary. Failure to provide evidence of the existence of my status as a “transferee” within 30 days constitutes a nihil dicit judgment under common law establishing that I am not such a transferee.
15. The entirety of all my property and my estate is now classified and always has been classified as a “foreign estate” under 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(31) in regards to Title 26 of the Internal Revenue Code and I demand any evidence you have that might suggest the contrary. Failure to provide evidence suggesting that any part of my estate is not a foreign estate within 30 days constitutes a nihil dicit judgment under common law establishing that my estate is a foreign estate as legally defined.
16. The only reason you may have received any “taxes” that were either illegally withheld under Subtitle C or paid under Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A is because of the presence of duress and unlawful coercion against my property rights and my right to work by my employer, who I am very afraid to prosecute because I might lose my job. He nevertheless deserves to be behind bars for his misdeeds. You should interpret receipt of withholding monies by you from my employer as evidence of extortion, racketeering, and conspiracy against my property rights in violation of the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution. For you to condone or encourage or permit such criminal conduct on the part of private employers makes you an accessory to extortion and racketeering in violation of 18 U.S.C. §872 and 18 U.S.C. §225. Instead, as my fiduciary agent (see Public Law 96-303, Executive Order 12731, and 5 C.F.R. §2635.101), you are duty-bound to right this wrong and return this unlawfully extorted money back to me. If you don’t, I will prosecute you personally for:

16.2. RICO in violation of 18 U.S.C. §872
16.4. Bank robbery, if you attempt any Notice of Levies on me in violation of my Fifth Amendment rights.
16.6. Obstruction of justice, for not revealing the truth to me about this matter in violation of 18 U.S.C. Chapter 73.

17. This request for refund constitutes a Petition for Redress of Grievances protected under the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution. The right to petition for redress CANNOT be penalized, taxed, controlled, or regulated in any way by the government because it is a right and not a privilege. You cannot penalize me for exercising this constitutional right.

18. You are therefore not authorized by law to penalize me for submitting this “conditional self-assessment” because:

18.1. Of the constitutional constraint against Bills of Attainder found in Article 1, Section 9, Clause 3 of the U.S. Constitution
18.2. The definition of the term “person” in the context of the penalty regulations found in 26 C.F.R. §301.6671-1(b), which means only an employee of a corporation, and which I am not. If you choose to try to illegally impose any penalties on this conditional assessment, then I demand evidence that I am an “employee of a corporation” as defined there. If you penalize me in disregard of my due process rights under the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments, then you will be prosecuted under 26 U.S.C. §7433 for wrongful collection actions and also under the Constitution for violation of my inalienable Constitutional rights. I shall pursue a writ of mandamus to have my property returned and have you FIRED for malfeasance, negligence, and breach of fiduciary duty.
18.3. You would be compelling me under unlawful duress to commit fraud and make false statements on future filings in order to appease your illegal, irrational, and extortionary demands.
19. Don’t try to pull any scams with the word “includes” in your response because I know your game and it’s a violation of my due process rights to use ambiguous definitions or laws that are “void for vagueness”. See the following for hard proof of this:

http://famguardian.org/TaxFreedom/Forms/Discovery/Deposition/Section_09.htm

Either the law applies to me as a private individual or it doesn’t, and I’m not going to play word guessing games or engage in speculation about what either you or any federal judge who is both paid by the income tax and subservient to your organized extortion “thinks” the word “includes” implies. If the law doesn’t explicitly identify me as a person “liable” for the tax as a private person residing in a union state and outside of your territorial jurisdiction, then I’m not responsible to subject myself to your harassment or your illegal attempts at racketeering and extortion in order to get me to “volunteer” under duress to pay a “tax” that I don’t owe. Prove your authority using only the law or get out of my life, please.

20. The only difference between what you do and what the Mafia does is the authority of law, both in the Constitution and in the Statutes that implement the Constitution. If you can’t show me the law that makes me responsible in clear and unambiguous terms, or you know what the law says and refuse to explain or justify the good faith basis for your belief, then:

20.1. I have no choice but to assume that you are the Mafia, and your inaction and negligent administration of the tax code was what earned you that name.
20.2. I must conclude that you are a Communist as defined in 50 U.S.C. §841, because the U.S. Congress in that section defines a “communist” as follows:

“Unlike political parties, the Communist Party acknowledges no constitutional or statutory [lawful] limitations upon its conduct or upon that of its members. The Communist Party is relatively small numerically, and gives scant indication of capacity ever to attain its ends by lawful political means. The peril inherent in its operation...”
If you refuse to acknowledge or comply with or explain the lawful basis for your authority, then YOU ARE A COMMUNIST because you refuse to acknowledge or comply with lawful constraints upon your authority. So show me the law that makes me liable and acknowledge the laws that limit and define your power to me or YOU ARE A COMMUNIST as the United States Congress defines it.

21. Without the explicit authority of Constitutional, statutory, and regulatory law combined making me “liable” and evidence of that lawful authority provided to me in satisfaction of my due process rights under the Constitution, any amount of money that you might attempt to extort from me is paid in violation of the following laws, which in effect makes me into a co-conspirator with you in the following serious felonies. It also makes you into a money laundering operation for the extortion racket headed by our corrupted politicians:

21.1. 18 U.S.C. §201: Bribery of public officers and witnesses. I would be compelled to bribe my Congressman with monies extorted from me involuntarily.

21.2. 18 U.S.C. §597 Expenditures to Influence Voting. The monies I involuntarily paid to the federal government absent Constitutional authority could be used by politicians to influence voters to vote for them because of some socialist benefit they might receive.

22. I cannot in good conscience subsidize any government activity that is not explicitly authorized by both the Constitution and the Statutes that implement it and a clear and explicit showing by the moving party (that is you) that jurisdiction exists as required by the Administrative Procedures Act, 5 U.S.C. §556(d). To do otherwise or acquiesce otherwise would be to condone and subsidize criminal behavior by our government and by public servants in our government. Such acquiescence would also constitute Treason against the Constitution in violation of Article III of the Constitution. My military oath prevents me from any act of such Treason. You cannot penalize me for honoring my Constitutional oath.

23. Silence or lack of response to all the demands in this legal notice after a 30 day period shall constitute acquiescence to all of the determinations and facts herein contained and will result in a Notice of Default served upon you with a Proof of Mailing provided by a registered Notary Public.

24. Don’t bother quoting any federal court cases below the Supreme Court in response to this legal notice because your own Internal Revenue Manual (I.R.M.), Section 4.10.7.2.9.8 says that any ruling below the Supreme Court may not be applied to more than the single “taxpayer” in the case involved. If you can’t follow your own written internal procedures, then why on earth should I do what you expect me to or even listen to you?

25. Don’t bother asserting jurisdiction based on my citizenship status because I am a “national” under 8 U.S.C. §1101(a)(21) domiciled outside the federal zone and not exercising a public office. That makes me a “non-resident non-person” beyond the jurisdiction of Congress.

26. The closes status in your codes and regulations would be a “nonresident alien” not engaged in a “trade or business” (public office) for the purposes of the income tax pursuant to 26 C.F.R. §1.871-1(b)(1)(i), but I am not a statutory “nonresident alien” either because not engaged in a public office.

27. You may feel tempted to retaliate against this request for refund by overriding your IDRS system and manually entering bogus time-barred assessments against me that are back-dated. Be advised that I am very familiar with how to decode my non-sanitized IMF file and if you do so, you will be prosecuted for fraud, put behind bars, and fired from the service for your misconduct if I have anything to say about it.

28. What the Lord requires of you in this case is to DO JUSTICE and to LOVE MERCY. You can’t do either if you care more about stealing my money than you care about following the law and the Constitution, your own integrity, and about upholding the public trust and the Constitution that maintains the civil society that we both value. Both of these biblical requirements, JUSTICE and MERCY, can be satisfied by refunding to me the money that was illegally sent to you under duress by my criminal employer, who forced me to pay a tax I didn’t voluntarily want to pay as a condition of employment.

> "He has shown you, O man, what is good; And what does the Lord require of you But to do justly, To love mercy, And to walk humbly with your God?"

[Micah 6:8, Bible, NKJV]
29. If you respond to this request for refund by providing the amount of refund requested, then under a nihil dicit judgment, you have consented that all other revenues and receipts received by me are NOT TAXABLE and NOT GROSS INCOME, and you agree that:

29.1. My estate is indeed a foreign estate as defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(31).

29.2. The only amount of “gross income” I earn is the amount that I say I earn, because none of what I make is legally defined as “gross income”. Nowhere is any of the money that I earned as a private worker who is not a “public official” of the United States legally classified as “gross income”. I challenge you to provide any statute that concludes otherwise. If you look in the annotated U.S. Code, 1928 edition, under 26 U.S.C. §954, you can clearly see that the definition of “gross income” has always meant, in the case of natural persons, only public officers of the United States government. Obfuscation of the Internal Revenue Code by greedy lawyers in the Department of Treasury can’t change that fact either, because the Constitution hasn’t changed and it remains the definition and limitation of Congress’ power to tax.

29.3. You are forever estopped from proceeding against me in the future either administratively or in litigation for:

29.3.1. A return or civil suit for return of the monies you refunded to me.

29.3.2. Fraud or false statements in violation of 26 U.S.C. §7204.

29.3.3. Failure to file a tax return in violation of 26 U.S.C. §7203.

If you find yourself unwilling or unable to consent to the above determinations in conjunction with the requested refund, please find a supervisor or other authority who has such delegated authority and have him sign the letter you enclose with your refund as an affidavit so that we can settle this matter and bar or estop any future criminal or civil litigation related to it.

30. If you don’t comply by providing to me the refund I am demanding under the authority of law, then I will see you in court and will show you the same amount of lack of mercy that you earned by refusing to be civil or accountable or helpful to members of the public like me who you are there to SERVE as a public servant. I will personally make sure that you will reap exactly what you sow. Remember, “Service” is the most important part of “Internal Revenue Service”, and I am the customer you exist to serve. Making me your servant is the very definition of tyranny in a free country.

A word of caution is in order about the above approach. We warn you throughout this book never to claim to be a “taxpayer” because it prejudices your rights. The discussion above helps to show you how to avoid prejudicing your rights more than necessary when you claim to be a “taxpayer”. We warn you that it is at best a triage measure designed as an expedient to help those of you who have been wronged by your private employers wrongfully withholding taxes from your pay against your wishes. We are trying to show you how to undo that wrong and recover these illegally withheld taxes without prejudicing your rights and without the need to litigate. Please be cautious and make sure you have read at least the first five chapters of this book before you attempt to claim a refund using the above technique.

We wish to conclude this section by revealing some very important implications of being a "nontaxpayer" that we need to be very aware of in order to avoid jeopardizing our status and creating a false presumption that we are a “taxpayer”, which are summarized below:

1. You cannot quote any section of the Internal Revenue Code that requires you to be a "taxpayer" in order to claim its benefit. For instance, 26 U.S.C. §7433, which purports to allow anyone to file a suit against an IRS agent for wrongful collection actions, says the following:

   TITLE 26 > Subtitle F > CHAPTER 76 > Subchapter B > § 7433

   §7433. Civil damages for certain unauthorized collection actions

   (a) In general If, in connection with any collection of Federal tax with respect to a taxpayer, any officer or employee of the Internal Revenue Service recklessly or intentionally, or by reason of negligence, disregards any provision of this title, or any regulation promulgated under this title, such taxpayer may bring a civil action for damages against the United States in a district court of the United States. Except as provided in section 7432, such civil action shall be the exclusive remedy for recovering damages resulting from such actions.

   Note the phrase above “with respect to a taxpayer”, which are no accident. If you are a “nontaxpayer”, then you have no recourse under the above statute. HOWEVER, you still have recourse under the constitution for deprivation of property without due process of law under the Fifth Amendment. If you filed a lawsuit against an IRS agent, your remedy would then have come from citing the Constitution and possibly also cite the criminal code, which is also positive law, but NOT any part of the I.R.C.
2. You cannot call the Internal Revenue Code "law" or a "statute", but only a "code" or a "title". It can only be "law" if you are a "taxpayer". What makes anything "law" is your consent, according to the Declaration of Independence, and calling the IRC "law" is an admission that you consent to its provisions and are subject to them. See sections 5.4.1 through 5.4.6.6 later for details on this scam.

3. You cannot fill out and submit any form that can only be used by “taxpayers” nor can you sign any form that uses the word “taxpayer” to identify you. We have gone through and created substitute versions of most major IRS Forms to remove such false presumptions from the forms at:

http://famguardian.org/TaxFreedom/Forms/IRS/IRSFormsPubs.htm

4. When you get an IRS notice that either calls you a “taxpayer” or uses a “Taxpayer Identification Number” (TIN), then the notice is in error and you have a duty to bring this to the attention of the IRS. Only “taxpayers” can have a TIN. Below is an example form which satisfies this purpose:

Wrong Party Notice, Form #07.105
http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

5. You must include the following language in all your correspondence with the tax authorities in order to emphasize your status as a “nontaxpayer”:

I look forward to being corrected promptly in anything you believe is inconsistent with reality found in this correspondence or any of its attachments. If you do not respond, I shall conclude that you believe I am a “nontaxpayer” who is neither subject to nor liable for any internal revenue tax.

"The revenue laws are a code or system in regulation of tax assessment and collection. They relate to taxpayers, and not to nontaxpayers. The latter are without their scope. No procedure is prescribed for nontaxpayers, and no attempt is made to annul any of their rights and remedies in due course of law. With them Congress does not assume to deal, and they are neither of the subject nor of the object of the revenue laws..."

"The distinction between persons and things within the scope of the revenue laws and those without is vital."
[Long v. Rasmussen, 281 F. 236, 238 (1922)]

I remind you that your own IRS mission statement says that you can only help “taxpayers” to understand their tax responsibilities and therefore, if you won’t talk with me, the only thing I can logically conclude is that I must not be a “taxpayer” and instead am a “nontaxpayer” not subject to any provision within the I.R.C. In that case, thank you for confirming that I am person outside your jurisdiction and not “liable” for any internal revenue tax:

IRS Mission and Basic Organization

The IRS Mission: Provide America’s taxpayers top quality service by helping them understand and meet their tax responsibilities and by applying the tax law with integrity and fairness to all.

6. Any IRS publication addressed to “taxpayers” isn’t meant for you and you cannot rely upon it. For instance, IRS Publication 1 is entitled Your Rights as a Taxpayer. The title of this publication is an oxymoron: Taxpayers don’t have rights! A “nontaxpayer” cannot cite this pamphlet as authority for defending his rights. We called the IRS and asked them if they have an equivalent pamphlet for “nontaxpayers” and they said no. Then we asked whether the rights mentioned in the pamphlet also apply to “nontaxpayers” and they reluctantly said “yes”. Someone wrote an “improved” version of this pamphlet entitled Your Rights as a Nontaxpayer which you may wish to read at:

5.3.2 What is a “return”?

The Internal Revenue Code defines the term “return” as follows:

26 U.S.C. §6213(g): Restrictions Applicable to deficiencies; petition to Tax Court

The Great IRS Hoax: Why We Don’t Owe Income Tax, version 4.54
TOP SECRET: For Official Treasury/IRS Use Only (FOUO) Copyright Family Guardian Fellowship http://famguardian.org/

(g) Definitions

For purposes of this section -

(1) Return

The term “return” includes any return, statement, schedule, or list, and any amendment or supplement thereto, filed with respect to any tax imposed by subtitle A or B, or chapter 41, 42, 43, or 44.

TITLE 26 > Subtitle F > CHAPTER 61 > Subchapter B > § 6103
§ 6103. Confidentiality and disclosure of returns and return information

(b) Definitions For purposes of this section—

(1) Return

The term “return” means any tax or information return, declaration of estimated tax, or claim for refund required by, or provided for or permitted under, the provisions of this title which is filed with the Secretary by, on behalf of, or with respect to any person, and any amendment or supplement thereto, including supporting schedules, attachments, or lists which are supplemental to, or part of, the return so filed.

Consequently, anything that identifies itself as a “statement or list” constitutes a “return” for the purposes of U.S. Tax Court deficiencies. Federal courts have also helped to clarify the meaning of “return”, and they imply that if the intention of the submitter was to obtain a “refund” under the authority of any provision of the I.R.C., then the submittal constitutes a “return”:

Taxpayers argue that § 6702 does not apply to them in that the Form 1040 that they filed was not a “purported return.” While taxpayers did write on the forms the words “not a tax return,” the form was undeniably filed to obtain a refund of the taxes withheld from their wages for which the filing of a return is necessary. 26 C.F.R. §301.6402-3(a)(1) (1983). As stated a district court that recently faced this same situation:

Since the plaintiffs’ stated purpose was to obtain a refund, the documents submitted must be deemed to be purported tax returns for purposes of Section 6702. It is true that the plaintiffs wrote on the forms that they were not returns, but this disclaimer has no effect in light of the plaintiffs’ stated purpose to have the documents treated as returns. If such a disclaimer were sufficient to avoid liability under Section 6702, tax protesters could flood the IRS with frivolous tax returns bearing similar disclaimers without penalty.

Nichols v. United States, 575 F.Supp. 320, 322(D.Minn.1983). Thus, the Form 1040 was a purported return, and the district court correctly granted summary judgment on the issue of the penalty under § 6702.

If you electronically search the entire I.R.C. as we did, in fact, you will also find several references to the phrase “return of income”. Even more interesting is the definition of what a “return of income” is. After careful examination of all statutes that mention “returns”, we conclude based on the preponderance of evidence that it really means a “return of income”, which is a fancy way of describing a “kickback” or “bribe” given by federal “public officers” to their “employer” and franchise tax administrator, the federal government. Below are just a few examples from the “code” that prove that a “return” is actually a payment to the government, and not simply a paper document as the IRS would have you mistakenly believe:

26 U.S.C. §6012. Persons required to make returns of income

(a) General rule

Returns with respect to income taxes under subtitle A shall be made by the following:

(1) (A) Every individual having for the taxable year gross income which equals or exceeds the exemption amount, except that a return shall not be required of an individual —

26 U.S.C. §7508. Time for performing certain acts postponed by reason of service in combat zone

(a) Time to be disregarded
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

In the case of an individual serving in the Armed Forces of the United States, or serving in support of such Armed Forces, in an area designated by the President of the United States by Executive order as a “combat zone” for purposes of section 112, at any time during the period designated by the President by Executive order as the period of combatant activities in such zone for purposes of such section, or hospitalized as a result of injury received while serving in such an area during such time, the period of service in such area, plus the period of continuous qualified hospitalization attributable to such injury, and the next 180 days thereafter, shall be disregarded in determining, under the internal revenue laws, in respect of any tax liability (including any interest, penalty, additional amount, or addition to the tax) of such individual -

(1) Whether any of the following acts was performed within the time prescribed therefor:

(A) Filing any return of income, estate, or gift tax (except income tax withheld at source and income tax imposed by subtitle C or any law superseded thereby);

26 U.S.C. §6075. Time for filing estate and gift tax returns

(a) Returns relating to large transfers at death

The return required by section 6018 with respect to a decedent shall be filed with the return of the tax imposed by chapter 1 for the decedent’s last taxable year or such later date specified in regulations prescribed by the Secretary.

(b) Gift tax returns

(1) General rule

Returns made under section 6019 (relating to gift taxes) shall be filed on or before the 15th day of April following the close of the calendar year.

(2) Extension where taxpayer granted extension for filing income tax return

Any extension of time granted the taxpayer for filing the return of income taxes imposed by subtitle A for any taxable year which is a calendar year shall be deemed to be also an extension of time granted the taxpayer for filing the return under section 6019 for such calendar year.

A “return” within the I.R.C. is therefore in effect and in truth a compelled “bribe” payment to the government for the “privilege” of conducting a “public office” within the federal government or receiving a federal “payment”. Recall that the U.S. government is defined in 28 U.S.C. §3002(15)(A) as a “federal corporation”. As you will learn later, “income” is defined by the Sixteenth Amendment as “corporate profit”. The IRS fakes most of us out into admitting we are “employees” of this federal corporation on the IRS Form W-4, which says “employee” in the upper left corner. Under 26 U.S.C. §6331(a) and 26 C.F.R. §31.3401(c)-1, only those who are “public officers”, who are “officers of a corporation” can be “employees”. All such corporate officers (“taxpayers”) are described in the code as being involved in a “trade or business” in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(26). Therefore, nearly all “taxpayers” under the I.R.C. are engaged in a “trade or business”, which is a “public office”, within the “United States”, which is the United States federal government. Receipt of a federal payment by a “public officer” is then counted as “corporate profit” under the I.R.C. and we as the recipients are in the custody of corporate profit which must be returned to the federal government. The “tax” on this “corporate profit” under the I.R.C. is effectively a “return” or kickback of a percentage of the privileged payment received from the federal government. Until federal “tax” is withheld and paid, we are acting as a “fiduciary” or “transferee” (see 26 U.S.C. §6901) over federal property, and “in rem” federal jurisdiction exists over the property under Article 4, Section 3, Clause 2 of the Constitution. Therefore, an “income tax” is nothing but a federal employee kickback payment. Those private citizens who refuse to commit perjury on an IRS Form W-4 by declaring themselves to be federal “employees” or who refuse to pay this illegal bribe and expose this fraud for what it is are sometimes slandered and fired with no law authorizing such treatment whatsoever.

QUESTION FOR DOUBTERS: If you disagree, please show us a section anywhere in the Internal Revenue Code or Treasury Regulations that defines a “return” as anything OTHER than a kickback payment from federal employees to the federal government. You are not allowed to “presume” otherwise. In the legal field, every statement and belief must be backed up with evidence or it is frivolous.

Why did the government implement the income tax as the equivalent of a federal “employee” or “public officer” kickback? Isn’t it easier to just cut the pay of federal “public officer” or “employee” rather than overpay them and ask for the difference back? The answer is that:

Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

1. The only types of entities that the government can write laws which impose duties or obligations upon are its own officers and employees while on official duty, and not private persons in the general public. The U.S. Supreme Court has said that the ability to regulate what it calls “private” conduct is “repugnant to the Constitution”:

“The power to "legislate generally upon" life, liberty, and property, as opposed to the "power to provide modes of redress" against offensive state action, was "repugnant" to the Constitution. Id., at 15. See also United States v. Reese, 92 U.S. 214, 218 (1876); United States v. Harris, 106 U.S. 629, 639 (1883); James v. Bowman, 190 U.S. 127, 139 (1903). Although the specific holdings of these early cases might have been superseded or modified, see, e.g., Heart of Atlanta Motel, Inc. v. United States, 394 U.S. 241 (1964); United States v. Guest, 383 U.S. 745 (1966), their treatment of Congress’ §5 power as corrective or preventive, not definitional, has not been questioned.”

[City of Boerne v. Flores, Archbishop of San Antonio, 521 U.S. 507 (1997)]

2. The Constitution prohibits direct taxes under Article 1, Section 2, Clause 3 and Article 1, Section 9, Clause 4 and the first direct income tax Congress tried to impose was declared unconstitutional in Pollock v. Farmers’ Loan & Trust Co., 157 U.S. 429 (1895). Therefore, the only way Congress could lawfully collect an income tax was by imposing it upon excise taxable, voluntary, avoidable activities, which the courts call “franchises” and “public rights”. The excise taxable activity is called a “trade or business” and it is statutorily defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(26) as “the functions of a public office”.

Therefore, the federal government couldn’t impose a lawful or constitutional income tax and never did attempt to tax people in states of the Union using the Internal Revenue Code. Instead, they created a federal “employee” or “public officer” kickback program that only applied in the District of Columbia initially. This first “tax” or kickback program started during the Civil War with the Revenue Act of 1862, and applied only to public officers and excluded federal judges. Since that time, our “weasels in Washington” have abused “words of art”, obfuscation of the “code”, legal trickery, and corruption of the federal judiciary to unlawfully expand the operation of this kickback scheme outside the District of Columbia in what amounts to a conspiracy to destroy the separation of powers between the states and federal government. They did this by fooling people in the states of the Union into believing that they the proper subjects for what amounts to a tax exclusively on federal “public offices”, which 4 U.S.C. §72 limits EXCLUSIVELY to the District of Columbia. You may find a complete description of this conspiracy to destroy the separation of powers for financial reasons in the document below:

Government Conspiracy to Destroy the Separation of Powers, Form #05.023
http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

Within the Internal Revenue Code, the only “persons” who earn “income” are those who receive federal payments from or on behalf of the government as “public officers” engaged in the “trade or business” excise taxable franchise. This is confirmed by examining 26 C.F.R. §1.1-1(a)(2)(ii), which says that only those who have “income effectively connected with a trade or business” can earn “gross income”:

NORMAL TAXES AND SURTAXES
DETERMINATION OF TAX LIABILITY
Tax on Individuals
Sec. 1.1-1 Income tax on individuals.

(a)(2)(ii) For taxable years beginning after December 31, 1970, the tax imposed by section 1(d), as amended by the Tax Reform Act of 1969, shall apply to the income effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business in the United States by a married alien individual who is a nonresident of the United States for all or part of the taxable year or by a foreign estate or trust. For such years the tax imposed by section 1(c), as amended by such Act, shall apply to the income effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business in the United States by an unmarried alien individual (other than a surviving spouse) who is a nonresident of the United States for all or part of the taxable year, See paragraph (b)(2) of section 1.871-8.”

[26 C.F.R. §1.1-1(a)(2)(ii)]

“trade or business” is then defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(26) as “the functions of a public office” in the U.S government.

26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(26)

“The term 'trade or business' includes [is limited to] the performance of the functions of a public office.”

Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(31) also confirms that if we don’t earn any income from within the District of Columbia, which is called the “United States” in the I.R.C., and if that income is not connected to a “trade or business”, then it is foreign to the I.R.C. and outside the jurisdiction of the I.R.S.

Therefore, only those who consent to be “taxpayers” and “public officers” on behalf of the government and who receive a federal payments greater than the “exemption amount” indicated in 26 U.S.C. §6012 above must make a “return of income” to the government. The only way a person can earn such “income” and “gross income” is to have earnings “effectively connected with a trade or business in the [federal] United States”, which is lawyer-trickery for saying that a person must be engaged in a political office (in the District of Columbia, which is the what “United States” is defined to mean in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) and (a)(10)).

QUESTION FOR DOUBTERS: If you think we are wrong in our conclusions relating to a “trade or business” here, then please explain why 26 U.S.C. §6902(a) and 26 U.S.C. §6901(a)(1)(A)(i) places the burden of proof upon the Secretary of the Treasury in U.S. Tax Court Proceedings to prove that their opponent is a “transferee”, which is a fiduciary of federal property connected to a “public office”? We assert that the only “taxpayer” who can litigate in Tax Court is one who is engaged in a “trade or business”, which is a public office in the U.S. government.

Once we understand that a “return” is in fact a kickback payment of federal earnings or payments to “public officers”, it becomes clear why the IRS and the federal courts identify a 1040 form with “no liability” indicated as not a legitimate “return”. You can verify this yourself by reading an IRS internal memo indicating this below:

Below is a section from the IRS’ own Internal Revenue Manual describing what a valid return is. Notice that they describe the requirements applicable to “taxpayers” but not “nontaxpayers”. Remember from the previous section that a “taxpayer” is someone liable and subject to the I.R.C., which we know doesn’t describe most Americans. The only thing we can conclude from this is that there are no requirements for what constitutes a valid return for “nontaxpayers”.

Internal Revenue Manual
Section 25.6.5.5.1 (11-01-2004)
Valid Return

1. A taxpayer is not considered to have filed a tax return (which begins the period of limitations on assessment) until the taxpayer files a valid tax return. A valid return is described at IRM 25.6.2.4.14. In general, a tax return is considered sufficient for establishing a statute of limitations period if it meets the following criteria:

A. It has data sufficient available to calculate a tax liability,
B. It purports to be a return,
C. It is an honest and reasonable attempt to satisfy the requirements of the tax law, and
D. It is signed under penalties of perjury.

Note:

While there is no question that an unsigned return is an invalid return; the Service has found it necessary to process unsigned balance due returns since 1970 in order for the Service to handle the volume of unsigned payment returns received annually. This business decision is reflected in P-2-11 (Approved 10-02-1970), Internal Revenue Manual (I.R.M.), Section 1.2.1.3.6.
2. A return filed on the wrong form may be a valid return for the purpose of starting the period of limitations if it provides sufficient date to calculate a tax liability.

A. Federal Insurance Contributions Act (FICA) form instead of Railroad Retirement Tax Act (RRTA) form. A FICA return did not start the period on an employer's RRTA tax liability because the FICA return did not include all the information necessary to compute the RRTA tax. See Atlantic Land & Improv. Co. v. United States, 790 F.2d. 853, 860 (11th Cir. 1986).

B. RRTA form instead of FICA form. It appears that a RRTA return filed for a FICA tax liability might be sufficient to start the period on that liability. See the suggestion in Atlantic Land & Improv. Co., 790 F.2d. 860 at footnote 12.

Those who earn no “income”, which is a code word within the I.R.C., Subtitle A for:

1. A federal payment to a Social Security Trustee, who is the benefit recipient. See 26 U.S.C. §861(a)(8).

2. Employment compensation to a federal “employee”, as defined in 26 C.F.R. §31.3401(c)-1.

...cannot “return” a portion of it. Most people fit in this category and don’t even realize it because they believe the deliberate deception contained in the IRS publications instead of reading the I.R.C. for themselves. Such “persons” would be described simply as “not liable” and would not need to file any forms with the IRS. However, a condition of no liability, at least as far as the IRS is concerned, can only exist when all erroneous reports of “income” connected with the “trade or business” franchise coming from private companies or financial institutions have been rebutted. This is accomplished in the case of a W-2 by filing IRS Form W-2C separately or IRS Form 4852 with a tax return or sending in corrected versions of the other types of forms. If these erroneous reports of “income” (federal payments) are never rebutted and if the amount reported exceeds the exemption amount identified in 26 U.S.C. §6012, then:

1. Un-rebutted and erroneous IRS Form W-2, 1042S, 1098, and 1099 information return reports:
   1.1. Create a false presumption of the receipt of federal payments.
   1.2. Constitute a statement of liability under penalty of perjury. The IRS Form W-3 identifies itself as a “tax statement” and it is signed under penalty of perjury.
   1.3. Create a false presumption that the recipient consented to be treated as a federal “employee”, which is what it says in the upper left corner of the Form W-4.
   1.4. Constitute evidence that the recipient received “income” or “gross income” AND that they consented to have his or her earnings treated as “wages” under 26 C.F.R. §31.3401(a)-1.
   1.5. The presence of a federal identifying number on the information returns also constitutes consent to treat an SSN as a TIN. There is no regulation or statute authorizing conversion of an SSN into a TIN. Only the recipient can do that by disclosing a number to the payor or the IRS.
   1.6. Create a false presumption that the subject of the report filed an IRS Form W-4, which is called a “voluntary withholding agreement”.

2. Since the payee of the payment received a copy of these reports and did not rebut it, the government will “presume” that the recipient consented to participate in the federal income tax and therefore has “income effectively connected with a trade or business in the United States”.

3. Because consent was present and voluntary, the recipient is a “taxpayer” and is subject to the “code”. Enforcement will then be attempted against the recipient and that recipient will be treated as a federal “employee” during the collection process, which under 26 U.S.C. §6331(a), is an elected or appointed officer of the federal government.

If you would like to know how to nullify these erroneous reports to rebut the false presumption of being connected with a “trade or business in the United States”, see:

Correcting Erroneous Information Returns, Form #04.001
http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

Why does the government want to deceive you into believing that a “return” is a piece of paper instead of a kickback of payments from the federal government? Here are a few answers:
1. When they prosecute people maliciously and wrongfully for “willful failure to file” under 26 U.S.C. §7203, they don’t have to satisfy the burden of proof that your income was “effectively connected to a trade or business”, which would immediately expose their fraud.

2. They don’t have to explain to juries that a “trade or business” is actually a “public office” under 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(26).

3. They don’t want juries to know that I.R.C., Subtitle A describes a “kickback” and not a legitimate, constitutional income tax.

Finally, if you would like to know more about this illegal and unethical kickback program, see our section entitled “Public Officer Kickback Position” later starting in section 5.6.10.

5.3.3 Summary of Federal Income Tax Filing Status by Citizenship and Residency

The table below summarizes the federal jurisdiction to tax organized by citizenship and then residency. It presents the previous table in a somewhat different way. Most people are very surprised when they see this, and you will never see this table in any of the IRS Publications, because they don’t want you to know you have been filing incorrectly! That’s why we had to do so much research to write this section and build the table below, because the IRS doesn’t want you hearing the truth and has done their best to conceal it:

NOTES:

1. Definitions of “United States”:
   1.1 U.S.*= United States the country (in the family of nations)
   1.2 U.S. = the federal zone=District of Columbia and all federal territories, possessions, and enclaves.
   1.3 U.S. = the contiguous 50 states of the union outside the federal zone.
2. A person who is a “Citizen of the United States of America” (a state-only citizen) is referred to as a “U.S. national” or simply a “national” but not a statutory “U.S. citizen”. He is also called a constitution “citizen of the United States”
3. Foreign national is someone who is a citizen of another country that is outside of the 50 contiguous states of the union.
4. Foreign aliens are typically citizens of other countries who are domiciled in the 50 Union states of the United States of America.
5. The Fourteenth Amendment made everyone born or naturalized in the United States* into citizens of the United States (and by implication, the United States* and United States) and the State wherein they reside as follows:

>Section 1. All persons born and naturalized in the United States [the federal zone/U.S.], and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States[] and of the state wherein they reside. No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

6. If you examine 26 C.F.R. 1.861, which is used for identifying and computing taxable income for ALL sources both within and without the “United States”, you will note that the taxable sources (and all of the examples given in that section) are restricted to those involved in government privileged activities subject to indirect excise taxation. Such activities include [are limited to] service as a public officer of the U.S. government, an officer of U.S. registered corporations. This is not a mistake or an oversight, but a direct result of the fact that the income tax, according to the Supreme Court, is and always has been an indirect excise tax. U.S. Supreme Court rulings over the years have always identified Subtitle A income taxes as indirect excise taxes, both before and after the passage of the 16th Amendment (see section 5.1.8 for further details on this). These conclusions also agree with Congressional Research Service Report 97-59A appearing on our website, which is the very same report that Congressmen send their constituents when they get questions about income taxes. The rate of tax is determined by 26 U.S.C. Section 871 for nonresident aliens and 26 U.S.C. Section 1 for U.S. citizens residing in the U.S.. If you file a 1040 form, then you elect to use 26 U.S.C. Section 1 to compute your rate of tax. If you file a 1040NR, then you are using 26 U.S.C. Section 871(a) to compute the tax rate for income from...
26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(26) Definitions. Trade or Business. The term “trade or business” includes [only] the performance of the functions of a public office.

26 U.S.C. §871(b)-GRADUATED RATE OF TAX...

“(2) DETERMINATION OF TAXABLE INCOME.—In determining taxable income… gross income includes ONLY gross income which is effectively connected with the conduct of a TRADE OR BUSINESS within the United States.”

---

Following is a definition of “public office”:

Public Office, pursuant to Black’s Law Dictionary, Abridged Sixth Edition, means:

“Essential characteristics of a ‘public office’ are:

1. Authority conferred by law,
2. Fixed tenure of office, and
3. Power to exercise some of the sovereign functions of government.
4. Key element of such test is that “officer is carrying out a sovereign function.”
5. Essential elements to establish public position as ‘public office’ are:
   (a) Position must be created by Constitution, legislature, or through authority conferred by legislature.
   (b) Portion of sovereign power of government must be delegated to position,
   (c) Duties and powers must be defined, directly or implied, by legislature or through legislative authority.
   (d) Duties must be performed independently without control of superior power other than law, and
   (e) Position must have some permanency.”
8.5. Declare on your jury summons that we are a “U.S. citizen” and don’t clarify that we instead are a “national”, which means we reside in the country and are state citizens.

8.6. Declare on any kind of tax return that we are a “U.S. citizen” without clarifying what we mean (in fact, we should mean “national” or “state national” and NOT U.S. citizen). We can also do this by filing the wrong tax form, in this case a 1040 instead of the correct 1040NR form.

9. The U.S. constitution, in Article 1, Section 2, Clause 1 (mentioned in section 3.6.7) says:

Article I, Section 8, Clause 1: “The Congress shall have Power To lay and collect Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises, to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defence and general Welfare of the United States; but all Duties, Imposts and Excises shall be uniform throughout the United States; “

Did you notice that it says “but all Duties, Imposts and Excises shall be uniform throughout the United States”? If you look in table 5-6 in section 5.2.3, you will see that THE ONLY taxes that are uniform in that table are those for “nonresident aliens” covered in IRS publication 19 and citizens living abroad covered in IRS Publication 54! The only income tax that is NOT uniform and graduated are taxes for statutory “U.S. citizens” and “residents” domiciled in the federal zone (who file 1040 tax forms), which do not fall under the constitutional protections or limitations according to Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U.S. 244 (1901), covered earlier in section 3.16.6.

10. In the event that definitions of such terms as “U.S.” or “includes” has you confused about your tax liability or the applicability of the above table, remember that the supreme court said of the rules of statutory construction as found in the case of Spreckels Sugar Refining Co. v. McClain, 192 U.S. 397 (1904):

“Keeping in mind the well-settled rule that the citizen is exempt from taxation unless the same is imposed by clear and unequivocal language, and that where the construction of a tax law is doubtful, the doubt is to be resolved in favor of those upon whom the tax is sought to be laid.”

[Spreckels Sugar Refining Co. v. McClain, 192 U.S. 397 (1904)]

The reason for this is obvious. The Fifth and Sixth Amendments say that we have a right to due process and to know and understand the charges against us. How can we be assured of a fair trial or justice if we can't definitively even know or limit what the law says in such a way that we can completely understand what is expected of us and obey it? Furthermore, the definition of the word "definition" found in Black's Law Dictionary, Sixth Edition, p. 423:

"A description of a thing by its properties; an explanation of the meaning of a word or term. The process of stating the exact meaning of a word by means of other words. Such a description of the thing defined, including all essential elements and excluding all nonessential, as to distinguish it from all other things and classes."

If the term "includes" found in 26 U.S.C. §7701(c) is used “expansively” everywhere in the IRC as it is defined in 26 U.S.C. Section 7701(c), NOTHING is defined in the Internal Revenue Code ANYWHERE! For such a case the whole code is "Void for Vagueness" as described in section 5.10!

For all the above reasons, we strongly suggest that you do the following to ensure that no one can ever legally prove that you are a U.S. Citizen:

1. Whenever you sign any kind of tax return, voter registration, or government application for benefits that asks you if you are a “U.S. citizen”, add an “A.” to the end of “U.S.” to emphasize that you are a “national” under 8 U.S.C. §1101(a)(21) and not a statutory “federal citizen” pursuant to 8 U.S.C. §1401. Also, change the word “citizen” to begin with capital letters, so that it appears as “Citizen”, which will make you a sovereign American of the 50 Union states. Then put an asterisk next to the term “USA” and make a note at the bottom stating: “Not a statutory citizen under 8 U.S.C. §1401.” Most clerks don’t pay enough attention to the forms you sign to even notice. You should make a copy of every type of form or application like this that you sign, so you have proof to use in court that you are a natural born State Citizen.

2. Get a copy of your birth certificate. Examine whether it says anything about you being a “U.S. Citizen”. If it does, go to the county recorder where you were born and have them alter or amend it to reflect that you are NOT a U.S. citizen, but rather a sovereign state Citizen of the U.S.A. Or file an affidavit with the recorder and have it recorded stating that you are not a 14th Amendment or U.S. citizen.

Chapter 5:  The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

5.3.4  What’s Your Proper Federal Income Tax Filing Status?

The proper status from the table above for most Americans who are domiciled in the 50 Union states is #10, the “national” or “state national” who is a “non-resident non-person” of the federal zone and the U.S.. “nationals” are defined in 8 U.S.C. §1101(a)(21). People born in the 50 states of the Union should also be filing as “non-resident non-persons” instead of using an IRS Form W-4 form for your employer withholding.

QUESTION FOR DOUBTERS:  If the term “United States” as used in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) includes the nonfederal/private areas of the 50 Union states, then why does our own federal government call foreigners domiciled in these areas “nonresident aliens” and ask them to fill out a form 1040NR?  Shouldn’t they be called “resident aliens”?

We want to emphasize that most citizens are incorrectly deceived by the IRS into filing under status #7 above, which is a U.S. citizen who elects to be treated as a resident of the U.S.. Also recall earlier from section 5.2.14 that the only “residents” within the context of the income tax code are aliens domiciled in the federal “United States”. In the tax code, resident=alien. Remember that!  Why is this?  Here are a few of the many reasons why these assertions are absolutely true:

1.  The Internal Revenue Code, in section 7701, defines “United States” as “The term ‘United States’ when used in a geographical sense includes only the States and the District of Columbia.”  The same section defines “State” as “The term ‘State’ shall be construed to include the District of Columbia, where such construction is necessary to carry out provisions of this title.”  Note that the word “States” is the plural of the word “State”.  See sections 3.12.1.19 and 3.12.1.23 for further details on this distinction.  Suffice it to say that both “States” and “United States” mean the federal zone and/or the District of Columbia and NOT the 50 Union states.  See section 4.7 for further background on the meaning of the term “federal zone”.  The U.S. supreme Court ruled as follows on this issue:

"There is a canon of legislative construction which teaches Congress that, unless a contrary intent appears [legislation] is meant to apply only within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States."

[U.S. v. Spelar, 338 U.S. 217 at 222.]

2.  IRS Publication 54:  Tax Guide for U.S. Citizens and Resident Aliens Abroad (2000) (which you can download from our website), defines the term “foreign country” as follows on page 12:

“A foreign country usually is any territory (including the air space and territorial waters) under the sovereignty of a government other than that of the United States.  ... The term ‘foreign country’ does not include Puerto Rico, Guam, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Virgin Islands, or U.S. possessions such as American Samoa.”

[Emphasis added]

All entities mentioned above as being excluded from being foreign countries are federal “States” as far as the Internal Revenue Code is concerned and are areas over which the United States has exclusive jurisdiction and sovereignty.  These federal “States” are all territories, and include Puerto Rico, Guam, and the Virgin Islands to name a few.  Do you see the 50 Union states of the United States excluded from the above definition of “foreign country”?  No!  For the purposes of the Internal Revenue Code, the 50 sovereign states are “foreign countries” with respect to the U.S. Government!  This conclusion is also consistent with California’s definition of “foreign country” found in section 17019 of the California Revenue and Taxation Code:

17019.  “Foreign country” means any jurisdiction other than one embraced within the United States.

Note that California’s definition of “United States” in their tax code is the same as the federal government’s.  Yes, the federal government does have limited subject matter jurisdiction within the Union states, but they do not have territorial jurisdiction and are NOT sovereign over areas within the several Union states that are not federal areas or enclaves. The reason for this, in part, has to do with the fact that the Constitution in Article 4, Section 3 prohibits the establishment of any “State” within another “State”:

Article 4, Section 3

The Great IRS Hoax: Why We Don’t Owe Income Tax, version 4.54
TOP SECRET:  For Official Treasury/IRS Use Only (FOUO)
Copyright Family Guardian Fellowship  http://famguardian.org/
For instance, everything the federal government does with air space and territorial waters surrounding or above states of the Union is controlled by elected representatives from our state who represent us and who will not be reelected if they don’t represent us adequately. Therefore, the U.S. Government can’t be sovereign even over the areas they have exclusive jurisdiction if they can’t independently control who exercises control of those waters. "Once again, according to the Declaration of Independence, the U.S. Government derives its "just powers from the consent of the governed", so the people, and not the government, are the sovereigns, and they exercise their sovereignty by voting and serving on jury duty, which in turn indirectly controls everything that the U.S. government does on their behalf. Ultimately, no government like ours can be wholly sovereign over anything because the people are the real sovereigns in a republican form of government. The supreme Court agreed with this view in Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356, 370 (1885):

> "While sovereign powers are delegated to the agencies of government, Sovereignty itself remains with the people, by whom and for whom all government exists and acts."
> [Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356 (1886)]

Jurisdiction and sovereignty are synonymous. Only states of the Union are sovereign over the territory within them and they exercise plenary/exclusive legislative powers over nearly everything that happens within them (NOTE: We talked about the subject of jurisdiction earlier in section 5.2.2 if you want to go back and review). That is why:

- Direct taxes must be apportioned to the 50 state governments instead of directly on the people inside the states (see Article 1, Section 9, Clause 4 and Article 1, Section 2, Clause 3 of the Constitution).
- The Congress cannot tax exports from any state (see Article 1, Section 9, Clause 5 of the Constitution).
- The Congress has no authority to join or divide states without concurrence of the State (see Article 4, Section 3, Clause 1).
- Congress only has exclusive legislative jurisdiction (read “sovereignty”) in the District of Columbia and other federal territories as per Article 1, Section 8, Clause 17 of the Constitution:

> To exercise exclusive Legislation in all Cases whatsoever, over such District (not exceeding ten Miles square) as may, by Cession of Particular States, and the Acceptance of Congress, become the Seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like Authority over all Places purchased by the Consent of the Legislature of the State in which the Same shall be, for the Erection of Forts, Magazines, Arsenals, dock-Yards and other needful Buildings;"

3. The legal dictionary defines “sovereign” as:

> "That which is preeminent among all others. 1 Bl. Comm. *241. For instance, in a monarchy, the king as sovereign has absolute power, the sovereign power. Blackstone, the eighteenth century legal theorist, defined sovereign power to mean 'the making of laws.' 1 Bl. Comm. *49. In ancient England, the king's word was law, in today's democratic governments, the law-making function has been taken over by representative bodies such as Congress." 49

Is the U.S. Government “preeminent” within the boundaries of the 50 Union states?…NO! As a matter of fact, if you look in Bouvier’s Law Dictionary, Revised Sixth Edition, 1856, which was written by a supreme Court Justice and used by the Supreme Court for many years, you find the following mentioned under the definition of the term “United States of America”:

> 6. The states, individually, retain all the powers which they possessed at the formation of the constitution, and which have not been given to congress. (q.v.)

It sure sounds to us like the states are “sovereign” and “preeminent” within their own geographical boundaries. Does the U.S. government have exclusive authority to make laws applying within the boundaries of the 50 Union states?…NO! You will note that as per 1:8:17 of the U.S. Constitution, the only area within which the United States government has "sovereignty" or exclusive/plenary legislative authority is "the federal zone", which the vast majority of Americans don’t reside in and which we described in sections 4.8 through 4.9.1 earlier. Therefore, the states of the Union are sovereign "foreign countries" with respect to the U.S. Government as far as the Internal Revenue Code Subtitle A income taxes are concerned! We talked further about the relationship of the 50 states of the Union being foreign with respect to the U.S. Government in section 5.2.14 if you want to go back and review again. To repeat what one court said from section 3.12.1.6:

"The United States government is a foreign corporation with respect to a state."

4. The supreme Court of the United States had the following to say about the sovereignty of the 50 Union states relative to the Federal government:

"...The states are separate sovereigns with respect to the federal government."

[Heath v. Alabama, 474 U.S. 82]

5. By filing a form 1040 and or a W-2 form ONLY instead of a form 2555 attached to your 1040, you are in effect "electing to be a resident" of the "federal zone" and of the "United States", which you are perfectly authorized and entitled (but woefully ignorant and misinformed!) to do. This creates a prima facie case in favor of the presumption that you are an "alien" domiciled in the federal zone (see 26 C.F.R. §1.1-1(a)(2)(ii)). Remember?: The Income Tax is "voluntary", and the heart of its voluntary nature begins by you electing to be treated as a "citizen" and a "resident" of the “United States” even though you technically are NOT: IRS Publication 54 tells you how to choose to be a resident of the “United States” on pages 5 through 6 of the Year 2000 version:

Nonresident Spouse Treated as a Resident

If, at the end of your tax year, you are married and one spouse is a U.S. citizen or a resident alien and the other is a nonresident alien, you can choose to treat the nonresident as a U.S. resident. This includes situations in which one of you is a nonresident alien at the beginning of the tax year, but a resident alien at the end of the year, and the other is a nonresident alien at the end of the year.

If you make this choice, the following two rules apply.

1) You and your spouse are treated, for income tax purposes, as residents for all tax years that the choice is in effect.

2) You must file a joint income tax return for the year you make the choice.

This means that neither of you can claim tax treaty benefits as a resident of a foreign country for a tax year for which the choice is in effect. You can file joint or separate returns in years after the year in which you make the choice.

How To Make the Choice

Attach a statement, signed by both spouses, to your joint return for the first tax year for which the choice applies. It should contain the following:

1) A declaration that one spouse was a nonresident alien and the other spouse a U.S. citizen or resident alien on the last day of your tax year, and that you choose to be treated as U.S. residents for the entire tax year, and 2) The name, address, and social security number (or individual taxpayer identification number) of each spouse. (If one spouse died, include the name and address of the person making the choice for the deceased spouse.)

You generally make this choice when you file your joint return. However, you can also make the choice by filing a joint amended return on Form 1040 or Form 1040A. Be sure to write the word “Amended” across the top of the amended return. If you make the choice with an amended return, you and your spouse must also amend any returns that you may have filed after the year for which you made the choice.

You generally must file the amended joint return within 3 years from the date you filed your original U.S. income tax return or 2 years from the date you paid your income tax for that year, whichever is later.
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

Suspending the Choice

The choice to be treated as a resident alien does not apply to any later tax year if neither of you is a U.S. citizen or resident alien at any time during the later tax year.

Example. Dick Brown was a resident alien on December 31, 1997, and married to Judy, a nonresident alien. They chose to treat Judy as a resident alien and filed a joint 1997 income tax return. On January 10, 1999, Dick became a nonresident alien. Judy had remained a nonresident alien. Dick and Judy can file joint or separate returns for 1999. Neither Dick nor Judy is a resident alien at any time during 2000 and their choice is suspended for that year. For 2000, both are treated as nonresident aliens. If Dick becomes a resident alien again in 2001, their choice is no longer suspended and both are treated as resident aliens.

Ending the Choice

Once made, the choice to be treated as a resident applies to all later years unless suspended (as explained above) or ended in one of the ways shown in Figure 1–A. If the choice is ended for any of the reasons listed in Figure 1–A, neither spouse can make a choice in any later tax year.

It is very important to note that the above excerpt from IRS Publication 54 indicates that by filing a form 1040 for filing jointly, you are electing to be treated as a resident/domiciliary of the federal United States/federal zone (not United States of America or the several states, but the United States) for all other tax years! The only way you can revoke that status is to make a Revocation of Election as described under “Ending the Choice” above. We encourage you to obtain this publication and make your Revocation of Election to be treated as a nonresident alien of the United States for tax purposes if you live in any of the 50 Union states. There are big tax advantages to doing this! We have included forms and procedures to facilitate making your Revocation of Election easier both on our website and in Chapters 8 and 14 of this book. Elections to be treated as a resident or citizen of the federal United States are also discussed in 26 U.S.C. §6013(a).

6. The reason Citizens have been abused by the federal courts and made to believe that they are obligated to pay income taxes they in fact don’t owe is because Congress has exclusive authority within the “federal zone” and is not bound by constitutional constraints against direct income taxes within the federal zone as per 4:3:2 of the Constitution:

The Congress shall have Power to dispose of and make all needful Rules and Regulations respecting the Territory or other Property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to Prejudice any Claims of the United States, or of any particular State.

This conclusion is also supported by the findings of the U.S. supreme Court in the case of Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U.S. 244 (1901), which we talked about in section 3.17.6 earlier:

“Indeed, the practical interpretation put by Congress upon the Constitution has been long continued and uniform to the effect [182 U.S. 244, 279] that the Constitution is applicable to territories acquired by purchase or conquest, only when and so far as Congress shall so direct. Notwithstanding its duty to ‘guarantee to every state in this Union a republican form of government’ (art. 4, 4), by which we understand, according to the definition of Webster, ‘a government in which the supreme power resides in the whole body of the people, and is exercised by representatives elected by them,’ Congress did not hesitate, in the original organization of the territories of Louisiana, Florida, the Northwest Territory, and its subdivisions of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, and Wisconsin and still more recently in the case of Alaska, to establish a form of government bearing a much greater analogy to a British Crown colony than a republican state of America, and to vest the legislative power either in a governor and council, or a governor and judges, to be appointed by the President. It was not until they had attained a certain population that power was given them to organize a legislature by vote of the people. In all these cases, as well as in territories subsequently organized west of the Mississippi, Congress thought it necessary either to extend to Constitution and laws of the United States over them, or to declare that the inhabitants should be entitled to enjoy the right of trial by jury, of bail, and of the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus, as well as other privileges of the bill of rights.”

[Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U.S. 244 (1901)]

Why doesn’t the IRS tell you in their 1040 booklet that you are “volunteering” to be a “resident” of the “federal zone” when you submit a 1040 form without a form 2555(!) because then you would refute it with a letter or statement attached to your 1040 tax return because you know it isn’t true and that would end their jurisdiction to impose direct taxes on you! Instead, they make the 1040 a generic book that applies to both residents and nonresidents and then hide the “contract to
7. The IRS and Congress have used the term “foreign country” in IRS Publication 54 above to confuse the issue with most citizens, so they won’t use the 1040NR form to claim their rightful status, even though it does indeed apply to them. Instead, if the IRS and Treasury were completely honest, they would have used the term “non-U.S. area” or “areas outside the federal zone/District United States” in their publications being. We talked about the use of other similar forms like the IRS Form 2555 in sections 5.9.6 entitled “Other Clues”, section 5.11.4 entitled “The Sixteenth Amendment says ‘from whatever source derived’. this means the source doesn’t matter!”, and especially section 6.9.17 entitled “Cover-Up of 1995: Modified Regulations to Remove Pointers to Form 2555 for IRC Section 1 Liability for Foreign Income Tax”. We encourage you to go skip to section 6.9.17 and read it now so you know what we are talking about before you continue further.

8. By signing and submitting a form 1040 instead of submitting a 1040NR and a Revocation of Election, we are electing to become “Residents” of the “United States”, and there is in effect a binding contract between us and the United States Government. The terms of the contract are described in IRS Publication 54. Furthermore, the States are prohibited to interfere with this contract because the U.S. Constitution says in Article 1, Section 10, Clause 1:

“No State shall enter into any Treaty, Alliance, or Confederation; grant Letters of Marque and Reprisal; coin Money; emit Bills of Credit; make any Thing but gold and silver Coin as Tender in Payment of Debts; pass any Bill of Attainder, ex post facto Law, Law impairing the Obligation of Contracts, or grant any Title of Nobility.”

The IRS doesn’t tell you in their publications that submitting an IRS Form 1040 instead of a 1040NR and a W-8 amounts to a “voluntary contract to become a resident of domiciliary of the federal zone”, but that is a fact as documented in IRS Publication 54. Now that you know your rights and that you have been deceived into giving them up, what are you going to do about it, other than bend over and look the other way as they screw you? Are you as mad as we were when we first learned about this deception? We sure hope so, and we hope you are mad enough to go out and do something about it immediately starting with completing your Revocation of Election and filing IRS Form 1040NR from now on, that is, if you don’t first use the Request for Refund letter we provide in section 2.9.1 of the following:

Sovereignty Forms and Instructions Manual, Form #10.005
http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

To summarize the above section:

The heart of the voluntary nature of the income taxes is the very important first step we take by choosing to file an IRS Form 1040 instead of form 1040NR, which as we just explained, in effect amounts to signing an invisible contract declaring ourselves as “citizens” and “Residents” of the United States, which we now know is completely incorrect and untrue. When you think about it, you are admitting to a scientific impossibility. No person can simultaneously be domiciled in two mutually exclusive territorial jurisdictions at the same time!

This single act is the main source of our tax troubles with the U.S. Government, and it was caused by our own ignorance of the law mainly, and facilitated by deception by the IRS in their publications and the legal profession who are in cahoots with them in order to maximize their business. This is the first act of “volunteering” which subsequently eliminates all of our constitutional rights. Until we regain our rightful status as “non-resident non-persons” for the purposes of the tax code, there will be no end of troubles for us in regaining our rightful status under the law, not to mention our Constitutional protections! The courts know this, but judges also know that they would be committing political and professional suicide to admit it in any or their rulings relating to federal income taxes. Instead, they will not focus or mention in their rulings the residency of the person being tried on tax issues, and make it “appear” that direct taxes are indeed being enforced upon Citizens of the United States in direct violation of the Constitution. This sometimes makes it “appear” like there is a judicial conspiracy to protect the income tax, when in fact, the judges and attorneys on the case may be honoring the law but not telling people the whole story, which is that they elected and “contracted” to be a citizen and resident with the first filing of a form 1040 and so they must pay the consequences of having no constitutional protections and no immunity from income tax. This is a very common practice in the legal profession…abusing people because of their own ignorance, but fully and completely and in... fact, honoring and abiding by the law. It’s obviously unethical and dishonest, but it’s not against the law and it probably never will be, and who knows more about the law than the lawyers? They make the laws!

5.3.5 Summary of State v. Federal Income Tax Liability by Domicile and Citizenship

In order to better clarify the findings of this section and their impact on both state and federal income taxes, we have taken the liberty to research the federal and state taxing statutes and come up with a helpful table for your use in determining the extent of your tax liability and the proper forms to file for both federal and state. The example we show below is for California. Your state may be different. The state portion of the table below is derived from the California Revenue and Taxation Code (R&TC) §§17001-18776 and federal income tax found in 26 U.S.C./IRC. A nonfederal area is anything outside of “State” as defined in California Revenue and Taxation Code, §17018:

[which don’t include the 50 sovereign states but do include federal enclaves within those states]
[California Revenue and Taxation Code, §17018]

You can read the above for yourself at: http://www.leginfo.ca.gov/cgi-bin/displaycode?section=rtc&group=17001-18000&file=17001-17039.1. The federal portion of the table on the right derives mainly from 40 U.S.C. §3112 and sections 5.2.12 and 5.3.1.

Before we begin, we’d like to emphasize that federal and state territorial taxing jurisdictions are mutually exclusive and cannot overlap. The reason is that only ONE government can be sovereign in a territory at any one given time.

“§79. [. . .] There cannot be two separate and independent sovereignties within the same limits or jurisdiction; nor can there be two distinct and separate sources of sovereign authority within the same jurisdiction. The right of commanding in the last resort can be possessed only by one body of people inhabiting the same territory, and can be executed only by those intrusted with the execution of such authority.”
[Treatise on Government, Joel Tiffany, p. 49, Section 78;

If a person is domiciled in the nonfederal areas of a state of the Union, then he must be considered a “non-resident non-person” for the purpose of federal income taxes, unless of course he “volunteers” through his own stupidity to pay “donations” by falsely admitting he is either a statutory “U.S. citizen” pursuant to 8 U.S.C. §1401, a “U.S. resident” (alien), pursuant to 26 U.S.C. §7701(b)(1)(A), or a “U.S. person” pursuant to 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(30). All statutory “U.S. persons” and statutory “U.S. citizens” and “U.S. residents” have one thing in common: They all are treated by the federal government as having a domicile in the federal zone and collectively are called “inhabitants”. We should ask ourselves, however: “How can a person simultaneously be domiciled in two mutually exclusive and separate territorial jurisdictions and therefore owe tax in both jurisdictions?” The answer is, they can’t. Therefore, the correct filing status for most sovereign Americans born in the 50 Union states is the “non-resident non-person” of the federal taxing jurisdiction and the inhabitant (but not “resident”) of the state jurisdiction. Remember from section 4.10 earlier that we should never use the word “resident” to describe ourselves for taxation purposes on a federal or state income tax form, because it means we are an “alien” domiciled in the federal zone in the context of the Internal Revenue Code and most state and federal income tax statutes! “Transient foreigner” is a better word. In most states, the implication of properly declaring this status is that the person declaring the status is liable for neither federal nor state income taxes!

In order to fully comprehend the relationship between federal and state income taxes, we must always be aware that federal and state territorial taxing jurisdictions are mutually exclusive and cannot overlap. This is a product of the “separation of powers doctrine” and fundamental to the organization of or “republican form of government” mandated by Article 4, Section 4 of the U.S. Constitution. The reason why these two jurisdictions must be mutually exclusive is that only ONE government can be sovereign over a geographical region at any one given time. Every state of the Union therefore consists of two states:

1. Republic State. Land within the exclusive jurisdiction of the state fall within this area.
2. Corporate State. This area consists of federal areas within the exterior limits of the state. These areas are federal territory not protected by the Constitution of the United States or the Bill of Rights and are “instrumentalities” of the federal government. Jurisdiction over these areas is shared with the federal government under the auspices of the following legal authorities:
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

2.2. The Rules of Decision Act, 28 U.S.C. §1652. This act prescribes which of the two conflicting laws shall prevail in the case of crimes on federal territory.

2.3. 28 U.S.C. §2679(c), which says that any action against an officer or employee of the United States in which the officer or employee is acting outside their authority shall be prosecuted in a state court.

2.4. Agreements on Coordination of Tax Administration (A.C.T.A.) between the state and the Secretary of the Treasury.

The situation above in respect to a state of the Union is not unlike our national government, which has two mutually exclusive jurisdictions:

“It is clear that Congress, as a legislative body, exercise two species of legislative power: the one, limited as to its objects, but extending all over the Union: the other, an absolute, exclusive legislative power over the District of Columbia. The preliminary inquiry in the case now before the Court, is, by virtue of which of these authorities was the law in question passed?”
[Cohens v. Virginia, 19 U.S. 264, 6 Wheat. 265, 5 L.Ed. 257 (1821)]

“I take leave to say that, if the principles thus announced should ever receive the sanction of a majority of this court, a radical and mischievous change in our system of government will result. We will, in that event, pass from the era of constitutional liberty guarded and protected by a written constitution into an era of legislative absolutism.”

[. . .]

“The idea prevails with some, indeed it has found expression in arguments at the bar, that we have in this country substantially two national governments: one to be maintained under the Constitution, with all of its restrictions; the other to be maintained by Congress outside the independently of that instrument, by exercising such powers [of absolutism] as other nations of the earth are accustomed to.”

[. . .]

It will be an evil day for American liberty if the theory of a government outside the supreme law of the land finds lodgment in our constitutional jurisprudence. No higher duty rests upon this court than to exert its full authority to prevent all violation of the principles of the Constitution.”
[Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U.S. 244 (1901), Justice Harlan, Dissenting]

The hard part is figuring out which of the two jurisdictions that any particular state statute or law applies to. What makes this process difficult are the following complicating factors:

1. There is no constitutional requirement that the laws passed by the state legislature must clearly state which of the two jurisdictions they apply to. This was also confirmed in the following exhibit, which is a letter from a United States Congressman:

Congressman Zoe Lofgren Letter, SEDM Exhibit #04.003
[http://sedm.org/Exhibits/ExhibitIndex.htm]

2. Crafty state legislators deliberately obfuscate the laws they write so as to encourage those within the Republic to obey laws that in fact only apply to the Corporate state so as to unlawfully increase their revenues, power, and control.

3. Courts of InJustice and the judges who serve in them refuse to acknowledge that most statutes passed by the legislature can only lawfully affect federal areas and persons who consent to be treated as though they inhabit these areas.

Within federal law, the Republic portion of each state is referred to as a “foreign state”. To wit:

“Foreign states. Nations which are outside the United States. Term may also refer to another state; i.e. a sister state.”

“Generally, the states of the Union sustain toward each other the relationship of independent sovereigns or independent foreign states, except in so far as the United States is paramount as the dominating government, and in so far as the states are bound to recognize the fraternity among sovereignties established by the federal Constitution, as by the provision requiring each state to give full faith and credit to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of the other states…”
[81A Corpus Juris Secundum (C.J.S.), United States, §29 (2003)]
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

Let’s now examine the practical implications of this document in relation to how or if you would file a state or federal tax return and what status you would need to file under. If a person is a domiciliary of the nonfederal areas of his state, which we call the “Republic State” in this document, then he must be considered a “non-resident non-person” for the purpose of federal income taxes, unless of course he “volunteers” through his own stupidity to donate to the federal government by falsely admitting he is either a “U.S. citizen” under 8 U.S.C. §1401 or a “U.S. person” under 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(30). We should always ask ourselves, however: “How can a person simultaneously be a resident of two mutually exclusive territorial jurisdictions and therefore owe tax in both jurisdictions?” The answer is, they can’t. Therefore, the correct filing status for most sovereign Americans/Nationals of the 50 Union states is the “non-resident non-person” of the federal taxing jurisdiction and the “resident” of the state jurisdiction. In most states, the implication of properly declaring this status is that the person declaring the status is liable for neither federal nor state income taxes! The table below summarizes the relationship between federal taxation and state taxation in the case of California. Most other states appear to be similar. This table was extracted from section 5.3.3 earlier. The important things to remember about this table are the following:

1. Federal and state income taxes presume domicile in the same place, which is the Corporate State. Those domiciled in the Republic State are “nontaxpayers” who are not subject to the federal or state income tax.
2. The federal personal income tax described in I.R.C., Subtitle A is upon “residents” as defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(b)(1)(A), who are aliens with a domicile on federal territory.
3. A person who was born within and domiciled within any of the 50 states or federal territory is not an alien, and therefore not a “resident”.
4. The IRS Form 1040 is ONLY for use by “residents” , who are aliens with a domicile on federal territory. This is confirmed by IRS Document 7130, the IRS Published Products Catalog.
5. A statutory “U.S. citizen” as defined in 8 U.S.C. §1401 when temporarily abroad pursuant to 26 U.S.C. §911 is treated as a “resident” within the Internal Revenue Code. This is because he interfaces to the I.R.C. through a tax treaty with a foreign country and he is an “alien” in relation to that foreign country that he is within.
6. The federal and state income taxes are indirect excise taxes upon a “trade or business”, which is defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(26) as “the functions of a public office”. If you are not in fact and in deed engaged in a “public office”, then:
7. You are a “nontaxpayer” whose estate is a “foreign estate” not subject to the Internal Revenue Code:

   TITLE 26 > Subtitle F > CHAPTER 79 > § 7701

   § 7701. Definitions

   (a) When used in this title, where not otherwise distinctly expressed or manifestly incompatible with the intent thereof—

   (31) Foreign estate or trust

   (A) Foreign estate

   The term “foreign estate” means an estate the income of which, from sources without the United States which is not effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business within the United States, is not includible in gross income under subtitle A.

   6.2. You are not required to file a federal income tax return, even if you are domiciled on federal territory.

7. If you are a statutory “U.S. citizen” who is NOT abroad in a foreign country pursuant to 26 U.S.C. §911, there is no IRS Form you can file, because you are not a “resident” and the only people who can use IRS Form 1040 are “residents”, which are “aliens” with a domicile on federal territory. The IRS Form 1040 is for us ONLY by “U.S. individuals”, and the term “individual” is defined in 26 C.F.R. §1.1441-1(c)(3) as an “alien”. They only place that “individual” is defined as a “citizen” or “U.S. citizen” is when that citizen is abroad in a foreign country under 26 U.S.C. §911(d). Therefore, you would be committing perjury under penalty of perjury to file an IRS Form 1040 if you were a statutory “U.S. citizen” not in a foreign country, because you would be falsely declaring yourself to be an “individual” by filing such a form.

NOTES:

1. A “U.S. citizen” shown above is one who is a federal citizen born or naturalized in the federal zone and described in 8 U.S.C. §1401. This is NOT the same as a person who is a “national”. The Internal Revenue Code only applies to U.S. citizens and is municipal/special law that does not apply to Sovereign Natural Born Citizens in the 50 Union states.
2. You can read the California Revenue and Taxation Code (R&TC) for yourself on the web at http://www.leginfo.ca.gov/cgi-bin/calawquery?codesection=rtc&codebody=&hits=20
3. Why don’t the state and federal income tax publications reflect the above considerations? We can only assume that it is because they want to simplify these publications because they want to maximize revenues from income taxation.

5.3.6 How to Revoke Your Election to be Treated as a U.S. Resident (alien) and Become a Nonresident Alien

Those people using this document are “non-resident non-persons” and not “nonresident aliens”. For those who are “nonresident aliens” and who have in the past filed a joint 1040 return with a statutory “U.S. citizen” spouse under 26 U.S.C. §6013(g), Revocation of Election is required for those who have been filing IRS Form 1040’s and who want to restore their status as nonresident aliens. “Nonresident aliens” are discussed in:

Non-Resident Non-Person Position, Form #05.020, Section 6
https://sedm.org_Forms/FormIndex.htm

The below instructions are derived directly from IRS Publication 54 (2000), p. 6 on how to revoke your election to be treated as a resident of the U.S. (federal zone). Note that you must also submit an IRS Form W-8 along with the revocation of election in order to properly identify yourself as a “non-resident non-person” to the IRS. Revocation of Election is also treated in 26 U.S.C. §6013(g) and the corresponding regulations found in 26 C.F.R. §1.6013-6(b) and 26 C.F.R. §1.6013-6(a)(3):

1. Either spouse can revoke the choice for any tax year.
2. The revocation must be made by the due date for filing the tax return for that tax year.
3. The spouse who revokes must attach a signed statement declaring that the choice is being revoked.
4. The statement revoking the choice must include the following:
   4.1. The name, address, and social security number (or taxpayer identification number) of each spouse.
   4.2. The name and address of any person who is revoking the choice for a deceased spouse.
   4.3. A list of any states, foreign countries, and possessions that have community property laws in which either spouse is domiciled or where real property is located from which either spouse receives income.
5. If the spouse revoking the choice must file a return, attach the statement to the return for the first taxable year the revocation applies.
6. If the spouse revoking the choice does not have to file a return, but does file a return (for example, to obtain a refund), attach the statement to the return.
7. If the spouse revoking the choice does not have to file a return and does not file a claim for refund, send the statement to the Internal Revenue Service Center where the last joint return was filed.

Below is the regulation stating how to revoke the election:

26 C.F.R. §1.6013-6 Election to treat nonresident alien individual as resident of the United States.

[...]

(b) Termination of election--

(i) Revocation.

(ii) Revocation of the election is made by filing a statement of revocation in the following manner. If the spouse revoking the election is required to file a return under section 6012, the statement is filed by attaching it to the return for the first taxable year to which the revocation applies. If the spouse revoking the election is not required to file a return under section 6012, but files a claim for refund under section 6511, the statement is filed by attaching it to the claim for refund. If the spouse revoking the election is not required to file a return and does not file a claim for refund, the statement is filed by submitting it to the service center director with whom was filed the most recent joint return of the spouses. The revocation may, if the revoking spouse dies after the close of the first taxable year to which the revocation applies but before the return, claim for refund, or statement of revocation is filed, be made by the executor, administrator or other person charged with the property of the deceased spouse.

(iii) A revocation of the election is effective as of a particular taxable year if it is filed on or before the last day prescribed by section 6072(a) and 6081(a) for filing the return of tax for that taxable year. However, the revocation is not final until that last day.

The Great IRS Hoax: Why We Don't Owe Income Tax, version 4.54
TOP SECRET: For Official Treasury/IRS Use Only (FOUO) Copyright Family Guardian Fellowship http://famguardian.org/
(iv) The statement of revocation must contain a declaration that the election under this section is being revoked. The statement must also contain the name, address, and taxpayer identifying number of each spouse. If the revocation is being made on behalf of a deceased spouse, the statement must contain the name and address of the executor, administrator, or other person revoking the election on behalf of the deceased spouse. The statement must also include a list of the States, foreign countries, and possessions of the United States which have community property laws and in which:

(A) Each spouse is domiciled, or

(B) real property is located from which either of the spouses receives income.

The statement must be signed by the person revoking the election.

(2) Death.

An election under this section shall terminate if either spouse dies. An election that terminates on account of death terminates as of the first taxable year of the surviving spouse following the taxable year in which the death occurred. However, if the surviving spouse is a citizen or resident of the United States who is entitled to the benefits of section 2, the election terminates as of the first taxable year following the last taxable year for which the surviving spouse is entitled to the benefits of section 2. If both spouses die within the same taxable year, the election terminates as of the first day after the close of the taxable year in which the deaths occurred.

(3) Legal separation.

An election under this section terminates if the spouses legally separate under a degree of divorce or separate maintenance. An election that terminates on account of legal separation terminates as of the close of the taxable year preceding the taxable year in which the separation occurs. The rules in section 1.6013-4(a) are relevant in determining whether two spouses are legally separated.

(4) Inadequate records.

An election under this section may be terminated by the Commissioner if it is determined that either spouse has failed to keep adequate records. An election that is terminated on account of inadequate records terminates as of the close of the taxable year preceding the taxable year for which the Commissioner determines that the election should be terminated. Adequate records are the books, records, and other information reasonably necessary to ascertain the amount of liability for taxes under Chapters 1, 5, and 24 of the code of either spouse for the taxable year. Adequate records also includes the granting of access to the books and records.

(c) Illustrations.

The application of this section is illustrated by the following examples. In each case the individual’s taxable year is the calendar year and the spouses are not legally separated.

Example (1). W, a U.S. citizen for the entire taxable year 1979, is married to H, a nonresident alien individual. W and H may make the section 6013(g) election for 1979 by filing the statement of election with a joint return. If W and H make the election, income from sources within and without the United States received by W and H in 1979 and subsequent years must be included in gross income for each taxable year unless the election later is terminated or suspended. While W and H must file a joint return for 1979, joint or separate returns may be filed for subsequent years.

Example (2). H and W are husband and wife and are both nonresident alien individuals. In June 1980 H becomes a U.S. resident and remains a resident for the balance of the year. H and W may make the section 6013(g) election for 1980. If H and W make the election, income from sources within and without the United States received by H and W for the entire taxable year 1980 and subsequent years must be included in gross income for each taxable year, unless the election later is terminated or suspended.

Example (3). W, a U.S. resident on December 31, 1981, is married to H, a nonresident alien. W and H make the section 6013(g) election and file joint returns for 1981 and succeeding years. On January 10, 1987, W becomes a nonresident alien. H has remained a nonresident alien, W and H may file a joint return or separate returns for 1987. As neither W or H is a U.S. resident at any time during 1988, their election is suspended for 1988. If W and H have U.S. source or foreign source income effectively connected with the conduct of a U.S. trade or business in 1988, they must file separate returns as nonresident aliens. W becomes a U.S. resident again on January 5, 1990. Their election no longer is in suspense. Income from sources within and without the United States received by W or H in the years their election is not suspended must be included in gross income for each taxable year.

Example (4). H, a U.S. citizen for the entire taxable year 1979, is married to W, who is not a U.S. citizen. While W believes that she is a U.S. resident, H and W make the section 6013(g) election for 1979 to cover the possibility...
Unfortunately, Revocation of Election is being misrepresented by scam artists as a means to change your status from a consenting “taxpayer” to a “nontaxpayer”. For details on this scam, see:

5.3.7 What Are the Advantages and Consequences of Filing as a Nonresident Citizen?

Let us preface this section by saying that although we don’t under any circumstances advocate being a federal/U.S. citizen under 8 U.S.C. §1401, we are including this section for completeness for those of you who insist on being one anyway. We are suggesting that if you WANT to foolishly be one, then you should at least elect to be a nonresident U.S. citizen who files the form 2555 along with your 1040 form. Below are some reasons why.

Once we complete our Revocation of Election form and become nonresidents for the purposes of the federal income tax, we gain all kinds of advantages that U.S. (federal zone) residents don’t have. This includes the following, derived directly from IRS Publication 54 (from the year 2000):

1. To qualify as a resident of a “foreign country”, you must pass the “Physical Presence Test”, which means that you must be present in that “country” for no less than 330 full days during a period of 12 consecutive months.
2. You must file an IRS Form 673 (Statement For Claiming Exemption From Withholding on Foreign Earned Income Eligible for the Exclusions(s) Provided by Section 911) with your employer documenting your nonresidency status. Do NOT include either a TIN or an SSN on the form and do not fill out either an SS-5, W-7, or W-9 to get a number to put on the 673 form because you don’t have to provide a number. TINs are only issued to aliens, which you aren’t in most cases, and SSN’s may not be used on tax forms as an identifying number or as a substitute for TINs, as you will learn later in section 5.4.23.
3. You get all the same deductions on your tax return as “residents” of the United States (“federal zone”).
4. If you choose to exclude foreign earned income or housing amounts, you cannot deduct, exclude, or claim a credit for any item that can be allocated to or charged against the excluded amounts. This includes any expenses, losses, and other normally deductible items that are allocable to the excluded income. You can deduct only those expenses connected with earning includible income.
5. Foreign income taxes (which is what state income taxes are for most Americans):
   5.1. If you pay income tax to a foreign country or to one of the 50 Union states, you cannot claim those taxes on your income tax return as U.S. income taxes withheld, but you can make a foreign tax deduction from your taxes paid.
   5.2. You cannot take a deduction or credit from the taxes paid on amounts subject to the foreign income or housing exclusion.
   5.3. You can deduct foreign property taxes and foreign income taxes using the Schedule A form.
   5.4. Foreign income taxes can only be taken as a credit on form 1040, line 43, or as an itemized deduction on Schedule A for amounts above the foreign income exclusion amount.
   5.5. You can use IRS Form 1116 to take a foreign tax credit and file this form with your 1040. This form can be used to figure the amount of foreign tax paid or accrued that you can claim as a foreign tax credit.
   5.6. The rules for breaking up credits between earned income and unearned income can be complicated, and we recommend that you refer to IRS Publication 54 for details.
6. All “foreign income” is classified into three categories:
   6.1. Earned income (payments received in exchange for personal services):
      6.1.1. Salaries and wages.
      6.1.2. Commissions
      6.1.3. Bonuses
      6.1.4. Professional fees
      6.1.5. Tips
6.2. Unearned income
   6.2.1. Dividends
   6.2.2. Interest
   6.2.3. Capital gains
   6.2.4. Gambling winnings
   6.2.5. Alimony
   6.2.7. Pensions
   6.2.8. Annuities

6.3. Variable Income
   6.3.1. Business profits
   6.3.2. Royalties
   6.3.3. Rents

7. You can deduct the full cost of housing minus any reimbursements from your employer or the government.
8. After you deduct the housing costs, you can apply an exclusion amount of up to $78,000 (in the year 2001) to your remaining earned income (such as wages and payments for personal services).
9. You can fill out an IRS Form 673 and give it to your employer, which allows them to legally exclude amounts of your income below the $78,000 (in the year 2001) from your income subject to income tax withholding. This form becomes the equivalent of an IRS Form W-4E (exemption from withholding). Here is what IRS Publication 54 (2000 version) says on pages 7 through 9 about this:

   "U.S. employers generally must withhold U.S. income tax from the pay of U.S. citizens performing services in a foreign country unless the employer is required by law to withhold foreign income tax. Your employer, however, is not required to withhold U.S. income tax from the portion of your wages earned abroad that are equal to the foreign earned income exclusion and the foreign housing exclusion if your employer has good reason to believe that you will qualify for these exclusions."

Once again, we remind you of the meaning of “U.S.” above, which means the “federal zone”, and includes only the District of Columbia and the federal territories and possessions. If they meant the United States of America or the 50 Union states, then they would have used that term and specified it clearly. They obviously didn’t, because they have no legal authority or jurisdiction or sovereignty within the States to use that term.

10. Regardless of the fact that you do not owe any federal income tax, you must still file a form 2555 annually if your income exceeds a specified amount as follows (for the year 2000):

11. Social Security and Medicare taxes apply even when you work in a foreign country.
12. U.S. payers of earned income excluding wages (other than U.S. government wages) are required to withhold at a flat rate of 30% of all earnings, including dividends and royalties. If you are a U.S. citizen or resident and this tax is withheld in error from payments to you because you have a foreign address, you should notify the payer of the income to stop the withholding. Use form W-9.
13. Foreign earned income may NOT include the following:
   13.1. The previously excluded value of meals and lodging furnished for the convenience of your employer.
   13.2. Pension or annuity payments including social security benefits.
   13.4. Amounts included in your income because of your employer’s contributions to a nonexempt employee trust or to a nonqualified annuity contract.
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

13.5. Recaptured unallowable moving expenses.
13.6. Payments received after the end of the tax year following the tax year in which you performed the services that earned the income.

(Doubters NOTE: Did you notice that the above (item 13) list DIDN’T exclude from “foreign income” income derived from any of the 50 Union states?)

14. For the purposes of the foreign earned income exclusion and the foreign housing exclusion or deduction, foreign earned income does not include any amounts paid by the United States or any of its agencies to its employees. Payments to employees of unappropriated fund activities are not foreign earned income. Nonappropriated fund activities include the following employers:
   14.2. Officers’ and enlisted personnel clubs
   14.3. Post and station theaters.
   14.4. Embassy commissaries.
15. Amounts paid by the United States or its agencies to persons who are not their employees may qualify for exclusion or deduction.

5.3.8 Tactics Useful for Employees of the U.S. Government

What’s interesting about the earlier sections relative to nonresident alien status is that U.S. government “employees” (5 U.S.C. §2105) are the ones who get screwed by having to pay taxes on “wages” from U.S.* federal zone sources, which is precisely the opposite of what you would expect as a reward for their patriotism and loyalty. According to dubious IRS publications, U.S. Government employees domiciled outside the federal zone earn “gross income” under Subtitle A of the code if they volunteer to become “taxpayers”. Since they are domiciled outside the federal zone and were born there in most cases, they are “non-resident non-persons” by default. By virtue of the public office they hold, they also become “nonresident aliens” and under 26 U.S.C. §871(a), they must then “donate” a flat 30% federal income tax on income sources “within” the federal zone”. There are a number of ways that U.S. Government employees can effectively and legally avoid this kind of taxation. Here are some of the ways designed to minimize your tax liability:

1. Even if you do earn money from “within” the federal United States, there is still no statute under Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A that makes you liable to pay any funds to the government.
2. The same source rules described in 26 U.S.C. Sections 861 and 862 apply to federal income. Therefore, your earnings as a person who works for the federal government are still not “income” in a constitutional sense and is still not subject to federal income tax! Refer to sections 5.6.5 and 8.1 for further details.
3. Remember the definition of “employee” from 26 U.S.C. §3401(c) (the Internal Revenue Code)? It says:

   26 U.S.C. Sec. 3401

   (c) Employee

   For purposes of this chapter, the term "employee" includes [is limited to] an officer, employee, or elected official of the United States, a State, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, or any agency or instrumentality of any one or more of the foregoing. The term "employee" also includes an officer of a corporation.

(See section 3.12.1.4 for further details on the definition of “employee”.) For the purposes of income tax withholding liability, 26 C.F.R. §31.3401(c)-1 defines the term “employee” as elected or appointed political officials of the United States, which most federal employees do not fall under. You must therefore be an elected or appointed official of the U.S. holding public office or an officer of a corporation to be a U.S. Government “employee”. Most government “employees” are neither of these, and therefore at least for the purposes of the income tax, they may include their income as “foreign”. Also, if we look at the definition of “employee” found in 5 U.S.C. §2105, you must be appointed to civil service by the President, a member of Congress, a member of a uniformed service, or another “employee” who has been. See the following if you would like to learn more:

Why Your Government is Either a Thief or You are a “Public Officer” for Income Tax Purposes, Form #05.008 http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

4. Earnings as a federal worker (note we didn’t say “employee”) paid by the United States actually comes from you! You are a “tax payer” (but not a “taxpayer”). The United States government is just the “independent contractor” for the states that redistributes the income that tax payers from the 50 Union states pay to it. That means that the U.S. government didn’t really pay this money because it never earned it, and receipt of income that it never earned can’t be a privilege. Remember, all rights and privileges we enjoy in the United States come from the PEOPLE and NOT the government. The people and NOT the government are the true sovereigns in our system of government. The Declaration of Independence says so! Therefore, you could say that the income was directly paid by the tax payers, and indirectly by the U.S. government. That is why the federal courts say they have authority to assess “direct” income taxes, in many cases.

5. One common approach that many government employees use to escape tax withholding and reporting (but not tax liability, because there is no such thing under I.R.C., Subtitle A) is to become independent contractors for the government. As we described in item 10 above, such contractors are not considered employees and therefore their income can be described as “foreign income” which is subject to the “foreign exclusion” amount and housing deductions.

With all of the interesting knowledge gleaned from above, who needs the politicians to give us a tax cut? We can give ourselves a BIG tax cut just by changing our civil status to “non-resident non-person”, and IRS Publication 519 tells us exactly how to do it! If we file as “non-resident non-persons” or even “nonresident aliens, then for most of us, our income federal income tax would go to zero! We can also quit jobs with the U.S. Government and become independent contractors to cut our federal taxes. However, we have to make sure that we don’t falsely indicate a domicile in the federal zone on any federal or government form, or all these benefits go out the window and we lose our Constitutional rights.

5.4 The Truth About the "Voluntary" Aspect of Income Taxes

5.4.1 The true meaning of “voluntary”

Next, we will analyze what “voluntary” really means. Black’s Law Dictionary deceptively defines the word “voluntary” as follows:

"voluntary, "Unconstrained by interference; unimpelled by another’s influence; spontaneous; acting of oneself. Coker v. State, 199 Ga. 20, 33 S.E.2d. 171, 174. Done by design or intention. Proceeding from the free and unrestrained will of the person. Produced in or by an act of choice. Resulting from free choice, without compulsion or solicitation. The word, especially in statutes, often implies knowledge of essential facts. Without valuable consideration; gratuitous, as a voluntary conveyance. Also, having a merely nominal consideration; as, a voluntary deed." [Black's Law Dictionary, Sixth Edition, p. 1575]

Remember, lawyers licensed by a corrupted government with a conflict of interest wrote the above and the goal they had was to keep you from seeing the real truth so they could perpetuate their livelihood and prestige. They tip-toed around the real issue by using “free choice” and “free will”, without explaining from where these two things originate. This is what we call “legal peek-aboo”. The result is that they told you everything about the word “voluntary” except the most important thing, which is the relationship of the word to “consent”. You can throw out all that lawyer double-speak crap above and replace the definition with the following, which is very simple and easy to comprehend and which speaks the complete truth:

"voluntary. Proceeding of one’s own initiative from consent derived without duress, force, or fraud being applied. Proceeding with the informed and full knowledge and participation of the person or entity against whom any possibly adverse consequences or liabilities may result, and which the consenting party wills and wishes to happen."

The reason duress cannot exist in order for a civil law or contract to be enforceable is that any contract or commitment made in the presence of duress is void or voidable, according to the American Jurisprudence (Am.Jur) Legal Encyclopedia:

"An agreement [consensual contract] obtained by duress, coercion, or intimidation is invalid, since the party coerced is not exercising his free will, and the test is not so much the voluntary which the party is compelled to execute the agreement as the state of mind induced. 50 Duress, like fraud, rarely becomes material, except where a contract or conveyance has been made which the maker wishes to avoid. As a general rule, duress renders the contract or conveyance voidable, not void, at the option of the person coerced. 51 and it is susceptible of 51 Barnette v. Wells Fargo Nevada Nat’l Bank, 270 U.S. 438, 70 L.Ed. 669, 46 S.Ct. 326 (holding that acts induced by duress which operate solely on the mind, and fall short of actual physical compulsion, are not void at law, but are voidable only, at the election of him whose acts were induced by it); Faske v. Gershman, 30 Misc.2d. 442, 215 N.Y.S.2d. 144; Glenney v. Crane (Tex Civ App Houston (1st Dist)), 352 S.W.2d. 773, writ ref n r e (May 16, 1962); Carroll v. Fettv, 121 W.Va. 215, 5 S.E.2d. 521, cert den 308 U.S. 571, 84 L.Ed. 479, 60 S.Ct. 85.

All governments are established EXCLUSIVELY for the protection of PRIVATE rights. The first step in protecting private rights, in turn, is to prevent them from being converted into public rights and public property without the consent of the owner. Therefore, anyone in government who calls anything “voluntary” is committing FRAUD if they refuse to protect your right to NOT volunteer by:

1. Readily recognizing that those who do NOT consent exist. For instance, recognizing and protecting the fact that:
   1.1. Not everyone is a “driver” under the vehicle code, and it is OK to travel WITHOUT a “license” or permission from the government if you are not using the roadways to conduct business activity.
   1.2. “nontaxpayers” or “persons other than statutory taxpayers” exist.
   1.3. You are encouraged and allowed to get married WITHOUT a state license and write your own marriage contract. The family code is a franchise and a contract. Since you have a right NOT to contract, then you have a right to write your own marriage contract that excludes ANY participation by the government or any right by the government to write the terms of the marriage contract.

2. Prosecuting those who engage in an of the following activities that injure non-consenting parties:
   2.1. Institute duress against people who are compelled to misrepresent their status on a government form as a precondition of doing business. Banks and employers do this all the time and it is CRIMINAL.
   2.2. PRESUME that you are a consenting party and franchisee, such as a “taxpayer”, “driver”, “spouse”, etc. We call this “theft by presumption”, because such a presumption associates you with the obligations of a status you do not have because you didn’t consent to have it.

3. Providing forms and checkboxes on existing forms that recognize those who don’t consent or volunteer, such as a “nontaxpayer” or “nonresident non-individual” block on tax withholding forms.

4. Providing a block on their forms that says “Not subject but not statutorily ‘exempt’”. An “exempt” person is, after all, someone who is otherwise subject but is given a special exclusion for a given situation. One can be “not subject” without being statutorily “exempt”.

5. Providing forms and remedies for those who are either nonresidents or those who have been subjected to duress to misrepresent their status as being a franchisee such as a “taxpayer”.

6. Providing a REAL, common law, non-franchise court, where those who are not party to the franchise can go to get a remedy that is just as convenient and inexpensive as that provided to franchisees. Example: U.S. Tax Court Rule 13(a) says that only franchisees called statutory “taxpayers” can petition the court, and yet there is not equally convenient remedy for NONTAXPAYERS and judges in district court harass, threaten and penalize those who are “nontaxpayer”.

It is a maxim of law that gross negligence is equivalent to FRAUD. If they CALL something “voluntary” and yet refuse to ENFORCE all the above, it is gross negligence and therefore fraud under the common law:

Lata culpa dolo aequiparatur.
Gross negligence is equal to fraud.

A failure to implement all of the above by those who call themselves “government” is also a violation of the requirement for “equal protection of the law” that is the foundation of the United States Constitution. Any organization that calls itself a “government” and that does NOT provide ALL the remedies indicated above is a de facto government that is engaging in “selective enforcement” to benefit itself personally and financially and has a criminal conflict of financial interest. Here is how the U.S. Supreme Court describes such a de facto government:

"It must be conceded that there are [PRIVATE] rights [and property] in every free government beyond the control of the State [or any judge or jury]. A government which recognized no such rights, which held the lives, liberty and property of its citizens, subject at all times to the disposition and unlimited control of even the most

52 Faske v. Gershman, 30 Misc. 2d 442, 215 N.Y.S.2d 144; Heider v. Unicume, 142 Or. 416, 20 P.2d. 384; Glenney v. Crane (Tex Civ App Houston (1st Dist)), 352 S.W.2d. 773, writ ref n r e (May 16, 1962)
53 Restatement 2d, Contracts § 174, stating that if conduct that appears to be a manifestation of assent by a party who does not intend to engage in that conduct is physically compelled by duress, the conduct is not effective as a manifestation of assent.
democratic depository of power, is after all a despotism. It is true that it is a despotism of the many--of the majority, if you choose to call it so--but it is not the less a despotism." [Loan Ass'n v. Topeka, 97 U.S. (20 Wall.) 655, 665 (1874)]

The de facto government described above that REFUSES to do the MAIN job it was created to do of protecting PRIVATE rights is extensively described in:

De Facto Government Scam, Form #05.043
http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

The Declaration of Independence says that all just powers of government derive from the “consent” of the governed, which implies that anything not consensual is unjust. “Consent” is the real issue, not “free will”. When a government lawyer is prosecuting a rape perpetrator, he doesn’t talk about whether the woman “volunteered” to have sex by failing to fight her attacker. Instead, he talks about whether she “consented”.

“As used in the law of rape ‘consent’ means consent of the will, and submission under the influence of fear or terror cannot amount to real consent. There must be an exercise of intelligence based on knowledge of its significance and moral quality and there must be a [free, uncoerced] choice between resistance and assent. And if a woman resists to the point where further resistance would be useless or until her resistance is overcome by force or violence, submission thereafter is not ‘consent’. ‘” [Black’s Law Dictionary, Sixth Edition, p. 305, emphasis added]

Somehow, these same federal prosecutors, when THEY become the “financial rapists” of the citizenry, suddenly magically and mysteriously “forget” about the requirement for the same kind of “consent” in the context of taxes on the labor of a human being. Like the all too frequent political scandals that haunt American politics, they develop “selective amnesia” about the fact that slavery and involuntary servitude were outlawed by the Thirteenth Amendment, and that taxes on labor are slavery. For no explicable or apparent reason that they are willing to admit, they mysteriously replace the forbidden “consent” word with a nebulous “voluntary compliance” so there is just enough “cognitive dissonance” to keep the jury in fear and doubt so they can be easily manipulated to do the government’s illegal lynching of a fellow citizen. Who better than a lawyer would use language to disguise the criminal nature of their acts? Apparently, financial rape is OK as long as the government is doing the raping and as long as government lawyers are careful to use “politically correct” words to describe the rape like “voluntary compliance”. Do women being raped “voluntarily comply” with their rapists at the point they quit fighting? We think not, and the same thing could be said of those who do not wish to participate in a corrupted and unconstitutionally administered tax system under protest.

In a free country such as we have in America, consent is mandatory in every human interaction. The basis for protecting rights within such an environment is the free exercise of our power to contract. All law in a society populated by Sovereigns is based on our right to contract. If we are entering into a consensual relationship with another party where risk may be involved, we can write a contract or agreement to define the benefits and liabilities resulting from that relationship and use the court system to ensure adherence to the contract.

Contract. An agreement between two or more [sovereign] persons which creates an obligation to do or not to do a particular thing. As defined in Restatement, Second, Contracts §3: “A contract is a promise or a set of promises for the breach of which the law gives a remedy, or the performance of which the law in some way recognizes as a duty.” A legal relationships consisting of the rights and duties of the contracting parties; a promise or set of promises constituting an agreement between the parties that gives each a legal duty to the other and also the right to seek a remedy for the breach of those duties. Its essentials are competent parties, subject matter, a legal consideration, mutuality of agreement, and mutuality of consideration. Lamoureux v. Burrillville

Under U.C.C., term refers to total legal obligation which results from parties’ agreement as affected by the Code.
Section 1-201(11). As to sales, “contract” and “agreement” are limited to those relating to present or future sales of goods; and “contract for sale” includes both a present sale of goods and a contract to sell goods at a future time. U.C.C. §2-106(a).

The writing which contains the agreement of parties with the terms and conditions, and which serves as a proof of the obligation
Our personal rights and our ability to protect them through our power to contract is the essence of our sovereignty and our rightful ownership over our life, liberty, and property. There are several ways in which we use our power to contract as a means of protection:

1. The U.S. Constitution and our state constitutions are all contracts between us and our public servants. Every public servant must swear an oath to uphold and defend this contract. Wilful violation of this Contract is called “Treason” and is punishable by death. These contracts, in fact, are the ones responsible for the creation of all federal and state governments. See section 4.4.3 earlier, where Lysander Spooner analyzed the nature of the Constitution as a contract.

2. Marriage licenses are a contract between us, the state, AND our partner. There are THREE, not TWO parties to this contract. In that sense, getting a marriage license makes us into a polygamist. Signing this contract makes us subject to the Family Code in our state. We cannot be subject to these codes any other way, because Common Law Marriage is not recognized in most states.

3. Employment agreements are contracts between us and our prospective employer.

4. Trust deeds on property are contracts between the buyer, the finance company, and the county government.

5. Citizenship is contract between you and the government. The only party to the contract who can revoke the contract is you, and NOT your government. We talked about this earlier in section 4.11.10 and following.

In the Bible, contracts are called “covenants” or “promises” or “commandments”. In law, contracts are called “compacts”:

“Compact. n. An agreement or contract between persons, nations, or states. Commonly applied to working agreements between and among states concerning matters of mutual concern. A contract between parties, which creates obligations and rights capable of being enforced and contemplated as such between the parties, in their distinct and independent characters. A mutual consent of parties concerned respecting some property or right that is the object of the stipulation, or something that is to be done or forborne. See also Compact clause; Confederacy; Interstate compact; Treaty.”

In the context of government, we showed earlier in section 4.3.1 that our government is a “government by compact”, which is to say that the Constitution is a contract between us, who are the Masters, and our public servants, who are our servants and agents:

“In Europe, the executive is synonymous with the sovereign power of a state...where it is too commonly acquired by force or fraud, or both...In America, however the case is widely different. Our government is founded upon compact [consent expressed in a written contract called a Constitution or in positive law]. Sovereignty was, and is, in the people [as individuals: that's you!].”

[Glass v. The Sloop Betsey, 3 (U.S.) Dall 6]

The Supreme Court agreed that all laws in any civil society are based on collective consent of the Sovereign within any community when it said:

“Undoubtedly no single nation can change the law of the sea. That law is of universal obligation, and no statute of one or two nations can create obligations for the world. Like all the laws of nations, it rests upon the common consent of civilized communities.”

[The Scotia, 81 U.S. (14 Wall.) 170 (1871)]

The legal profession has been trying to escape revealing the Master/Servant fiduciary relationship established by the contract and trust indenture called our Constitution by removing such important words as “public servant” from the legal dictionary, but the relationship still exists. Ever wonder what happened to that word? Greedy lawyer tyrants and the politicians who license and oppress them don’t want you knowing who is in charge or acting like the Master that you are.

The Constitution governs our horizontal relationship with our fellow man, which the Bible calls our “neighbor”. Likewise, the Bible governs our vertical relationship with our Creator and it is the origin of all our earthly rights. Our rights are Divine rights direct from God Himself. The Declaration of Independence says so. We as believers in God are bound by the contract or covenant called the Bible to obey our Master and Maker, who is God. This makes us into His temporary fiduciaries and servants and ambassadors while we are here on earth.

“I am your servant; give me discernment that I may understand your [God’s] testimonies [laws].”

[Psalm 119:125, Bible, NKJV]

“In Your [God’s] mercy cut off my enemies, and destroy all those who afflict my soul; for I am Your servant.”

[Psalm 143:12, Bible, NKJV]
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

If we violate our treaty or contract with God by violating His laws found in the Bible and thereby injure our neighbor or fellow American, then we must be stripped by God Himself of our stewardship and most of the benefits and blessings of the contract that created it by using the “police powers” we delegated to our public servants. One of the greatest benefits and rewards of respecting and keeping our contract and covenant with God, of course, is personal sovereignty, liberty, and the right to rule and direct the activities of our public servants:

“Now the Lord is the Spirit; and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty.”
[2 Cor. 3:17, Bible, NKJV]

“Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and He will lift you up [above your public servants and government].”
[James 4:10, Bible, NKJV]

The reason we must be divested of our sovereignty as a criminal member of society is that we can’t be allowed to direct the activities of a government using our political rights unless we continually demonstrate mature love and concern for our fellow man, because the purpose of government is to protect and not harm our neighbor. Unless we know how to govern ourselves and protect and love our neighbor and not harm him, then we certainly can’t lead or teach our public servants to do it! If we violate the very purpose of government with our own personal actions in hurting others, we simply can’t and shouldn’t be allowed to direct those who would keep us from being injured by such activities because doing so would be a conflict of interest.

It shouldn’t come as a surprise that there are limits on our right and power to contract within a republican system of government. These limits apply not only to our private contracts with other sovereign individuals, but also to our ability to delegate authority to the governments we created through the written contract called the U.S. Constitution. The Supreme Court said the following about these limits in respect to our ability to write “law” that can be enforced against society generally:

“In Calder v. Bull, which was here in 1798, Mr. Justice Chase said, that there were acts which the Federal and State legislatures could not do without exceeding their authority [from GOD!], and among them he mentioned a law which punished a citizen for an innocent act; a law that destroyed or impaired the lawful private [labor] contracts [and labor compensation, e.g. earnings from employment through compelled W-4 withholding] of citizens; a law that made a man judge in his own case; and a law that took the property from A [the worker] and gave it to B [the government or another citizen, such as through social welfare programs]. ‘It is against all reason and justice,’ he added, ‘for a people to intrust a legislature with such powers, and therefore it cannot be presumed that they have done it. They may command what is right and prohibit what is wrong; but they cannot change innocence into guilt, or punish innocence as a crime, or violate the right of an antecedent lawful private [employment] contract [by compelling W-4 withholding, for instance], or the right of private property. To maintain that a Federal or State legislature possesses such powers [of THEFT!] if they had not been expressly restrained, would, in my opinion, be a political heresy altogether inadmissible in all free republican governments. ’3 Dall. 388.”
[Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U.S. 700 (1878)]

In the quote below, the Supreme Court has also held that that no man can be compelled to participate in any government welfare or social benefit program.

“Men are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, ‘life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness,’ and to ‘secure,’ not grant or create, these rights, governments are instituted. That property which a man has honestly acquired he retains full control of, subject to these limitations:

[1] First, that he shall not use it to his neighbor’s injury, and that does not mean that he must use it for his neighbor’s benefit;
[2] second, that if he devotes it to a public use, he gives to the public a right to control that use; and
[3] third, that whenever the public needs require, the public may take it upon payment of due compensation.
[Budd v. People of State of New York, 143 U.S. 517 (1892)]

Notice the Supreme Court held:

“he shall not use it this property or labor or income, to his neighbor’s injury, and that does not mean that he must [or can be required by the government] use it for his neighbor’s benefit”.

The Great IRS Hoax: Why We Don’t Owe Income Tax, version 4.54
TOP SECRET: For Official Treasury/IRS Use Only (FOOU) Copyright Family Guardian Fellowship http://famguardian.org/
Since over 56% of all federal expenditures go to pay for social benefit programs (see section 1.12 earlier), then it also stands to reason that no one can be compelled to participate in the federal income tax that funds those programs. The secret the government uses to part a fool and his money through the fraudulent administration of the tax laws is item (2) in the quote above, whereby the lies of the IRS cause us to unwittingly donate our private property to a “public use” and give the government free control over it. This is what happens when we inadvertently connect our labor or assets to a “public office” or a “trade or business” by:

1. Filing information returns (IRS Forms W-2, 1042-S, 1098, 1099) on ourselves which are FALSE in most cases.
2. Using government property, the Social Security Number or Taxpayer Identification Number, in connection with our otherwise private labor.
4. Filling out the wrong tax form such as the W-4 and thereby fraudulently misrepresenting ourself as a statutory government “employee” per 26 U.S.C. §3401(c).

5.4.2 “Public Law” or “Private Law?”

The most important subject to study in the legal field is how to distinguish what is “law” and what is not. This is a subject that is not taught in law schools, because lawyers and politicians want you to believe that everything they enact into law imposes an immediate obligation upon you, which is simply not true in the vast majority of cases. Many laws, in fact, are simply “directory in nature”, meaning that you have an option to obey them but they cannot be lawfully enforced if you don’t.

“Directory. A provision in a statute, rule of procedure, or the like, which is a mere direction or instruction of no obligatory force, and involving no invalidating consequence for its disregard, as opposed to an imperative or mandatory provision, which must be followed. The general rule is that the prescriptions of a statute relating to the performance of a public duty are so far directory that, though neglect of them may be punishable, yet it does not affect the validity of the acts done under them, as in the case of statute requiring an officer to prepare and deliver a document to another officer on or before a certain day.”

This section and the following subsections will therefore concern themselves with teaching the reader how discern between legislation which imposes an affirmative obligation and liability, and that which is merely “directory in nature” and of no obligatory force. We will prove that the origin of all law in America is informed, voluntary consent and that where there is no consent, there is no enforceable legal right to anything. This is a very important subject, because it will help you to modify your behavior with the goal of freeing you from obeying many legal enactments of your servant government which:

1. Are not in fact “law” in your specific case.
2. Are simply “directory in nature” and of no obligatory force.
3. Are “special law” or “private law” that apply only to a particular group of persons and things that you are not a part of.
4. Are “private law” disguised as “public law” to deceive you into obedience.
5. Apply only to government employees and not to the general public as a whole.

By helping you to discern what is “obligatory” and what is “directory”, we don’t mean to suggest any of the following:

1. That the Internal Revenue Code or the Social Security Act are not “law”. They absolutely are.
2. That there are no persons subject to them.
3. That I.R.C., Subtitle A doesn’t apply to anyone. Rather, the group of persons who are subject to it is far more limited than most people realize.
4. That “taxpayers” are not subject to the Internal Revenue Code.
5. That there are no “taxpayers”.

In covering this important subject, we will learn to distinguish between “Public law” and “private law”, and we will demonstrate their relationship to “positive law”. We will also hopefully give you the words and tools to argue these issues in a court of law so that you avoid many of the legal traps that many freedom lovers fall into.

5.4.2.1 Public v. Private law
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

As we said earlier in sections 3.3 and 4.3.3, the purpose of law, like the purpose of government, is to protect us from harming each other, in fulfillment of the second great commandment to love our neighbor found in the Bible in Matt. 22:39. The only means by which law can afford that protection is to:

1. Prohibit and punish harmful behaviors.
2. Leave men otherwise free to regulate and fully control their own lives.

Thomas Jefferson agreed with the above conclusions when he said:

"With all [our] blessings, what more is necessary to make us a happy and a prosperous people? Still one thing more, fellow citizens—a wise and frugal Government, which shall restrain men from injuring one another, shall leave them otherwise free to regulate their own pursuits of industry and improvement, and shall not take from the mouth of labor the bread it has earned. This is the sum of good government, and this is necessary to close the circle of our felicities."

[Thomas Jefferson: 1st Inaugural, 1801. ME 3:320]

In the above sense, law is a negative concept: It provides a remedy for past harm but has no moral authority to prevent or promote or mandate any other type of behavior, including the public good. De jure law acts only upon those who institute past injury. When it acts upon FUTURE conduct or in a PREVENTIVE rather than CORRECTIVE role, it requires the consent of those who are affected by its preventive role. Otherwise, involuntary servitude and theft of property is the result, where “rights” are property.

The very basis of the government’s police powers, in fact, is only to provide a remedy for past harm but not to compel any other behavior. Since the Constitution in the Fourteenth Amendment, Section 1 mandates “equal protection of the laws” to everyone, then all laws dealing with such protection must be “public” and affect everyone equally in society:

"Public law. A general classification of law, consisting generally of constitutional, administrative, criminal, and international law, concerned with the organization of the state, the relations between the state and the people who compose it, the responsibilities of public officers to the state, to each other, and to private persons, and the relations of states to one another. An act which relates to the public as a whole. It may be (1) general (applying to all persons within the jurisdiction), (2) local (applying to a geographical area), or (3) special (relating to an organization which is charged with a public interest).

That portion of law that defines rights and duties with either the operation of government, or the relationships between the government and the individuals, associations, and corporations.

That branch or department of law which is concerned with the state in its political or sovereign capacity, including constitutional and administrative law, and with the definition, regulation, and enforcement of rights in cases where the state is regarded as the subject of the right or object of the duty, --including criminal law and criminal procedure, --and the law of the state, considered in its quasi private personality, i.e., as capable of holding or exercising rights, or acquiring and dealing with property, in the character of an individual. That portion of law which is concerned with political conditions; that is to say, with the powers, rights, duties, capacities, and incapacities which are peculiar to political superiors, supreme and subordinate. In one sense, a designation given to international law, as distinguished from the laws of a particular nation or state. In another sense, a law or statute that applies to the people generally of the nation or state adopting or enacting it, is denominated a public law, as contradistinguished from a private law, affecting an individual or a small number of persons.

See also General law. Compare Private bill; Private law; Special law."

In a Republican form of government, passage of all public laws requires the explicit consent of the governed. That consent is provided through our elected representatives and is provided collectively rather than individually. Any measure passed by a legislature:

1. Which does not limit itself to prohibiting and punishing harmful behaviors.
2. Does not apply to everyone equally (equal protection of the laws).
3. Which was passed without the consent of the governed.

...is therefore voluntary and cannot be called a “Public law”. Any law that does not confine itself strictly to public protection and which is enforced through the police powers of the state is classified as “Private Law”, “Special Law”, “Administrative Law”, or “Civil Law”. The only way that such measures can adversely affect our rights or become enforceable against anyone is by the exercise of our private right to contract. We must consent individually to anything that does not demonstrably prevent harm. Anything that we privately consent to and which affects only those who consent is called “private law”:

“Private law. That portion of the law which defines, regulates, enforces, and administers relationships among individuals, associations, and corporations. As used in contradistinction to public law, the term means all that part of the law which is administered between citizen and citizen, or which is concerned with the definition, regulation, and enforcement of rights in cases where both the person in whom the right inheres and the person upon whom the obligation is incident are private individuals. See also Private bill; Special law. Compare Public Law.”

Those who consent individually to a private law are the only ones subject to its provisions. For them, this enactment is referred to as “special law”:

“Special law. One relating to particular persons or things; one made for individual cases or for particular places or districts; one operating upon a selected class, rather than upon the public generally. A private law. A law is “special” when it is different from others of the same general kind or designed for a particular purpose, or limited in range or confined to a prescribed field of action or operation. A “special law” relates to either particular persons, places, or things or to persons, places, or things which, though not particularized, are separated by any method of selection from the whole class to which the law might, but not such legislation, be applied. Utah Farm Bureau Ins. Co. v. Utah Ins. Guaranty Ass’n, Utah, 364 P.2d. 751, 754. A special law applies only to an individual or a number of individuals out of a single class similarly situated and affected, or to a special locality. Board of County Com’rs of Lemhi County v. Swensen, Idaho, 80 Idaho 198, 327 P.2d. 361, 362. See also Private bill; Private law. Compare General law; Public law.”

All “special laws” are by individual consent of the parties only. “Special law” is a subset of and a type of “private law”. An example of “special law” is a private contract between individuals.

In the context of the government, “special laws” usually deal with procuring “privileges” relating to a regulated or licensed activity. An example would be Social Security. You can only become subject to the provisions of the Social Security Act by signing up for it using the SSA Form SS-5. Those who never signed up for it or who quit the program are not subject to any of the codes relating to it. For those who never signed up for or consented to Social Security by applying:

1. The Social Security Act is NOT “law” and is irrelevant.
2. The Social Security Act is not enforceable against them and may not adversely affect their rights. It is “foreign” and “alien” to the jurisdiction and forum within which they live.

The same arguments apply to Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A, which is the individual income tax:

1. Only certain selected groups of people are even allowed to consent to the provisions of the code under Subtitle A. Nearly all of these people hold a “public office” in the United States government and are engaged in a “trade or business”, which is a privileged, regulated, and taxable activity.
2. Those who consented to the I.R.C. by procuring the privilege of taking any kind of deductions or credits under 26 U.S.C. sections 32 or 162 or who signed a “contract” called a W-4 or a 1040 become subject to its provisions.
3. Those subject to the provisions of the I.R.C. are defined as “taxpayers” in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(14) and they must comply with ALL of its provisions, including the criminal provisions.
4. Those who never consented to be subject to the Internal Revenue Code are called “nontaxpayers”. For them:
   4.1. Its provisions are not “law” and are irrelevant.
   4.2. They may not be the target of IRS enforcement actions.
   4.3. All IRS notices directed at “taxpayers” may not be sent to them.
5. A government which wants to STEAL your money through fraud will try to hide the mandatory requirement for consent so that you falsely believe compliance is mandatory:
   5.1. They will try to make the process of consenting “invisible” and keep you unaware that you are consenting.
   5.2. They will remove references to “nontaxpayers” off their website.
   5.3. When asked about whether the “code” is voluntary, they will lie to you and tell you that it isn’t.
   5.4. They will pretend like a “private law” is a “public law”.
   5.5. They will commit constructive fraud by abuse the rules of statutory construction to include things in definitions that do not appear anywhere within the law in order to make “private law” look like “public law”. See:
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

5.6. They will ensure that all paperwork, such as the W-4, in which you consent hides the fact that it is a contract or agreement. Look at the IRS Form W-4: Do you see any reference to the word “agreement” on it? Well guess what, it’s an agreement and you didn’t even know. The regulations at 26 C.F.R. §31.3401(a)-3(a) say it’s an “agreement”, which is a contract. Why didn’t your public SERVANTS tell you this? Because they want to fool you into thinking that participation is mandatory and that the I.R.C. is a “public law”, when in fact, it is a “private law” that you must consent to in order to be subject to.

On a few very rare occasions, some people have gotten employees of the IRS to admit some of the above facts. Below is a link to a remarkable letter signed by an IRS Disclosure Officer, Cynthia Mills, which admits that the Internal Revenue Code is “special law” and is essentially voluntary and avoidable:

SEDMA Exhibit #09.023

The other interesting thing to observe about our deceitful public servants is that if they want to trick you into complying, then they will:

1. Want to label everything they pass, including “private law”, as “public law”.
2. Mix and confuse private law with public law and make the two indistinguishable. For instance, when they propose a bill, they will call it a “public law” and then load it down with a bunch of pork barrel “private law” provisions.
3. Make it so confusing and difficult to distinguish what is public law from what is private law, that people will just give up and be forced to assume falsely that everything is “public law”. The result is the equivalent of “government idolatry”: Assuming authority that does not lawfully exist.

Since the foundation of this country, the U.S. Congress has had two sections of laws they pass in the Statutes at Large: Public Law and Private Law. Every year, the Statutes at Large are published in two volumes: Public Law and Private Law. In many cases, a bill they pass will identify itself as “public law” and be published in the volume labeled “Public law” when in fact it has provisions that are actually “private law”. Then they will obfuscate the definitions or not include definitions, called “words of art”, so as to fool you into thinking that what is actually a private law is a public law. In effect, they will procure your consent through constructive fraud and deceit using the very words of the law itself.

Shall the throne of iniquity, which devises evil by law, have fellowship with You? They gather together against the life of the righteous, and condemn innocent blood. But the Lord has been my defense, and my God the rock of my refuge. He has brought on them their own iniquity, and shall cut them off in their own wickedness; the Lord our God shall cut them off.

[Psalm 94:20-23, Bible, NKJV]

Question: Who else but wicked lawmakers could the Bible be referring to in the above scripture? Now do you know why the book of Revelation refers to the “kings of the earth” as “the Beast” in Rev. 19:19?

We’ll now provide an enlightening table comparing “public law” and “private law” as a way to summarize what we have learned so far:

Now let’s apply what we have learned in this section to a famous example: The Ten Commandments. We will demonstrate for you how to deduce the nature of each commandment as being either “public law” or “private law”. The rules are simple:
To start off, we will list each of the ten commandments, from Exodus 20:3-17, NKJV:

1. "You shall have no other gods before Me.
2. "You shall not make for yourself a carved image--any likeness of anything that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth; you shall not bow down to them nor serve them. For I, the LORD your God, am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children to the third and fourth generations of those who hate Me, but showing mercy to thousands, to those who love Me and keep My commandments.
3. "You shall not take the name of the LORD your God in vain, for the LORD will not hold him guiltless who takes His name in vain.
4. "Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy. Six days you shall labor and do all your work, but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the LORD your God. In it you shall do no work: you, nor your son, nor your daughter, nor your male servant, nor your female servant, nor your cattle, nor your stranger who is within your gates. For in six days the LORD made the heavens and the earth, the sea, and all that is in them, and rested the seventh day. Therefore the LORD blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it.
5. "Honor your father and your mother, that your days may be long upon the land which the LORD your God is giving you.
6. "You shall not murder.
7. "You shall not commit adultery.
8. "You shall not steal.
9. "You shall not bear false witness against your neighbor.
10. "You shall not covet your neighbor's house; you shall not covet your neighbor's wife, nor his male servant, nor his female servant, nor his ox, nor his donkey, nor anything that is your neighbor's."

Now some statistics on the above commandments based on our analysis in this section:

1. Commandments 1,2,3,6,7,8,9,10 are “public law”. They are things you cannot do and which apply equally to everyone. Disobeying these laws will harm either ourselves or our neighbor, will offend God, and carry with them punishments for disobedience.
2. Commandments 4 and 5 are “private law”, and apply only to those who consent. Blessings flow from obeying them but no punishment is given for disobeying them anywhere in the Bible. Below is an example of the blessings of obedience to this “private law”:

   "Honor your father and your mother, that your days may be long upon the land which the LORD your God is giving you."
   [Exodus 20:12, Bible, NKJV].

   "Honor your father and your mother, as the LORD your God has commanded you, and that it may be well with you in the land which the LORD your God is giving you."
   [Deut. 5:16, Bible, NKJV]

3. The first four commandments deal with our vertical relationship with God, our Creator, in satisfaction of the first Great Commandment to love our God found in Matt. 22:37.
4. The last six commandments deal with our horizontal, earthly relationship with our neighbor, in satisfaction of the second of two Great Commandments to love our neighbor found in Matt. 22:39.

How do we turn a “private law” into a “public law”? Let’s use the fifth commandment above to “honor your father and mother”. Below is a restatement of that “private law” that makes it a “public law”. A harmful behavior of “cursing” is being given the punishment of death:

   "He who curses father or mother, let him be put to death."
   [Exodus 21:17, Bible, NKJV]

One last important concept needs to be explained about how to distinguish Public Law or Private Law. When reading a statute or code, if the law uses such phrases as “All persons.” or “Everyone..” or “All individuals..”, then it applies equally to everyone and therefore is most likely a “public law”. If the code uses such phrases as “An individual...” instead of “All individuals..”, then it is probably a private or special law that only applies to those who consent to it. The only element necessary in addition to such language in order to make such a section of code into “law” is the consent of the governed, which means the section of code must be formally enacted by the sovereigns within that system of government. If it was never enacted through such consent of the governed, then it can’t be described as “law”, except possibly to those specific individuals who, through either and explicit signed written agreement or their conduct, express their consent to be bound by it.

5.4.2.2 Why and how the government deceives you into believing that “private law” is “public law” in order to PLUNDER and ENSLAVE you unlawfully

Your public servants in the Legislative Branch know that the only way they can lawfully through legislation reach inside the “cookie jar”, which are the “foreign states” called states of the Union, is through the operation of “private law” for nearly all subject matters except interstate and foreign commerce. They also know that since private law requires explicit consent and that most people would not voluntarily give up their life, liberty, property, or sovereignty, that the only way they are going to procure such consent is by fooling them into believing that private law is public law that everyone MUST obey. They do this by the following means:

1. They will pretend like a “private law” is a “public law”.
2. They will deny attempts to characterize their activities truthfully as “private law” both in the laws they publish and their court rulings.
3. They will call their enactment a “code” but never refer to it as a “law” . It doesn’t become “law” for anyone until they explicitly consent to it. All “law” implicitly conveys rights to the parties, and no rights exist where there is no one who consents to a “code”! Look at 1 U.S.C. §204 and you will see that Title 26 of the Internal Revenue Code is never referred to as a “law”.
4. They will call those who consent “residents” and those who don’t consent “aliens” or “transient foreigners”. By doing this, they aren’t implying that you LIVE within their jurisdiction, but instead that you are a party to their private law contract who has a “res”, which is a collection of rights and benefits “ident” ified within their jurisdiction. Sneaky, huh?

The term “the State” they are referring to in the case of most private law usually means “the government” and not the people that it serves. Everyone who is party to the private law or special law usually are agents, public officers, or “employees” of the government in one form or another. See the following for proof:

Resident: “Any person who occupies a dwelling within the State, has a present intent to remain within the State for a period of time, and manifests the genuineness of that intent by establishing an ongoing physical presence within the State together with indicia that his presence within the State is something other than merely transitory in nature. The word “resident” when used as a noun means a dweller, inhabitant or occupant; one who resides or dwells in a place for a period of more, or less, duration; it signifies one having a residence, or one who resides or abides. [Hanson v. P.A. Peterson Home Ass’n, 35 Ill.App.2d. 134, 182 N.E.2d. 237, 240] [Underlines added]

Word “resident” has many meanings in law, largely determined by statutory context in which it is used. Kelm v. Carlson, C.A.Ohio, 473, F.2d. 1267, 1271

5. They will try to make the process of consenting “invisible” and keep you unaware that you are consenting.
6. When you contact them to notify them that you have withdrawn your consent and rescinded your signatures on any forms you filled out, they will LIE to you by telling you that there is no way to quit the program.
7. They will remove references to people who don’t consent off their website and from their publications. They will also forbid their employees, through internal policy, from recognizing, helping, or communicating with those who did not consent. For instance, they will refuse to recognize the existence of “nontaxpayers” or people who are not “licensed” or privileged in some way. These people are the equivalent of “aliens” as far as they are concerned.
8. When asked about whether the “code” is voluntary, they will lie to you and tell you that it isn’t, and that EVERYONE is obligated to obey it, even though only those who consent in fact are.
9. They will commit constructive fraud by abuse the rules of statutory construction to include things in definitions that do not appear anywhere within the law in order to make “private law” look like “public law” that applies to everyone. See:

Legal Deception, Propaganda, and Fraud, Form #05.014
http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

10. They will ensure that all paperwork that you sign in which you consent hides the fact that it is a contract or agreement. Look at the IRS Form W-4: Do you see any reference to the word “agreement” on it? Well guess what, it’s an agreement and you didn’t even know. The regulations at 26 C.F.R. §31.3401(a)-3(a) say it’s an “agreement”, which is a contract.
Why didn’t your public SERVANTS tell you this? Because they want to fool you into thinking that participation is mandatory and that the I.R.C. is a “public law”, when in fact, it is a “private law” that you must consent to in order to be subject to.

The government will play all the above games because deep down, they know their primary duty is to protect you, and that the only people they can really regulate or control are their own employees in the process of protecting you. Therefore, they have to make you into one of their own employees or agents or contractors in order to get ANY jurisdiction over you:

> "The power to "legislate generally upon" life, liberty, and property, as opposed to the "power to provide modes of redress" against offensive state action, was "repugnant" to the Constitution. Id., at 15. See also United States v. Reese, 92 U.S. 214, 218 (1876); United States v. Harris, 106 U.S. 629, 639 (1883); James v. Bowman, 190 U.S. 127, 139 (1903). Although the specific holdings of these early cases might have been superseded or modified, see, e.g., Heart of Atlanta Motel, Inc. v. United States, 379 U.S. 241 (1964); United States v. Guest, 383 U.S. 745 (1966), their treatment of Congress’ §5 power as corrective or preventive, not definitionally, has not been questioned."

[City of Boerne v. Flores, Archbishop of San Antonio, 521 U.S. 507 (1997)]

How can we know this is happening for any given interaction with the government? It’s really quite simple. Let us give you an example. Just about every municipality in the country has a system of higher education. Every one of them charges TWO rates for their tuition: 1. Resident; 2. Nonresident. The Constitution in Section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment requires “equal protection”, which means EVERYONE, resident or nonresident, is EQUAL under the law. It’s logical to ask:

> “How can they discriminate against nonresidents by charging them a significantly higher rate of college tuition than residents without violating the equal protection clauses of the Constitution? Why hasn’t someone litigated this in court already and fixed this injustice?”

The answer is that:

1. The municipality has created a PRIVATE corporation under the authority of PRIVATE law.
2. Those who partake of the benefits of this PRIVATE corporation are partaking of a PRIVILEGE, and can only procure the PRIVILEGE by consenting to the contract codified within the laws of the municipality.
3. The written application for the benefit constitutes the “consent” to the contract, even though the complete terms of the contract do not appear on the contract itself. In practice, the terms of the contract, like the laws themselves, are so voluminous that it would be impractical to publish them on the form used to apply for the benefit. Therefore, the terms are deliberately left out so that the applicant, in practical effect, is signing a BLANK CHECK! The government, by rewriting its laws, can change the terms of the contract at any time without your explicit consent!

CALIFORNIA CIVIL CODE
DIVISION 3. OBLIGATIONS
PART 2. CONTRACTS
CHAPTER 3. CONSENT
Section 1589

1589. A voluntary acceptance of the benefit of a transaction is equivalent to a consent to all the obligations arising from it, so far as the facts are known, or ought to be known, to the person accepting.

4. The method for providing “reasonable notice” of the terms of the “constructive contract” or “implied contract” is by publication of a “code” by the municipality within its municipal ordinances. They call it a “code” because it isn’t law until someone consents to it! In that sense, it is an “invisible contract”, because most people never read the laws that their government publishes and couldn’t read or research the law if their life depended on it. The federal and state courts have repeatedly affirmed that everyone has a duty to seek out, read, and know the law:

> But it must be remembered that all are presumed to know the law, and that whoever deals with a municipality is bound to know the extent of its powers. Those who contract with it, or furnish it supplies, do so with reference to the law, and must see that limit is not exceeded. With proper care on their part and on the part of the representatives of the municipality, there is no danger of loss."

> “Every citizen of the United States is supposed to know the law…”

Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

Of course, ignorance of the law does not excuse misconduct in any one, least of all in a sworn officer of the law. But this is a quasi criminal action, and in fixing the penalty to be imposed the court should properly take into account the motives and purposes which actuated the accused. Applying these considerations, we think the requirements of the situation will be satisfied by a judgment suspending the respondent from practice for a limited time.”

[In re McCowan, 177 Cal. 93, 170 P. 1100 (1917)]

It is one of the fundamental maxims of the common law that ignorance of the law excuses no one. If ignorance of the law could in all cases be the foundation of a suit in equity for relief, there would be no end of litigation, and the administration of justice would become in effect impracticable. There would be but few cases in which one party or the other would not allege it as a ground for exemption from legal liability, and the extent of the legal knowledge of each individual suitor would be the material fact on which judgment would be founded. Instead of trying the facts of the case and applying the law to such facts, the time of the court would be occupied in determining whether or not the parties knew the law at the time the contract was made or the transaction entered into. The administration of justice in the courts is a practical system for the regulation of the transactions of life in the business world. It assumes, and must assume, that all persons of sound and mature mind know the law, otherwise there would be no security in legal rights and no certainty in judicial investigations.”

[Daniels v. Dean, 2 Cal.App. 421, 84 P. 332 (1905)]

“Every man is supposed to know the law. A party who makes a contract with an officer [of the government] without having it reduced to writing is knowingly accessory to a violation of duty on his part. Such a party aids in the violation of the law.”

[Clark v. United States, 95 U.S. 539 (1877)]

Even the Bible itself condemns those who don’t’ read, learn, or obey the law!:

“One who turns his ear from hearing the law [God’s law or man’s law], even his prayer is an abomination.”

[Prov. 28:9, Bible, NKJV]

“But this crowd that does not know [and quote and follow and use] the law is accursed.”

[John 7:49, Bible, NKJV]

“Salvation is far from the wicked, For they do not seek Your statutes.”

[Psalm 119:155, Bible, NKJV]

The fundamental injustices in the above SCHEME are the following:

1. The contract, BEFORE IT WAS SIGNED, was not “law” for the applicant, but simply a “code”. Private law is not “law” for those who are not subject to it. Only those who explicitly consent to it are subject and must assume, that all persons of sound and mature mind know the law, otherwise there would be no security in legal rights and no certainty in judicial investigations.

[In re McCowan, 177 Cal. 93, 170 P. 1100 (1917)]

2. It is therefore unreasonable for any court of law to infer that the person has a “duty” to read or learn or know that which is not “law” for him or that doesn’t pertain to him. Therefore, there is no way that it can use the maxim of law that “everyone is supposed to know the law” as an excuse to PRESUME that he the applicant had “reasonable notice” of the terms of a contract that were never spelled out on the application itself. No court, we might add, has ever said:

“Every citizen of the United States is supposed to read and know and learn ‘codes’ but not ‘laws’ that don’t pertain to him.”

3. The municipality has deprived other PRIVATE corporations of equal protection who are engaged in the same competitive activity as the government’s competitive PRIVATE corporation. For instance:

3.1. Other competing private corporations are not allowed to publish their administrative regulations within the municipal code like the government does. Why not?

3.2. Other private corporations do not enjoy the same kind of subsidies from the municipality as the state-run schools.

3.3. Other private corporations cannot assert “sovereign immunity” to protect their PRIVATE business activities like the government can.
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

The way out of the above quagmire for people dealing with the government is simply to write the following on every government form, so that you don’t surrender any rights under it:

“All rights reserved without prejudice. U.C.C. §1-308”

There are yet other ways that the government abuses this deception to unlawfully protect and enlarge its PRIVATE business pursuits, such as junior college, Social Security, Medicare, etc. The Supreme Court has created a judicial doctrine not found within the Constitution called “sovereign immunity”, which requires that both the federal government and the states of the Union may not be sued in their own courts without their consent.

The exemption of the United States from being impleaded without their consent is, as has often been affirmed by this court, as absolute as that of the crown of England or any other sovereign. In Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat.
264, 411, Chief Justice MARSHALL said: ‘The universally-received opinion is that [106 U.S. 196, 227] no suit can be commenced or prosecuted against the United States.’ In Beers v. Arkansas, 20 How. 527, 529, Chief Justice TANEY said: ‘It is an established principle of jurisprudence, in all civilized nations, that the sovereign cannot be sued in its own courts, or in any other, without its consent and permission; but it may, if it thinks proper, waive this privilege, and permit itself to be made a defendant in a suit by individuals, or by another state. And as this permission is altogether voluntary on the part of the sovereignty, it follows that it may prescribe the terms and conditions on which it consents to be sued, and the manner in which the suit shall be conducted, and may withdraw its consent whenever it may suppose that justice to the public requires it.’ In the same spirit, Mr. Justice DAVIS, delivering the judgment of the court in Nichols v. U.S. 7 Wall. 122, 126, said: ‘Every government has an inherent right to protect itself against suits, and if, in the liberality of legislation they are permitted, it is only on such terms and conditions as are prescribed by statute. The principle is fundamental, applies to every sovereign power, and, for the protection which it affords, the government would be unable to perform the various duties for which it was created.’ See, also, U.S. v. Clarke, 8 Pet. 436, 444; Cary v. Curtis, 3 How. 265, 245, 256; U. S.
U. S. 5 Wall. 419, 431; U. S. v. Eckford, 6 Wall. 484, 488; The Siren, 7 Wall. 152, 154; The Davis, 10 Wall. 15, Thompson, 98 U. S. 486, 489; Railroad Co. v. Tennessee, 101 U. S. 337; Railroad Co. v. Alabama, 101 U. S.
327.

[U.S. v. Lee, 106 U.S. 196 (1882)]

A state’s freedom from litigation was established as a constitutional right through the Eleventh Amendment. The inherent nature of sovereignty prevents actions against a state by its own citizens without its consent. [491 U.S. 39] In Atascadero, 473 U.S. at 242, we identified this principle as an essential element of the constitutional checks and balances:

The “constitutionally mandated balance of power” between the States and the Federal Government was adopted by the Framers to ensure the protection of “our fundamental liberties.” [Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority, 469 U.S. 528, 572 (Powell, J., dissenting)]. By guaranteeing the sovereign immunity of the States against suit in federal court, the Eleventh Amendment serves to maintain this balance.

[Great Northern Ins. Co. v. Reade, 322 U.S. 47, 51 (1944)]

States and the federal government both have historically abused the confusion between “private law” and “public law” so that they could unlawfully and unjustly assert “sovereign immunity” to protect what actually amounts to PRIVATE business enterprises and PRIVATE municipal and federal corporations they have set up for their own pecuniary benefit. The U.S. Supreme Court has repeatedly said that when a government engages in PRIVATE business concerns, it surrenders its sovereignty immunity to suit and devolves to that of a private business corporation as far as standing in court:

When a State engages in ordinary commercial ventures, it acts like a private person, outside the area of its “core” responsibilities, and in a way unlikely to prove essential to the fulfillment of a basic governmental obligation.

[College Savings Bank v. Florida Prepaid Postsecondary Education Expense, 527 U.S. 666 (1999)]

“What, then, is meant by the doctrine that contracts are made with reference to the taxing power resident in the State, and in subordination to it? Is it meant that when a person lends money to a State, or to a municipal division of the State having the power of taxation, there is in the contract a tacit reservation of a right in the debtor to raise contributions out of the money promised to be paid before payment? That cannot be, because if it could, the contract (in the language of Alexander Hamilton) would ‘involve two contradictory things: an obligation to do, and a right not to do; an obligation to pay a certain sum, and a right to retain it in the shape of a tax. It is against the rules, both of law and of reason, to admit by implication in the construction of a contract a principle which goes in destruction of it.’ The truth is, States and cities, when they borrow money and contract to repay it with interest, are not acting as sovereignties. They come down to the level of ordinary individuals. Their contracts have the same meaning as that of similar contracts between private persons. Hence, instead of there being in the undertaking of a State or city to pay, a reservation of a sovereign right to withhold payment, the contract should be regarded as an assurance that such a right will not be exercised. A promise to pay, with a reserved right to deny or change the effect of the promise, is an absurdity."

Is, then, property, which consists in the promise of a State, or of a municipality of a State, beyond the reach of taxation? We do not affirm that it is. A State may undoubtedly tax any of its creditors within its jurisdiction for the debt due to him, and regulate the amount of the tax by the rate of interest the debt bears, if its promise be left unchanged. A tax thus laid impairs no obligation assumed. It leaves the contract untouched. But until payment of the debt or interest has been made, as stipulated, we think no act of State sovereignty can work an exaction from what has been promised to the creditor; namely, payment to him, without a violation of the Constitution. The true rule of every case of property founded on contract with the government is this: It must first be reduced into possession, and then it will become subject, in common with other similar property, to the right of the government to raise contributions upon it. It may be said that the government may fulfill this principle by paying the interest with one hand, and taking back the amount of the tax with the other. But to this the answer is, that, to comply truly with the rule, the tax must be upon all the money of the community, not upon the particular portion of it which is paid to the public creditors, and it ought besides to be so regulated as not to include a lien of the tax upon the fund. The creditor should be no otherwise acted upon than as every other possessor of money; and, consequently, the money he receives from the public can then only be a fit subject of taxation when it is entirely separated 'from the contract,' and thrown undistinguished into the common mass.' 3 Hamilton, Works, 514 et seq.

Thus only can contracts with the State be allowed to have the same meaning as all other similar contracts have. [Murray v. City of Charleston, 96 U.S. 432 (1877)]

Moreover, if the dissent were correct that the sovereign acts doctrine permits the Government to abrogate its contractual commitments in "regulatory" cases even where it simply sought to avoid contracts it had come to regret, then the Government's sovereign contracting power would be of very little use in this broad sphere of public activity. We rejected a virtually identical argument in Perry v. United States, 294 U.S. 330 (1935), in which Congress had passed a resolution regulating the payment of obligations in gold. We held that the law could not be applied to the Government's own obligations, noting that "the right to make binding obligations is a competence attaching to sovereignty." Id. at 353.

The dissent ignores these statements (including the statement from Jones, from which case Horowitz drew its reasoning literally verbatim), when it says, post at 931, that the sovereign acts cases do not emphasize the need to treat the government-as-contractor the same as a private party.

[United States v. Winstar Corp., 518 U.S. 889 (1996)]

How does the government abuse sovereign immunity to protect PRIVATE business activities? Let’s use the Internal Revenue Code, for example, which we now know is “private law”:

1. The Internal Revenue Code is identified as a “code” and not a “law” in 1 U.S.C. §204. In fact, it is a “code” of repealed laws. 53 Stat. 1 REPEALED the entire Internal Revenue Code, leaving no “law” left to enforce.
2. No court ruling we have ever read at the supreme court or district court level acknowledges whether the Internal Revenue Code is either “private law” or “public law”. This is deliberate, because they want to perpetuate the FRAUD and FALSE PRESUMPTION in the minds of the American public and the legal profession that it is “public law” that applies to everyone.

3. Those persons who claim to be “nontaxpayers” not subject to the private law that is the Internal Revenue Code preserve all their constitutional rights and are free to challenge the constitutionality of the enforcement of any provision of this “code” against them in any court of law.

“The revenue laws are a code or system in regulation of tax assessment and collection. They relate to taxpayers, and not to nontaxpayers. The latter are without their scope. No procedure is prescribed for nontaxpayers, and no attempt is made to annul any of their rights and remedies in due course of law. With them Congress does not assume to deal, and they are neither of the subject nor of the object of the revenue laws...”
[Long v. Rasmussen, 281 F. 236 (1922)]

“Revenue Laws relate to taxpayers [officers, employees, and elected officials of the Federal Government] and not to nontaxpayers [American Citizens/American Nationals not subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of the Federal Government]. The latter are without their scope. No procedures are prescribed for non-taxpayers and no attempt is made to annul any of their Rights or Remedies in due course of law.”
[Economy Plumbing & Heating v. U.S., 470 F.2d. 585 (1972)]

4. When “nontaxpayers” have historically challenged the constitutionality of UNLAWFULLY enforcing provisions of the “contract” called the Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A against those who never consented to it, federal courts have repeatedly and unlawfully invoked provisions within the contract itself that don’t apply to the litigant as an excuse to circumvent the challenge. For instance, the Anti-Injunction Act, 26 U.S.C. §7421 says that federal courts may not restrain or interfere with the assessment or collection of any “tax”.

TITLE 26 > Subtitle F > CHAPTER 76 > Subchapter B > § 7421
Prohibition of suits to restrain assessment or collection

(a) Tax

Except as provided in sections 6015 (a), 6212 (a) and (c), 6214 (a), 6225 (b), 6246 (b), 6330 (c)(1), 6331 (i), 6672 (c), 6694 (c), and 7426 (a) and (b)(1), 7429 (b), and 7436, no suit for the purpose of restraining the assessment or collection of any tax shall be maintained in any court by any person, whether or not such person is the person against whom such tax was assessed.

(b) Liability of transferee or fiduciary

No suit shall be maintained in any court for the purpose of restraining the assessment or collection (pursuant to the provisions of chapter 71) of—

(1) the amount of the liability, at law or in equity, of a transferee of property of a taxpayer in respect of any internal revenue tax, or

(2) the amount of the liability of a fiduciary under section 7713 (b) of title 31, United States Code in respect of any such tax.

5. In effect, the courts in unlawfully enforcing provisions of the contract against those who are not parties to it are abusing legislatively created sovereign immunity to protect PRIVATE business activity. This is CLEARLY unconstitutional if it injures the Constitutionally guaranteed rights of litigants who are “nontaxpayers” not subject to the “code”/“contract”.

The net result of the abuse of sovereign immunity to protect the PRIVATE business activity documented within the Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A is:

1. Involuntary servitude in violation of the Thirteenth Amendment.
3. Enticement into slavery in violation of 18 U.S.C. §1583. The W-4 says nothing about the fact that it is an “agreement” or contract even though the regulations at 26 C.F.R. §31.3401(a)-3 and statute at 26 U.S.C. §3402(p) identify it as such. If the IRS tells anyone that they HAVE to sign and consent to what is actually a voluntary agreement, they are enticing the person into slavery, and yet the federal courts refuse to hold them accountable for such criminal activity.
5. Conflict of interest on the part of federal judges, who are both “taxpayers” subject to the extortion and recipients of benefits and laundered money proceeding from the extortion, in violation of 28 U.S.C. §§144 and 455.
7. Kidnapping in violation of 18 U.S.C. §1201. 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(39) and 26 U.S.C. §7408(d) both allow federal judges to “kidnap” the legal identities of persons subject to the I.R.C. and make them into the equivalent of domiciliaries of the District of Columbia for the purposes of the Internal Revenue Code. By imposing these provisions against parties who do not consent to be “taxpayers” and who are “nontaxpayers” not subject to any provision of the I.R.C., they are engaging in kidnapping and identity theft. Do you REALLY think the I.R.C. would need provisions like this if the federal government REALLY had jurisdiction within states of the Union to collect income taxes pursuant to I.R.C., Subtitle A?

Judges in federal courts must certainly be aware of all of the above, which is why they positively refuse their constitutional duty to protect your rights by admitting that I.R.C., Subtitle A is “private law” and not “public law”, that only applies to those who consent, and then explaining to the parties to the lawsuit EXACTLY what form that consent takes so that they receive reasonable notice of the rights they are surrendering by engaging in PRIVATE business activity with a government that has made a BUSINESS out of effectively STEALING from you under the color but without the actual authority of law. This is the biggest travesty of justice in our time. Through this constructive fraud, they have effectively criminalized personal responsibility and exclusively enjoying your own life, liberty, and property, thus making slaves out of us all. The Civil War did not end slavery by any means. It has simply taken a slightly altered and more “stealthy” form. Some things never change, do they? Of this FRAUD and abuse of law to deceive and enslave people, Lysander Spooner said:

“What, then, is legislation?

It is an assumption by one man, or body of men, of absolute, irresponsible dominion over all other men whom they can subject to their power.

It is an assumption by one man, or body of men, of a right to subject all other men to their will and their service.

It is an assumption by one man, or body of men, of a right to abolish outright all the natural liberty of all other men; to make all other men their slaves; to arbitrarily dictate to all other men what they may, and may not do; what they may, and may not, have; what they may, and may not, be.

It is, in short, the assumption of a right to banish the principle of human rights, the principle of justice itself, from off the earth, and set up their own personal will, pleasure, and interest in its place.

All this, and nothing less, is involved in the very idea that there can be any such thing as legislation that is obligatory upon those upon whom it is imposed.”

[Lysander Spooner in 1882]

5.4.2.3 Comity

An important form of official “consent” is called “comity” in the legal field. Black’s Law Dictionary defines “comity” as follows:

“comity. Courtesy; complaisance; respect; a willingness to grant a privilege, not as a matter of right, but out of deference and good will. Recognition that one sovereignty allows within its territory to the legislative, executive, or judicial act of another sovereignty, having due regard to rights of its own citizens. Nowell v. Nowell, Tex.Civ.App., 408 S.W.2d. 550, 553. In general, principle of "comity" is that courts of one state or jurisdiction will give effect to laws and judicial decisions of another state or jurisdiction, not as a matter of obligation, but out of deference and mutual respect. Brown v. Babitt Ford, Inc., 117 Ariz. 192, 571 P.2d. 689, 695. See also "Full faith and credit clause."

Comity is the reason why countries and even sister states of the Union do the following for each other, even though no law requires them to:

1. Extradite criminals wanted in another country.
2. Provide military aid.
3. Accept immigrants or refugees from other countries.
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

Comity is usually used to describe the actions of states of the Union in relation to the federal government. Below is how the U.S. Supreme Court describes the sovereignty of the states, and the fact that it cannot compel states to do anything in relation to each other:

“This court has declined to take jurisdiction of suits between states to compel the performance of obligations which, if the states had been independent nations, could not have been enforced judicially, but only through the political departments of their governments. Thus, in Kentucky v. Dennison, 24 How. 66, where the state of Kentucky, by her governor [127 U.S. 265, 289] applied to this court, in the exercise of its original jurisdiction, for a writ of mandamus to the governor of Ohio to compel him to surrender a fugitive from justice, this court, while holding that the case was a controversy between two states, decided that it had no authority to grant the writ.”

The U.S. Supreme Court also said that “comity” may not be employed to enlarge the powers of the federal government in relation to the states.

Where Congress exceeds its authority relative to the States, therefore, the departure from the constitutional plan cannot be ratified by the "consent" of state officials. An analogy to the separation of powers among the branches of the Federal Government clarifies this point. The Constitution’s division of power among the three branches is violated where one branch invades the territory of another, whether or not the encroached-upon branch approves the encroachment. In Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 118 -137 (1976), for instance, the Court held that Congress had infringed the President’s appointment power, despite the fact that the President himself had manifested his consent to the statute that caused the infringement by signing it into law. See National League of Cities v. Usery, 426 U.S. at 946, n. 12. In INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919, 944 -959 (1983), we held that the legislative veto violated the constitutional requirement that legislation be presented to the President, despite Presidents' approval of hundreds of statutes containing a legislative veto provision. See id., at 944-945. The constitutional authority of Congress cannot be expanded by the "consent" of the governmental unit whose domain is thereby narrowed, whether that unit is the Executive Branch or the States.

State officials thus cannot consent to the enlargement of the powers of Congress beyond those enumerated in the Constitution. Indeed, the facts of this case raise the possibility that powerful incentives might lead both federal and state officials to view departures from the federal structure to be in their personal interests. Most citizens recognize the need for radioactive waste disposal sites, but few want sites near their homes. As a result, while it would be well within the authority of either federal or state officials to choose where the disposal sites will be, it is likely to be in the political interest of each individual official to avoid being held accountable to the voters for the choice of location. If [505 U.S. 144, 183] a federal official is faced with the alternatives of choosing a location or directing the States to do it, the official may well prefer the latter, as a means of shifting responsibility for the eventual decision. If a state official is faced with the same set of alternatives - choosing a location or having Congress direct the choice of a location - the state official may also prefer the latter, as it may permit the avoidance of personal responsibility. The interests of public officials thus may not coincide with the public's interest. Where state officials purport to submit to the direction of Congress in this manner, federalism is hardly being advanced."

[New York v. United States, 505 U.S. 144 (1992)]

A departure from the Constitutional plan for taxation therefore cannot be ratified by the acquiescence or “comity” of a state without violating the Constitution. Only We the People individually and personally can ratify such a departure. When they do this, their consent must be fully informed and procured completely absent duress. The only way we can ratify such a departure as a “state” or nation is therefore to amend the Constitution. We cannot write a “code”, such as the Internal Revenue Code, that circumvents the Constitution, breaks down the separation of powers, and does so through compulsion or enforcement. Consequently, we cannot lawfully:

1. Write a “private law”, command or allow our public servants to deceive the public by portraying it as a “public law”, and then empower an independent contractor, which is not an agency of the federal government, such as the IRS, to enforce it against those who do not consent individually to obey it absent duress.
2. Allow our state government to look the other way and acquiesce to abuses or usurpations by the federal government.

Below is how the U.S. Supreme Court describes how “comity” can affect the tax system, from a case where it was talking about Social Security. Notice they don’t mention anything about “consent” of the state, or where or how that consent is procured from the state or the individual who might be the subject of the tax. In that sense, they have violated the very purpose of the Constitution, which is to respect and protect the requirement for consent in every human interaction:

A nondiscriminatory taxing measure that operates to defy the cost of a federal program by recovering a fair approximation of each beneficiary’s share of the cost is surely no more offensive to the constitutional scheme than is either a tax on the income earned by state employees or a tax on a State’s sale of bottled water. 18 The National Government’s interest in being compensated for its expenditures is only too apparent. More significant perhaps, such revenue measures by their very nature cannot possess the attributes that led Mr. Chief Justice Marshall to proclaim that the power to tax is the power [435 U.S. 444, 461] to destroy. There is no danger that such measures will not be based on benefits conferred or that they will function as regulatory devices unduly burdening essential state activities. It is, of course, the case that a revenue provision that forces a State to pay its own way when performing an essential function will increase the cost of the state activity. But Graves v. New York ex rel. O’Keefe, and its precursors, see 305 U.S., at 483 and the cases cited in n. 3, teach that an economic burden on traditional state functions without more is not a sufficient basis for sustaining a claim of immunity. Indeed, since the Constitution explicitly requires States to bear similar economic burdens when engaged in essential operations, see U.S. Const., Amdts. 5, 14; Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Mahon, 260 U.S. 393 (1922) (State must pay just compensation when it “takes” private property for a public purpose); U.S. Const., Art. I, 10, cl. 1; United States Trust Co. v. New Jersey, 431 U.S. 1 (1977) (even when burdensome, a State often must comply with the obligations of its contracts), it cannot be seriously contended that federal exactions from the States of their fair share of the cost of specific benefits they receive from federal programs offend the constitutional scheme.

Our decisions in analogous context support this conclusion. We have repeatedly held that the Federal Government may impose appropriate conditions on the use of federal property or privileges and may require that state instrumentalities comply with conditions that are reasonably related to the federal interest in particular national projects or programs. See, e.g., Ivanhoe Irrigation Dist. v. McCracken, 357 U.S. 273, 294-296 (1958); Oklahoma v. Civil Service Comm’n, 330 U.S. 127, 142-144 (1947); United States v. San Francisco, 410 U.S. 16 (1974); cf. National League of Cities v. Usery, 426 U.S. 833, 853 (1976); Fry v. United States, 421 U.S. 542 (1975). A requirement that States, like all other users, pay a portion of the costs of the benefits they enjoy from federal programs is surely permissible since it is closely related to the [435 U.S. 444, 462] federal interest in recovering costs from those who benefit and since it effects no greater interference with state sovereignty than do the restrictions which this Court has approved.

A clearly analogous line of decisions is that interpreting provisions in the Constitution that also place limitations on the taxing power of government. See, e.g., U.S. Const., Art. I, 8, cl. 3 (restricting power of States to tax interstate commerce); 10, cl. 3 (prohibiting any state tax that operates “to impose a charge for the privilege of entering, trading in, or lying in a port.” Clyde Mallory Lines v. Alabama ex rel. State Docks Comm’n, 296 U.S. 261, 265-266 (1935)). These restrictions, like the implied state tax immunity, exist to protect constitutionally valued activity from the undue and perhaps destructive interference that could result from certain taxing measures. The restriction implicit in the Commerce Clause is designed to prohibit States from burdening the free flow of commerce, see generally Complete Auto Transit, Inc. v. Brady, 430 U.S. 274 (1977), whereas the prohibition against duties on the privilege of entering ports is intended specifically to guard against local hindrances to trade and commerce by vessels. See Puckett Co. v. Keokuk, 95 U.S. 80, 85 (1877).

Our decisions implementing these constitutional provisions have consistently recognized that the interests protected by these Clauses are not offended by revenue measures that operate only to compensate a government for benefits supplied. See, e.g., Clyde Mallory Lines v. Alabama, supra (flat fee charged each vessel entering port upheld because charge operated to defray cost of harbor policing); Evansville-Vanderburgh Airport Authority v. Delta Airlines, Inc., 405 U.S. 707 (1972) ($1 head tax on explaining commercial air passengers upheld under the Commerce Clause because designed to recoup cost of airport facilities). A governmental body has an obvious interest in making those who specifically benefit from its services pay the cost and, provided that the charge is structured to compensate the government for the benefit conferred, there can be no danger of the kind of interference [435 U.S. 444, 463] with constitutionally valued activity that the Clauses were designed to prohibit.

[Massachusetts v. United States, 435 U.S. 444 (1978)]

The U.S. Supreme Court also agreed that one of the may consequences of the Social Security system was to break down the separation of powers between the states and the federal government and allow the feds to coerce and intimidate the states. This result alone ought be sufficient reason not to participate in the system:

“A state may enter into contracts; but a state cannot, by contract or statute, surrender the execution, or a share in the execution, of any of its governmental powers either to a sister state or to the federal government, any more than the federal government can surrender the control of any of its governmental powers to a foreign nation. The power to tax is vital and fundamental, and, in the highest degree, governmental in character. Without it, the state could not exist. Fundamental also, and no less important, is the governmental power to expend the moneys realized from taxation, and exclusively to administer the laws in respect of the character of the tax and the methods of laying and collecting it and expending the proceeds.

The people of the United States, by their Constitution, have affirmed a division of internal governmental powers between the federal government and the governments of the several states—committing to the first its powers by express grant and necessary implication; to the latter, or [301 U.S. 548, 611] to the people, by reservation, the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States.” The Constitution thus affirms the complete supremacy and independence of the state within the field of its powers. Carter v. Carter Coal Co., 298 U.S. 238, 295, 56 S.Ct. 855, 865. The federal government has no more authority to invade that field than the state has to invade the exclusive field of national governmental powers; for, in the oft-repeated words of this court in Texas v. White, 7 Wall. 700, 725, “the preservation of the States, and the maintenance of their governments, are as much within the design and care of the Constitution as the preservation of the Union and the maintenance of the National government. The necessity of preserving each from every form of illegitimate intrusion or interference on the part of the other is so imperative as to require this court, when its judicial power is properly invoked, to view with a careful and discriminating eye any legislation challenged as constituting such an intrusion or interference. See South Carolina v. United States, 199 U.S. 437, 448, 26 S.Ct. 110, 4 Ann. Cas. 737.

By these various provisions of the act, the federal agencies are authorized to supervise and hamper the administrative powers of the state to a degree which not only does not comport with the dignity of a quasi sovereign state—a matter with which we are not judicially concerned—but which dens to it that supremacy and freedom from external interference in respect of its affairs which the Constitution contemplates—a matter of very definite judicial concern. I refer to some, though by no means all, of the cases in point.

In the License Cases, 5 how. 504, 588, Mr. Justice McLean said that the federal government was supreme within the scope of its delegated powers, and the state governments equally supreme in the exercise of the powers not delegated nor inhibited to them; that the states exercise their powers over everything connected with their social and internal condition; and that over these subjects the federal government had no power. 'They appertain to the State sovereignty as exclusively as powers exclusively delegated appertain to the general government.'

In Tarble's Case, 13 Wall. 397, Mr. Justice Field, after pointing out that the general government and the state are separate and distinct sovereignties, acting separately and independently of each other within their respective spheres, said that, except in one particular, they stood in the same independent relation to each other as they would if their authority embraced distinct territories. The one particular referred to is that of the supremacy of the authority of the United States in case of conflict between the two.

In Farrington v. Tennessee, 95 U.S. 679, 685, this court said, 'Yet every State has a sphere of action where the authority of the national government may not intrude. Within that domain the State is as if the union were not. Such are the checks and balances in our complicated but wise system of State and national polity."

The powers exclusively given to the federal government,' it was said in Worcester v. State of Georgia, 6 Pet. 515, 570, 'are limitations upon the state authorities. But [301 U.S. 548, 615] with the exception of these limitations, the states are supreme; and their sovereignty can be no more invaded by the action of the general government, than the action of the state governments can arrest or obstruct the course of the national power.'

The force of what has been said is not broken by an acceptance of the view that the state is not coerced by the federal law. The effect of the dual distribution of powers is completely to deny to the states whatever is granted exclusively to the nation, and, conversely, to deny to the nation whatever is reserved exclusively to the states. The determination of the Framers Convention and the ratifying conventions to preserve complete and unimpaired state self-government in all matters not committed to the general government is one of the plainest facts which emerges from the history of their deliberations. And adherence to that determination is incumbent equally upon the federal government and the states. State powers can neither be appropriated on the one hand nor abdicated on the other.' Carter v. Carter Coal Co., supra, 298 U.S. 238, at page 295, 56 S.Ct. 855, 866. The purpose of the Constitution is that regard does not admit of doubt or qualification; and it can be thwarted no more by voluntary surrender from within than by invasion from without.

Nor may the constitutional objection suggested be overcome by the expectation of public benefit resulting from the federal participation authorized by the act. Such expectation, if voiced in support of a proposed constitutional enactment, would be quite proper for the consideration of the legislative body. But, as we said in the Carter Case, supra, 298 U.S. 238, at page 291, 56 S.Ct. 855, 864, 'nothing is more certain than that beneficent aims, however great or well directed, can never serve in lieu of constitutional power.' Moreover, everything which the act seeks to do for the relief of unemployment might have been accomplished, as is done by this same act for the relief of the misfortunes of old age, with—[301 U.S. 548, 616] out obliging the state to surrender, or share with another government, any of its powers.

If we are to survive as the United States, the balance between the powers of the nation and those of the states must be maintained. There is grave danger in permitting it to dip in either direction, danger if there were no other—in the precedent thereby set for further departures from the equipoise. The threat implicit in the present encroachment upon the administrative functions of the states is that greater encroachments, and encroachments upon other functions, will follow.

For the foregoing reasons, I think the judgment below should be reversed."

[Steward Machine Company v. Davis, 301 U.S. 548 (1937)]

5.4.2.4 Positive Law
There are only two types of governments: government by consent (contract) or government by force/fraud. All governments that operate by force or fraud rather than consent are terrorist governments. The Bible describes all such terrorist governments as “The Beast” in Rev. 19:19. The Declaration of Independence says that all just powers of the United States government derive from the consent of the governed.

“That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.”

[Declaration of Independence]

Absent individual, explicit, and voluntary consent for everything that government does in this country, a law may not be enforced and may not adversely affect our Constitutional rights to life, liberty or property. In a Republic of free and sovereign People who have rights, any government that disregards the requirement for consent is essentially acting unjustly and involving itself in organized crime, extortion, and terrorism. A law which is enforceable because the people either individually or collectively consented explicitly to it is called positive law:

“Positive law. Law actually and specifically enacted or adopted [consented to] by proper authority for the government of an organized jural society. See also Legislation.”

“Proper authority” above is the people’s elected representatives, because all power in this country derives from We The People.

“In the United States, sovereignty resides in the people...the Congress cannot invoke sovereign power of the People to override their will as thus declared.”

“Sovereignty itself is, of course, not subject to law, for it is the author and source of law...While sovereign powers are delegated to...the government, sovereignty itself remains with the people.”

[Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356 (1886)]

“The words 'people of the United States' and 'citizens,' are synonymous terms, and mean the same thing. They both describe the political body who, according to our republican institutions, form the sovereignty, and who hold the power and conduct the government through their representatives. They are what we familiarly call the 'sovereign people,' and every citizen is one of this people, and a constituent member of this sovereignty, ...”

[Boyd v. State of Nebraska, 143 U.S. 135 (1892)]

There is only one exception to the above rule, which is that a person who commits a crime that injures the rights of a fellow sovereign thereby surrenders his own rights because he has broken his covenant with God to “love his neighbor” (see Gal 5:14), which is one of only two great commandments in the Bible (see Matt. 22:39, Bible). Such an exception as this, however, does not at all apply to so-called “crimes” within the Internal Revenue Code, because no one’s “rights” are adversely impacted by those who refuse to pay such government “extortion under the color of law”. If you choose not to consent to become a “taxpayer”, you may cause other “taxpayers” to lose “privileges” (government socialist handouts) by refusing to participate, but other “taxpayers” don’t lose any of their constitutional rights if you refuse to subsidize the evil and socialism that is embodied in the Infernal Revenue Code. In fact, the “crimes” listed in 26 U.S.C. §§7201 to 7217 are not even “tax crimes”, because:

1. Those who are “nontaxpayers” are not subject to it. We’ll cover this further later.
2. There is no statute which creates a liability and there is no evidence of consent to abide by it. Therefore, it is not law for those who have not consented in some way, who therefore become “nontaxpayers”. See:

   Your Rights as a “Nontaxpayer.”, IRS Publication 1a, Form #08.008

   http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

3. Subtitle A of the Internal Revenue does not describe a “tax” as legally defined by the Supreme Court, because revenues collected are being paid to private people who are not federal "employees" or a “public purpose”. See:

   Why Your Government is Either a Thief or You are a “Public Officer” for Income Tax Purposes, Form #05.008

   http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

When federal courts choose to illegally enforce the criminal provisions of the Internal Revenue Code, which is not positive law, against those in states of the Union who are not in fact and in deed “public officers” engaged in a “trade or business” within the United States government, they are prosecuting people for what is called “malum prohibitum acts”. They are also involved in treason against the Constitution if they acquiesce to or aid in the prosecution of private parties who are not in fact federal “employees”, who live in states of the Union and outside of federal territorial jurisdiction.

Malum prohibitum. A wrong prohibited; a thing which is wrong because prohibited; an act which is not inherently immoral, but becomes so because its commission is expressly forbidden by positive law; an act involving an illegality resulting from positive law. Compare Malum in se."

Treason, by the way, is punishable by death under 18 U.S.C. §2381. See section 51.2 earlier for a complete explanation of this concept. They are committing treason because they are not enforcing a “tax” as legally defined. “Taxes” can ONLY go to support public employees on official business and cannot constitutionally be used for any other purpose:

‘To lay, with one hand, the power of the government on the property of the citizen, and with the other to bestow it upon favored individuals to aid private enterprises and build up private fortunes, is none the less a robbery because it is done under the forms of law and is called taxation. This is not legislation. It is a decree under legislative forms.

Nor is it taxation. ‘A tax,’ says Webster’s Dictionary, ‘is a rate or sum of money assessed on the person or property of a citizen by government for the use of the nation or State.’ Taxes are burdens or charges imposed by the Legislature upon persons or property to raise money for public purposes. ‘Cooley, Const. Lim., 479.’

[Loan Association v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655 (1874)]

The legislation passed by Congress in pursuance of the authority delegated to it by the Constitution of the United States (which is “positive law”) is organized by subject in the 50 titles of the U.S. Code. Each title of the U.S. Code covers a different subject area. For instance, Title 26 covers Internal Revenue: that is, revenue gathered within the territorial jurisdiction of the federal government, which is limited to the territories and possessions of the United States and the District of Columbia, collectively called the “federal zone” throughout this book.

Within the U.S. Code, certain titles are enacted into “positive law” while others are not. Those that are not enacted into positive law may safely be regarded as “private law”. Those that are should be regarded as “public law”. The legislative notes under 1 U.S.C. §204 list which Titles are positive law and which are not. Only those titles that are enacted into positive law have the potential to become binding generally upon all legal “persons” within the territorial jurisdiction of the federal government. However, before this can happen, an agency of the federal government within the Executive Branch must choose to step forward under the leadership of the President of the United States and voluntarily consent to take responsibility for executing the statute by writing implementing regulations giving the statutes force and effect, and publishing those enforcement regulations in the Federal Register for public review and comment. Below is a definition of the Federal Register from Black’s Law Dictionary:

Federal Register. The Federal Register, published daily, is the medium for making available to the public Federal agency regulations and other legal documents of the executive branch. These documents cover a wide range of Government activities. An important function of the Federal Register is that it includes proposed changes (rules, regulations, standards, etc.) of governmental agencies. Each proposed change published carries an invitation for any citizen or group to participate in the consideration of the proposed regulation through the submission of written data, views, or arguments, and sometimes by oral presentations. Such regulations and rules as finally approved appear therefore in the Code of Federal Regulations.”

[Black’s Law Dictionary, Fifth Edition]

The above description explains that the Federal Register also serves as the means by which notice is given to the general public that laws by Congress can and will be enforced by rules and regulations that may adversely affect their rights. “Due notice” to all of the affected parties is considered an essential and fundamental element of Constitutional “due process”. Here is how the U.S. Supreme Court describes it:

“An elementary and fundamental requirement of due process in any proceeding which is to be accorded finality is notice reasonably calculated, under the circumstances, to apprise interested [and affected] parties of the pendency of the action and afford them an opportunity to present their objections.”

These regulations are then subsequently published in the Code of Regulations (hereafter C.F.R.) after they are published in the Federal Register. The C.F.R. then becomes the means by which Federal Government employees are informed of the limits of their conduct when implementing the laws they are authorized and required to enforce under the authority of the Constitution. The public record built during the public review process then becomes the means by which the courts enforce the regulations against the public, because it helps establish legislative intent of both the agency and the public.
44 U.S.C. §1505(a) (which is positive law) requires that every document or order which has “general applicability and legal effect” to all persons must be printed in the Federal Register. In other words, if the statute and the regulations that implement it haven’t been published in the Federal Register, then the statute is unenforceable against the general public. This means that all positive laws, including both the statutes and the regulations that implement them, must appear in the Federal Register before one can reasonably conclude that the general public has been properly placed on notice about a law according to which they must control their conduct.

TITILE 44 > CHAPTER 15 > Sec. 1505.
Sec. 1505. - Documents to be published in Federal Register

(a) Proclamations and Executive Orders; Documents Having General Applicability and Legal Effect; Documents Required To Be Published by Congress.

There shall be published in the Federal Register -

(1) Presidential proclamations and Executive orders, except those not having general applicability and legal effect or effective only against Federal agencies or persons in their capacity as officers, agents, or employees thereof;

(2) documents or classes of documents that the President may determine from time to time have general applicability and legal effect; and

(3) documents or classes of documents that may be required so to be published by Act of Congress.

For the purposes of this chapter every document or order which prescribes a penalty has general applicability and legal effect.

If a positive law statute was passed by the Legislative branch for which no agency in the Executive Branch ever claimed responsibility and for which no implementing regulations were ever published in the Federal Register, that statute would be a “dead law” that effectively is unenforceable against anything but federal employees. Note that paragraph (a)(1) in the above statute says no implementing regulations are required in the context of federal officers, agents, or employees.

"...the Act's civil and criminal penalties attach only upon violation of the regulation promulgated by the Secretary; if the Secretary were to do nothing, the Act itself would impose no penalties on anyone...The Government urges that since only those who violate these regulations [not the Code] may incur civil or criminal penalties, it is the actual regulations issued by the Secretary of the Treasury, and not the broad authorizing language of the statute, which are to be tested against the standards of the Fourth Amendment; and that when so tested they are valid."

An example of such “dead laws” are the campaign finance reforms passed during the early 2000’s by Congress. They are not enforced. Does that surprise you? There is one important exception to these general rules for positive law, and that exception is that any act of Congress that affects only federal employees in the Executive branch acting only in their official capacity need not be published in the Federal Register and need not have implementing regulations in order to be enforceable. This exception is found in 44 U.S.C. §1505(a)(1), which we showed above. This same exception also appears a second time in 5 U.S.C. §553(a)(2):

TITLE 5—GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION AND EMPLOYEES
PART I—THE AGENCIES GENERALLY
CHAPTER 5—ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURE
SUBCHAPTER II—ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURE
Sec. 553. Rule making

(a) This section applies, according to the provisions thereof, except to the extent that there is involved—

(1) a military or foreign affairs function of the United States; or

(2) a matter relating to agency management or personnel or to public property, loans, grants, benefits, or contracts.

Some say that while the Internal Revenue Code may not be “positive law”, there ARE or at least MAY BE sections within it that ARE positive law. They will look at the legislative notes on a section of the code and find the Congressional Acts that it references and conclude that because the Act that the section was based on was a positive law and because it was passed
AFTER the Internal Revenue Code was repealed in 1939, then that section and only that section is “positive law”. That may very well be true. However, the government has the burden of proving in each case, usually as the moving party, that the section they are citing is positive law for each case or instance where they use it. To do otherwise would be to violate due process of law and disrespect the requirement for consent in every aspect of government.

1 U.S.C. §204 describes the applicability of statutes within the U.S. Code based on whether they are “positive law”, which we will now show below. We have broken 1 U.S.C. §204(a) into two clauses, with each one numbered in the cite below. Everything after the “[1]” would be clause 1 and everything after the “[2]” would be clause 2.

I U.S.C. §204

Sec. 204. - Codes and Supplements as evidence of the laws of United States and District of Columbia; citation of Codes and Supplements

In all courts, tribunals, and public offices of the United States, at home or abroad, of the District of Columbia, and of each State, Territory, or insular possession of the United States -

(a) United States Code. -

[1] The matter set forth in the edition of the Code of Laws of the United States current at any time shall, together with the then current supplement, if any, establish prima facie [by presumption] the laws of the United States, general and permanent in their nature, in force on the day preceding the commencement of the session following the last session the legislation of which is included:

[2] Provided, however, That whenever titles of such Code shall have been enacted into positive law the text thereof shall be legal evidence of the laws therein contained, in all the courts of the United States, the several States, and the Territories and insular possessions of the United States.

The above statute shows three jurisdictions: (1) Clause 1 shows the “United States”, which is defined as the District of Columbia under 4 U.S.C. §72; (2) Clause 2 adds the States of the Union and Territories to the jurisdiction. We have therefore created a table to show each of the three jurisdictions and the applicability of “positive law” and “prima facie law” in each of the three cases based on the foregoing discussion.

An example of wording that can be used to make law positive is in the Fifth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. By starting out “No person…” it is clear that no one is excluded. In statutes, a phrase such as “any person is required” is used to indicate that the statute applies to anyone. When Congress omits the word “is” from such a phrase, making it read “any person required” (as in 26 U.S.C. §7203), it is saying that this law only applies to a specific person. This is not a positive law, it is a “special law” or “private law” which becomes “law” by virtue of the consent of that specific individual. It only applies to the person who exercised his personal choice (sovereignty) to become effectively connected with it by accepting some duty that made him a “person required,” i.e. the person in section 7343 of the I.R. Code who is under a duty to perform the act in respect of which the violation occurs.

Acquiescence to the legal consequence of non-positive law legislation is possible only when a person makes himself subject to that legislation, i.e. a Federal Government “employee” or contractor, as to income belonging to the U.S. Government. Once a person is effectively connected with a law, he is required to obey it. If a person is not “effectively connected” with such a law, a violation of that law is not legally possible. For example, it is impossible for a person who is not connected with the U.S. Government’s (called a “trade or business”) income or within federal jurisdiction to be under a legal obligation or condition to perform some act or duty with regard to such income. When no legal duty exists, the consequences of section 7203 cannot be legally forced upon him.

Lastly, if you are engaged in litigation against “the Beast”, be very careful in your use of the word “law”. Anyone who refers to any code section within the I.R.C. as “law” during a court trial:

1. Is making a “presumption” that cannot be supported with evidence. All “presumption” is a violation of due process in the legal realm. An unchallenged presumption becomes fact in any legal proceeding. Watch out!

“The principle that there is a presumption of innocence in favor of the accused is the undisputed law, axiomatic and elementary, and its enforcement lies at the foundation of the administration of our criminal law.”
[Coffin v. United States, 156 U.S. 432, 453 (1895)]

“It is apparent, this court said in the Bailey Case (219 U.S. 239, 31 S.Ct. 145, 151) ‘that a constitutional prohibition cannot be transgressed indirectly by the creation of a statutory presumption any more than it can be violated by direct enactment. The power to create presumptions is not a means of escape from constitutional restrictions.’”
[Heiner v. Donnan, 285 U.S. 312 (1932)]

Thus the Court held that presumptions, while often valid (and some of which, I think, like the presumption of death based on long unexplained absence, may perhaps be even salutary in effect), must not be allowed to stand where they abridge or deny a specific constitutional guarantee. It is one thing to rely on a presumption to justify conditional administration of the estate of a person absent without explanation for seven years, see Cunius v. Reading School District, 198 U.S. 458; compare Scott v. McNeal, 154 U.S. 34; it would be quite another to use the presumption of death from seven years’ absence to convict a man of murder. I do not think it can be denied that use of the statutory presumptions in the case before [380 U.S. 63, 81] us at the very least seriously impaired Gainey’s constitutional right to have a jury weigh the facts of his case without any congressional interference through predetermination of what evidence would be sufficient to prove the facts necessary to convict in a particular case. [.. .]

For all the foregoing reasons, I think that these two statutory presumptions by which Congress has tried to relieve the Government of its burden of proving a man guilty and to take away from courts and juries the function and duty of deciding guilt or innocence according to the evidence before them, unconstitutionally encroach on the functions of courts and deny persons accused of crime rights which our Constitution guarantees them. The most important and most crucial action the courts take in trying people for crime is to resolve facts. This is a judicial, not a legislative, function. I think that in passing these two sections Congress stepped over its constitutionally limited bounds and encroached on the constitutional power of courts to try cases. I would therefore affirm the judgment of the court below and grant Gainey a new trial by judge and jury with all the protections accorded by the law of the land.

[United States v. Gainey, 380 U.S. 63 (1965)]

Legislation declaring that proof of one fact of group of facts shall constitute prima facie evidence of an ultimate fact in issue is valid if there is a rational connection between what is proved and what is to be inferred. A prima facie presumption casts upon the person against whom it is applied the duty of going forward with his evidence on the particular point to which the presumption relates. A statute creating a presumption that is arbitrary, or that operates to deny a fair opportunity to repel it, violates the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Legislative fiat may not take the place of fact in the judicial determination of issues involving life, liberty, or property. Manley v. Georgia, 279 U.S. 458, 49 S.Ct. 215, 73 L.Ed., and cases cited.

[Western and Atlantic Railroad v. Henderson, 279 U.S. 639 (1929)]

> "[It is unconstitutional for a legislature to remove from the jury the assessment of facts that increase the prescribed range of penalties to which a criminal defendant is exposed. It is equally clear that such facts must be established by proof beyond a reasonable doubt."

2. Has transformed “prima facie evidence” of law into legally admissible evidence if unchallenged. See 1 U.S.C. §204, legislative notes, which says that the I.R.C. is “prima facie” evidence, which means “presumed to be true” unless rebutted.

3. Is implying that you, the litigant, gave your consent in some form to be bound by the legal provision which they are referring to. This makes you look like a bad American and a criminal if you don’t challenge their presumption.

4. When their presumption of the existence of “law” is challenged, the moving party must shoulder the burden of showing what form the consent was given. If they do not meet the burden of proof, then you should object to their use of the word “law” in any and all cases. You should refer to all statements about such “law” as “hearsay” until proven with other than “prima facie evidence”.

Let us now summarize some important things we have learned about positive law:

1. Whether a statute is positive law is helpful in establishing WHERE it may lawfully be enforced. Statutes which are not positive law may not be lawfully enforced in states of the Union.

2. Statutes which are not positive law may be enforced only in the District of Columbia.

3. The Internal Revenue Code is not positive law. Therefore, it is “law” for those subject to it within the limits of the general sovereignty of the national government, but may not be lawfully enforced inside states of the Union, except possibly against “federal employees”, who according to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 17(b) are subject to the laws of the District of Columbia when acting in a representative capacity for the federal corporation called the “United States”, and which is defined in 28 U.S.C. §3002(15)(A). That federal corporation is a “U.S. citizen” under 8 U.S.C. §1401, and so they become “U.S. citizens” when representing the corporation as federal “employees”.

4.2.5 Justice

The whole notion of “justice” implies the requirement of positive law in all dealings with the public. The only way that positive law can be enacted is through the consent of those it is enforced against, which the Declaration of Independence calls “the consent of the governed”. Below is a definition of “justice” from Easton’s Bible Dictionary which clearly proves this:
We would also add to the above definition that:

1. Enforcing anything BUT “positive law”.
2. Enforcing anything unequally against one group or class of persons more than another.
3. Taking more tax as a percentage from one group than another.

...equates with INjustice or the OPPOSITE of justice, in our view. When we look up the definition of “justice” in the legal dictionary, however, lawyers try to hide its relationship to “positive law”. Below is the definition of “justice” from Black’s Law Dictionary, Sixth Edition:

Justice. n. Title given to judges, particularly judges of U.S. and state supreme courts, and as well to judges of appellate courts. The U.S. Supreme Court, and most state supreme courts are composed of a chief justice and several associate justices.

Proper administration of laws. In jurisprudence, the constant and perpetual disposition of legal matters or disputes to render every man his due.

Commutative justice concerns obligations as between persons (e.g., in exchange of goods) and requires proportionate equality in dealings of person to person; Distributive justice concerns obligations of the community to the individual, and requires fair disbursement of common advantages and sharing of common burdens; Social justice concerns obligations of individual to community and its end is the common good.

In Feudal law, jurisdiction; judicial cognizance of causes or offenses. High justice was the jurisdiction or right of trying crimes of every kind, even the highest. This was a privilege claimed and exercised by the great lords or barons of the middle ages. Law justice was jurisdiction of petty offenses.

See also Miscarriage of justice; Obstructing justice.

Apparently, only pastors can be trusted to tell the truth about the meaning of “justice”, because Pharisees/lawyers with Mercedes payments to make aren’t going to undermine their livelihood and make their job moot by telling the truth. Common to both the ecclesiastical and the legal dictionary definitions of “justice” above, however, is the notion of “rendering to every man his due”. The world owes NOTHING to any man. As we said at the beginning of section 4.1 earlier:

“Don’t go around saying the world owes you a living. The world owes you nothing. It was here first.”
[Mark Twain]

The only thing that can be “owed” or “due” to a man is that which he has earned or procured under contract to some other free agent. What is owed to him is considered “property”, and the government’s most fundamental obligation is to protect our right to property. Therefore, the whole notion of “justice” originates from the exercise of our right to contract. All law, in fact, is an extension of our right to contract, as we said in the previous sections, because it is created with our consent, behaves as a contract, and conveys to us certain rights and benefits that courts have a sacred duty to protect. Even the U.S. Supreme Court recognized this fact, when it said:

“Independent of these views, there are many considerations which lead to the conclusion that the power to impair contracts [either the Constitution or the Holy Bible], by direct action to that end, does not exist with the general [federal] government. In the first place, one of the objects of the Constitution, expressed in its preamble, was the establishment of justice, and what that meant in its relations to contracts is not left, as was justly said by the late Chief Justice, in Hepburn v. Griswold, to inference or conjecture. As he observes, at the time the Constitution was undergoing discussion in the convention, the Congress of the Confederation was engaged in framing the ordinance for the government of the Northwestern Territory, in which certain articles of compact were established between the people of the original States and the people of the Territory, for the purpose, as expressed in the instrument, of extending the fundamental principles of civil and religious liberty, upon which the States, their laws and constitutions, were erected. By that ordinance it was declared, that, in the just preservation of rights and property, no law ought ever to be made, or have force in the said Territory, that shall, in any manner, interfere with or affect private contracts or engagements bona fide and without fraud previously formed. The same provision, adds the Chief Justice, found more condensed expression in the prohibition upon the States [in Article I, Section 10 of the Constitution] against impairing the obligation of contracts, which has ever been recognized as an efficient safeguard against injustice; and though the prohibition is not applied in terms to the government of the United States, he expressed the opinion, speaking for himself and the majority of the court at the time, that it was clear that those who framed and those who adopted the Constitution intended that the spirit of this prohibition should pervade the entire body of legislation, and that the justice which the Constitution was ordained to establish was not thought by them to be compatible with legislation [or judicial precedent] of an opposite tendency.” 8 Wall. 623. [99 U.S. 700, 765] Similar views are found expressed in the opinions of other judges of this court.”

[Sinkling Fund Cases, 99 U.S. 700 (1878)]

The reason the U.S. Supreme Court had to state the above is that if it did not, it would be sanctioning public servants to violate the right to contract of We the People, by disrespecting the Constitution itself, which is a contract. The Supreme Court also recognized that state Constitutions are “contracts” as well, when it said:

“A state can no more impair the obligation of a contract by her organic law [constitution] than by legislative enactment; for her constitution is a law within the meaning of the contract clause of the national constitution. Railroad Co. v. [115 U.S. 650, 673] McClure, 10 Wall. 511; Ohio Life Ins. & T. Co. v. Debolt, 16 How. 429; Seldg. St. & Const. Law, 637 And the obligation of her contracts is as fully protected by that instrument against impairment by legislation as are contracts between individuals exclusively. State v. Wilson, 7 Cranch, 164; Providence Bank v. Billings, 4 Pet. 514; Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. 1; Woodruff v. Trappnal, 10 How. 190; Wolff v. New Orleans, 103 U.S. 358,”

[New Orleans Gas Company v. Louisiana Light Company, 115 U.S. 650 (1885)]

You can also electronically search, as we have, the entire 50+ volume legal encyclopedia called American Jurisprudence 2d for a definition of “justice” and you will not find one. Think about just how absurd this is: The entire purpose of law, government, and the legal profession is justice, as revealed by the founding fathers in Federalist Paper #51:

“Justice is the end of government. It is the end of civil society. It ever has been, and ever will be pursued, until it be obtained, or until liberty be lost in the pursuit.”

[James Madison, The Federalist No. 51 (1788)]

...and yet the largest legal reference and encyclopedia on law in the country, American Jurisprudence 2d, doesn’t even define exactly what “justice” is as revealed here! The foundation of justice is enforcing ONLY positive law. The foundation of positive law is consent. Therefore, to ignore the requirement for positive law is to ignore the requirement for “consent of the governed”, which is the very foundation of our system of government starting with the Declaration of Independence and going down from there. Here, in fact, is how the U.S. Supreme Court describes the relationship of the Declaration of Independence to our system of jurisprudence:

“No language is more worthy of frequent and thoughtful consideration than these words of Mr. Justice Matthews, speaking for this court, in Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 556, 369, 6 S.Sup.Ct. 1064, 1071: ‘When we consider the nature and the theory of our institutions of government, the principles upon which they are supposed to rest, and review the history of their development, we are constrained to conclude that they do not mean to leave room for the play and action of purely personal and arbitrary power.’ The first official action of this nation declared the foundation of government in these words: ‘We hold these truths to be self-evident, [165 U.S. 150, 160] that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.’ While such declaration of principles may not have the force of organic law, or be made the basis of judicial decision as to the limits of right and duty, and while in all cases referenced must be had to the organic law of the nation for such limits, yet the latter is but the body and the letter of which the former is the thought and the spirit, and it is always safe to read the letter of the constitution in the spirit of the Declaration of Independence. No duty rests more imperatively upon the courts than the enforcement of those constitutional provisions intended to secure that equality of rights which is the foundation of free government.”

[Gulf, C. & S.F.R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U.S. 150 (1897)]

Ignoring the requirement for positive law in all interactions of the government with its citizens and subjects is therefore INjustice, not justice. Now do you understand Jesus’ condemnation of the Pharisees/Lawyers, when he said:

“Woe to you, scribes and Pharisees [lawyers], hypocrites! For you pay tithe of mint and anise and cummin, and have neglected the weightier matters of the [God’s] law: justice and mercy and faith. These you ought to have done [FIRST], without leaving the others undone.”

[Matthew 23:23, Bible, NKJV]

This is very telling indeed. If lawyers and judges had to admit what REAL justice was and that it consisted of enforcing ONLY “positive law” enacted with the full authority of “consent of the governed”, then they would have to admit that most... of what our present day government does amounts to injustice, because they are implementing that which is not specifically authorized by any public law, and which therefore only applies to those who individually consent to it. To give you just a few examples of private law that is wrongfully enforced as though it were positive public law, consider the following important private laws:

1. Title 42, which contains the Social Security, FICA, and Medicare codes, is not positive law. Therefore, these are strictly voluntary programs that no one can be compelled to participate in, and certainly not those domiciled in a state of the Union. The U.S. Supreme Court confirmed this, when it called Social Security “not coercive”, which means unenforceable unless individual consent is provided:

   "There remain for consideration the contentions that the state act is invalid because its enactment was coerced by the adoption of the Social Security Act, and that it involves an unconstitutional surrender of state power. Even though it be assumed that the exercise of a sovereign power by a state, in other respects valid, may be rendered invalid because of the coercive effect of a federal statute enacted in the exercise of a power granted to the national government, such coercion is lacking here. [301 U.S. 495, 526] It is unnecessary to repeat now those considerations which have led to our decision in the Chas. C. Steward Machine Co. Case, that the Social Security Act has no such coercive effect. As the Social Security Act is not coercive in its operation, the Unemployment Compensation Act cannot be set aside as an unconstitutional product of coercion. The United States and the State of Alabama are not alien governments. They coexist within the same territory. Unemployment within it is their common concern. Together the two statutes now before us embody a cooperative legislative effort by state and national governments for carrying out a public purpose common to both, which neither could fulfill without the cooperation of the other. The Constitution does not prohibit such cooperation."

   [Carmichael v. Southern Coke and Coke Co., 301 U.S. 495 (1937)]

2. Title 50, which contains the Internal Selective Service Act and describes how men may be “drafted”, is not positive law. Therefore, participation is voluntary for people in states of the Union. The only persons it can pertain to are statutory “U.S. citizens” domiciled in the federal zone. See:

   Why You Aren’t Subject to the Draft of Selective Service Program
   [http://famguardian.org/Subjects/Military/Draft/NotSubjectToDraft.htm]

3. Title 26, which is the Internal Revenue Code, is not positive law. Neither has there ever been any attempt by any court that we are aware of to decide which of its provisions are indeed positive law. Therefore, its provisions must be voluntary for everyone, and especially for those domiciled in states of the Union.

   Instead, our public “servants” have turned our government into a money-making corporation (see 28 U.S.C. §3002(15)(A)) intent on maximizing “corporate profit” by plundering the most that it can from people it is supposed to instead be protecting, rather than plundering. They have become PREDATORS, not PROTECTORS.

Lastly, there are only two ways that courts can lawfully ignore the requirement for “consent of the governed”. Those two ways are:

1. To fool you into signing away your rights via a contract or to involve yourself in some act that creates a presumption that you waived your rights. Most often, this method relies on some government benefit program such as Social Security to make you a federal “employee”. Participating in such benefit programs makes participation in federal taxation “quasi-contractual”, as the Supreme Court calls it. See Milwaukee v. White, 296 U.S. 268 (1935)

2. To kidnap your legal identity and “domicile” and to physically place it in a location where consent of the governed is not legally required. That place is the “federal zone”, as revealed throughout this book. See, for instance, 26 U.S.C. §7408(d) or 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(39), and 26 C.F.R. §301.6109-1(g) for examples of how this type of devious fraud is effected against those domiciled in states of the Union and outside of exclusive/general federal jurisdiction.

As you will learn throughout the remainder of this chapter, both of the above devious and dishonest tactics are used to assault and undermine the sovereignty of the people both in the Internal Revenue Code and daily in the federal courts. Whichever of the above two devious tricks they pull on you, we wish to remind the readers of the following fact, that most people overlook when litigating to defend their rights:

   “In all legal actions bearing upon legal rights, the moving party asserting the right, which is the government in most cases, has the burden of proving with a preponderance of evidence that the defendant gave his consent in some form, or that you maintained a legal domicile in a place where consent was not required. Absent such proof, there is no way to enforce a government regulation or statute that is not positive law against the defendant. Strictly satisfying this requirement in all legal proceedings is the very essence and definition of ‘due process’ as we understand it.”

Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

5.4.2.6 Invisible consent: The weapon of tyrants

We established in the last few sections that only consent in some form can produce a “law” within a Republican government populated by Sovereigns. Where people are Sovereign, the only way you can lose rights is to give them away by exercising your right to contract. The type of consent provided determines the type of “law” that is produced by the act of consenting. Collective consent produces “public law”. Individual consent produces “private law” or “special law”. In section 5.4.2.1, we also showed that within the realm of private law, the consent that produces the individual contractual obligation can be manifested or implied in several ways:

1. By a signed instrument that identifies itself as a contract or agreement. For instance, the W-4 is identified in Treasury Regulations 26 C.F.R. §31.3401(a)-(3)(a) as an “agreement”, which means a private contract between you and uncle Sam to procure “social insurance”. The only people who are allowed to procure social insurance under the Internal Revenue Code are “employees”, so when you procure such insurance, you have to consent to be treated as a federal “employee”. Note, for instance, that 26 U.S.C. Subtitle C, Chapter 21, Subchapter A, which is the FICA program, is entitled “Tax on Employees”, which means you are a federal “employee” if you participate in the program. 5 U.S.C. §552a(a)(13), which is the Privacy Act, also identifies you as “federal personnel”. You become the equivalent of an uncompensated federal “employee” until you begin collecting retirement benefits.

2. By certain behavior which implicates a person as being associated with the contract. For instance:
   2.1. The only people with a legal obligation to file tax returns are those “subject to” and “liable for” something under the Internal Revenue Code. If you are a “nontaxpayer” and you file one of these, you implicitly imply yourself to be a “taxpayer”.
   2.2. The only people who litigate in family court are those who volunteered to be subject to the Family Code. The only people subject to the Family Code in most states are those who obtained a state marriage license. Many states that issue marriage licenses do not recognize common law marriage. This means you can only become subject to the Family Code and government control of your family by volunteering.

3. By applying for a license to engage in a privileged, regulated, or taxable activity. For instance:
   3.1. Applying for a business license implies intent to be subject to business taxation, because a Taxpayer Identification Number is asked for on the application and the application implies that failure to provide the number will result in the application not being granted.
   3.2. Applying for driver’s license implies that you are engaged in revenue-taxable commercial activities upon the public roadways and that you agree to pay taxes upon such activity. That is why you must supply a Social Security Number when you apply for a Driver’s License: so they can enforce the payment of taxes upon your commercial activities.

Of the above three methods of manifesting consent, the last two are not recognized as a voluntary process by the average American, but in fact they are. A government run by covetous tyrants will do everything that it can to make the process of consenting to something invisible or to make the activity look involuntary or unavoidable. Therefore, they will usually elect the last two of the above three methods to in effect force or compel people to become privileged, regulated, and taxable. In most cases, this process of compelled consent is illegal, but few Americans realize why it is illegal and therefore do not prosecute the abuse. Tyrannical governments make the process of procuring consent invisible by:

1. Not mentioning anything about “agreement” or “contract” on the form, but only in the regulations that usually only the agency will read. This is the case of the IRS Form W-4. How many of you knew that the IRS Form W-4 was indeed a binding legal contract?

2. Destroying or interfering with all other alternatives to what the government is offering so that you must accept the government’s offer. For instance
   2.1. Those who do not wish to get a state-issued marriage license may lawfully draft their own private contract and record it at the county recorder. The government’s method for interfering with this process is to refuse to record anything at the recorder’s office other than government-issued applications. In many cases, they will not allow parties to record private contracts, because it undermines their monopoly.
   2.2. Those who do not wish to obtain a Taxpayer Identification Number are often refused in opening bank accounts as a matter of bank policy rather than as a requirement of law. This forces private individuals into becoming taxpayers subject to IRS supervision just in order to conduct their financial affairs.
   2.3. Those who do not wish to pay property tax may elect to quitclaim their property to an unnamed third party and file the quitclaim with the county recorder. At that point, the government cannot enforce the payment of property taxes because it does not know who the property owner is. Some county governments interfere with this tactic by refusing to record such documents, even though this is perfectly legal and an extension of our protected right to... contract. We have a right to keep our private contracts secret from the government if we wish, and to not have the government account for or track who owns our property if we choose.

3. Making false presumptions about the status of a person based on their behavior. For instance:

3.1. If you send in a tax return, then the IRS will “assume” that you must be a “taxpayer” who has income exceeding the exemption amount. Therefore, the penalty provisions of the I.R.C. apply to you. In fact, this is not true if the amount of gross income on the return is zero. You can’t be a taxpayer without taxable income. Without taxable income, regardless of whether you sent in a return or not, you can’t be subject to any other provision of the I.R.C.

3.2. When the IRS sends you a collection notice and you don’t respond, then they will assume that you agree and basically “Default” you. In most cases, you don’t, but they in effect assume that you therefore “consent” to whatever determination they might make about you that results from your failure to respond.

3.3. If your employer sent the IRS a form W-2, then the I.R.S. will assume that you completed a W-4 and are subject to the I.R.C. contract. This is simply not true, and in fact, we show later in this chapter that those who never signed a W-4 should never have W-2’s filed on them and if they do have any such forms, the amount of “wages” must be zero.

3.4. If you apply for a Social Security Number, then you must maintain a “domicile” in the federal zone. This also is untrue, because the SSA Form SS-5 and the SSA Program Operations Manual does not tell the whole truth about what a “U.S. citizen” is, and the fact that Americans born in the states of the Union on nonfederal land are NOT statutory “U.S. citizens” as defined under 8 U.S.C. §1401.

3.5. If you receive an IRS Form 1099, then you must be engaged in a privileged activity called a “trade or business”. This also is untrue, as we explain later in section 5.6.12 and following.

3.6. If you send in an IRS Form 1040, then the IRS will assume that you have a domicile in the District of Columbia, even though you actually live elsewhere. According to IRS Publication 7130, the 1040 form may only be used by either citizens (U.S. citizens under 8 U.S.C. §1401) or residents (aliens), both of whom have a domicile in the “United States”, which is defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) and (a)(10) as the District of Columbia.

4. Inviting you to attend a court hearing at “federal church”, also called “district court”:

4.1. The judge will use non-positive law assume that you are a “taxpayer” unless you prove you are not. See 26 U.S.C. §7491. This is a prejudice to your constitutional rights and according to the Supreme Court, is a violation of due process. See: http://famguardian.org/TaxFreedom/CitesByTopic/Presumption-RPG-Federal.pdf

4.2. If you show up and do not do any of the following, the judge will usually falsely assume that you are subject to exclusive and general federal jurisdiction.

4.2.1. Appear by special rather than general appearance. A general appearance subjects you to the general rather than special jurisdiction of the court.

4.2.2. Do not challenge jurisdiction in your response. Jurisdiction is “assumed” if you do not challenge it.

4.2.3. Do not claim diversity jurisdiction under Article III Section 2 of the Constitution and NOT 28 U.S.C. §1332. Consequently, they will assume you are a domiciliary of the federal zone and that you are subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal government.

4.3. The judge will falsely assume that you are subject to whatever code or title you quote in your pleading. You can’t cite a code or statute that you aren’t subject to.

4.4. The judge will falsely assume that you agree with everything you didn’t explicitly disagree with in your response to the government’s Complaint. This creates a tremendous burden of effort to deflect false government charges if the government’s pleading is long.

Consequently, we must be very aware of the use of the above tactics in procuring or establishing evidence of our consent. We can give consent without even realizing it, if we are ignorant of the law and of legal process and especially the false presumptions which it employs. The key to preserving our God-given rights is to understand how these tactics of procuring “invisible consent” by false presumption operate and to openly and forcefully challenge their exercise on every occasion that they are employed.

If you want to learn more about how corrupted public dis-servants eliminate or avoid the need or requirement for consent, you can go back and read sections 4.3.16 through 4.3.16.9 earlier in this book.

5.4.3 Understanding Administrative Law

By: Ron Branson, Author/Founder J.A.I.L. http://www.jail4judges.org
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

What you are about to read is very provocative and likely to shock, but educate, many of you. Some of you will likely be inspired to do likewise, but just as you see those disclaimers which say, "Experts - do not try this at home," so I say, "Do not try mimicking this at home. Remember, when reality and common sense run up against politics and money, the former two will not register in the courts."

We have all heard the term "Administrative Law." Administrative Law is everywhere in society, and affects everyone of us. But despite our familiarity, how many people really know what "Administrative Law" is? Most people see the word "Law" and automatically think it is some kind of a special law passed by either Congress, our state legislators, or our city councils, etc. No matter where we are in our experience and knowledge of Administrative Law, we all tend to feel deep down inside, "I just do not like it." It is that same sort of feeling when we drive down the highway and pass a police car with its lights flashing, having pulled over a car. You don't naturally think, "Boy, I'm pleased to see that police officer out here on the highway performing us a public service." Rather, you are more likely to think, "Boy, I'm glad it's him he pulled over, and not me." Just as hearing from the Internal Revenue Service, "public service" is probably the last thing that enters your mind.

Administrative Law demands things of us that intrude into our personal lives, our homes, our businesses. It makes us comply with certain codes, inspects us, demands arbitrary taxes and payment in advance of establishing liability, calls us into account before boards composed of political appointees having conflicts of interests, all without the benefit of a trial by jury of your peers.

Administrative Law governs us, to name only a few, in our relation to our children through CPS, our right to contract through the State Contractor's License Board, our businesses through Business Licenses and Worker's Compensation Boards which provide a feeding frenzy for lawyers, and even our pleasurable moments through Fishing and Gaming Licenses, our travel through DMV, etc, etc, and so on without end. In fact, all of our lives in every area is governed by administrative agencies and their "laws," and there is near nothing that is not regulated and licensed by some agency. It would almost seem that life's existence itself is but a special privilege of government that is revocable upon whim. Whatever happened to "...governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed..."?

As some of you may already know, none of the protections set forth in the U.S. Constitution has any application whatsoever upon the enforcement and carrying out of "Administrative Law." So we shout with outrage at the government, "You're violating my Constitutional rights," and you ask, "What gives? Is Administrative Law superior to, and above, the Constitution of the United States, which is the supreme Law of this Land?"

I am now going to pull the veil off the mystery of "Administrative Law," and let you in on a secret that no government wants you to know. Some of you are going to laugh at the simplicity of the matter, once I tell you. "Administrative Law" is not some esoteric law passed by some legislative body. "Administrative Law" simply means "Contract Agreement." But if government called it what it really was, everyone would know what is going on. But by the government calling it "Administrative Law," few understand it, and think, "Oh my goodness, I don't want to go to jail because I violated Administrative Law." What you must implicitly remember is that Administrative Law and Police Powers are diametrically opposed to each other. They cannot co-exist in the same context. Like oil and water, they can never mix. But governments do not want you to know that. If there were any form of police power exerted to enforce "Administrative Law," it would clearly fly in the face of the Constitution. So all governments exercise fraud when they take "Administrative Law" beyond "the consent of the governed," Declaration of Independence.

Every time you hear the term "Administrative Law," you must correctly think "Contract Agreement." If everyone thought that way, people would automatically ask themselves the logical question: "Where's the contract?". But government does not want you to think in terms of "Contracts," nor the fact that there can ever be police powers involved in the enforcement of a contract. If you fail to show up for work, can your boss call up the police and send them out to arrest you? No! This is true even if your boss happens to be the city, or the chief of police. Police powers are limited only to criminal acts, never contract disputes. These are totally separate and exclusive jurisdictions.

The U.S. Constitution specifically forbids all fifty states of this country from passing any law that interferes with any individual's right of contract, or, if the person so chooses, the right not to contract.

"No state shall...make any...law impairing the obligation of contracts."

[Constitution Article I, Sec. 10, Clause 1]

The right to contract necessarily establishes the right not to contract. Just like the First Amendment to Congress:

The Great IRS Hoax: Why We Don’t Owe Income Tax, version 4.54
TOP SECRET: For Official Treasury/IRS Use Only (FOUO) Copyright Family Guardian Fellowship http://famguardian.org/
"Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof;"

[Constitution, First Amendment]

so also in Article I, Sec. 10, it says that no state shall make any law that impairs the free exercise of the right to contract or not to contract. Now how does this Constitutional prohibition to states apply to such state administrative agencies as the "State Contractor's License Board?" Ah, yes, and note, we are not here even challenging this as an Administrative Law, but rather the very authority of the State itself to even "make" such an administrative agency that presumes to govern the right to contract. In other words, the Legislature was acting unconstitutionally when they even considered "making" such a law, whether the law passed by a majority vote or not. In other words, it was null and void the very moment it was "passed." One could just imagine the untold hundreds of billions of dollars that would invigorate the entire economy of this country if states could not interfere with, or tax our constitutional right to contract, or not to contract, with whosoever we pleased.

Contracts are very much a necessary part of all of our lives, and we all understand the meaning of agreements and keeping our word. Contracts always must contain a consideration, and are made voluntarily for the mutual benefit of each of the parties entering them.

I am going to explain the legitimate uses of contracts, and then proceed to what they have been transmuted into by the State. In a legitimate contract, for instance, and I speak to those married, remember the days when you went out on dates with that special person that made your heart throb? You fell in love and the two of you decided, for the mutual benefit of both of you, to get married. You voluntarily appeared before a minister who asked you the question, "Do you, Sharon, take Steven to be your lawfully wedded husband?" In which you replied, "I do!" You were under no obligation to agree. Remember, wherever one may say "Yes" or "I do" they equally have the right to say, "No," or "I don't," to wit, "Do you, Steven, take Sharon to be your lawfully wedded wife?" which could equally be responded to by, "No, I do not!" Of course, what a way to shock everyone and ruin a marriage ceremony. Without both parties agreeing equally to the full terms and conditions, there can be no "Administrative Law;" oops, I mean, "Contract Agreement."

(For the benefit of those of you reading this who are ministers, I would like to take a sidebar. What are those commonly heard words that come from your lips, "...lawfully wedded wife?" I ask you, is there an "unlawfully wedded wife," or an "unlawfully wedded husband?" How did those words get in the marriage vow? Why not just ask, "Do you, Steven, take Sharon to be your wife?" Ah, it is the State trying to stick their foot in the door and become a third party to the marriage "Contract Agreement." I ask you, is it a crime to get married? Must couples have government's permission to get married? The government thinks so. But does the government have constitutional authority to do so? Absolutely not.

Consider the marriage license. A license is a special grant of permission from the government to do that which is otherwise illegal. People are now being convicted of "practicing law without a license," so I ask you, are couples who refuse marriage licenses guilty of practicing marriage without a license? We are instructed in the Bible, "Whoso findeth a wife findeth a good thing, and obtaineth favour of the LORD." Prov. 18:22. Yes, and remember that famous quote, "Render therefore unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's; and unto God the things that are God's, Matt. 22:21," and "What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder." Matt. 19:6. Would it not be just as appropriate if God were to say, "What therefore God has 'licensed,' let not man license?" Of course! Are you not therefore rendering to Caesar that which is God's? And are you not doing it "By the power vested in you by the State of [fill in state], I now pronounce you man and wife." And what about this so-called doctrine beaten into our heads by the courts of "Separation of Church and State?" End of sidebar.)

Let's next turn to the "Contract Agreement" of Civil Service Employment. You open the newspaper and see an ad placed by the City of Ten Buck Two, saying "Now hiring." You go and apply for the job and you are hired. Whether it be secretary, street cleaner, or police officer, you enter a Civil Service Contract, and receive a mutual benefit, i.e., a paycheck. If you were to receive no consideration from the city, you would be merely a slave. Neither the city nor you were under duress, you both receive a consideration, and established a legitimate "Contract Agreement." The city wishes to call it "Administrative Law." After being hired, if there arises a dispute, you cannot shout, "My Constitutional Rights were violated," for you are now under Civil Service protection, and are not entitled to a jury trial nor any of the protections of the Constitution, for now it is Administrative Law that controls, and the Constitution has no application whatsoever.

Now let's take this a step further, and talk about a ticket. I once was mailed a ticket through the mail offering me an "Administrative Review." I wrote back to this administrative agency by certified mail with return receipt, and with a sworn declaration attached stating that I had never entered into a "Contract Agreement" with them, and that such contract did not exist. I further demanded that they respond with a counter-declaration stating that I had indeed entered into a "Contract Agreement" with them, and thus bring the question into issue. (An uncontested declaration stands as the truth. No counter-declaration, no dispute.) I also demanded that they attach of copy of the contract we had between us as evidence to support their contention.

This administrative agency just did not know what to do, so they just declared my "request for an Administrative Review" untimely, despite the certified mail proving otherwise. They then stated that I now owed them more than twice the amount they originally demanded of me. However, as you note, I did not ask for an "Administrative Review." Rather my only issue was the appropriateness and legitimacy of the agency "offering" me the administrative review. If you received a letter from Moscow, Russia accusing you of failing to possess a license from the Moscow Aviation Flight Board, and offering you an administrative review, would you ask for an administrative review?

Further, in my communication to this administrative body, which further baffled them, I asked:

"When you say you are offering me an 'Administrative Review,' it implies I am now on appeal. Was there a trial in which I have already been found guilty, and that I now should appeal that decision? I never received a notice of such trial. When was the trial? Who sat in judgment? What was the basis of his or her findings? What is the particular clause in the "Contract Agreement" I have been found guilty of violating?"

You see, my questions were entirely logical and practical, but they just did not know how to deal with me. So they just forged ahead with enforcement as if I said nothing. This resulted in my lawsuit against them which went all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court twice, once through the state courts, and then all the way through the federal, the issue in federal court being deprivation of due process of law. There was not one court, neither state, nor federal, that would address a single issue I presented in my lawsuit. This suit resulted in five long years of litigation, and the agency admittedly spent over $100,000.00 defending itself, and demanded of me that I should pay them for their time from what started out to be $55.

This case resulted in my filing a criminal complaint against the defendants with the U.S. Attorney, and petitioning Congress to open impeachment proceedings against five federal judges for conspiracy to commit extortion, accompanied with a copy of the proposed Federal J.A.I.L. Bill, with my instant case as an example of why Congress should pass J.A.I.L. into law. Everything grew very quiet. No one would say anything.

All this over the implied assumption that I had entered into a "Contract Agreement" that did not exist, and never did exist.

Here in Los Angeles, the city dispenses bureaucrats throughout the city to search your home. However, the city likes to refer to it as "inspection." Although the U.S. Constitution provides:

"The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizure shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized"

[Fourth Amendment]

...these bureaucrats come to you "for your good," as a "public service." They charge you money for their services, and exercise police power, having neither oath or affirmation, warrant, or probable cause, mandating you "volunteer" to accept their searches. If you refuse to volunteer, they turn you over to the city prosecutor who will prosecute you for failure to comply with the program. If you think these bureaucrats are bribe-free, you have a shock coming. Many hint at and suggest that they can arrange special treatment for you, or that they can make things very bad for you.

We have now come to the point in this country where the public's common acceptance that we are administrative subjects, that a mere suggestion by a government bureaucrat has now become law, and one is guilty by the simple allegation of whatever charge these bureaucrats wish to lay upon them without appeal to the Constitution.

Approximately seven years ago I was stopped by a police officer. He "offered" to engage me into a contract with him. The problem with his contract offer was that it was imposed upon me by the threat of my going immediately to jail, and that of having my car stolen. Under criminal constitutional standards he was required to take me before a magistrate at least within 48 hours of his conducting my arrest. He did not wish to do that however, so for his convenience, not mine, he asked me to enter into a contract with him. But what was my consideration in this contract? Was it that I didn't have to go to jail immediately? Nay, for that is like placing a gun to one's head and asking them to voluntarily write a check, which is called "Robbery" in the criminal codes.
This nice policeman told me that by signing his ticket, I was not waiving any of my rights. I read it, and all it said was that I promised to appear before the clerk of the court authorized to receive bail by a certain date. I went ahead and took the comfortable route, and signed his contract under duress, "agreeing" to appear before the court clerk as opposed to going to jail. I then went to the clerk of the court by the date specified and asked if she was the clerk of the court authorized to accept bail. She said "Yes." I then told her who I was, and that since she was the authorized person before whom I had promised to appear, I needed her signature showing I had fulfilled my promise. She refused. Gee, what's wrong with these people? They demand my signature to show up before them under threat of going to jail. I show up as they ask and request their signature to show that I have complied, and they refuse. They do not respect you for keeping your promise to them. It seems they are not satisfied, and they want something more from you than they made you promise. Hmm, it seems to me that not all the terms of the contract were revealed when the officer said all I had to do was appear in front of the clerk. I must have been defrauded.

What they really wanted, and now demanded, was that I appear before a commissioner, not a judge, when originally I was entitled under the Constitution to appear before a magistrate for a determination of probable cause of my arrest by the kind police officer. The officer must have lied to me when I was clearly told that I would not be waiving any of my rights. But a waiver of my rights under the Constitution requires my voluntary and knowledgeable consent with a consideration in the pie for me. But I never got the pie. This "Contract Agreement" does not seem to be like saying "I do" at the altar and getting a wife, or "I agree" at the Civil Service interview, and getting a paycheck.

This commissioner bullied me, trying to induce me by force to enter into his offered contract agreement, when in no way was he qualified to act or perform pursuant to the Fourth Amendment requirements of a magistrate.

When he failed to convince me that it was in my best interest that I should voluntarily agree to his contract, he proceeded to unilaterally enter me into his contract whether I agreed to it or not. And of course, it was done with "my best interest at heart." He's an educated man, and has graduated from law school. So why didn't he know that a contract requires my voluntary consent? Having waived my rights for me (which is an impossibility), he now tells me that I am going to appear for trial on the date he chose for me, and that I am going to sign a promise to appear. I told him, "NO! I am not going to sign such a contract agreement!" He became very wroth, and I was immediately arrested, chained to thieves, con artists, and extortionists and thrown into jail for not agreeing to sign.

At least one of the sheriff's deputies handling me expressed disbelief at what she was hearing that I was arrested for not agreeing to sign on to the commissioner's offer. Here they were digging through my pockets and relieving me of all my possessions, and my crime is failing to accept an offer. This could only be a civil charge at best, but refusing to contract is not a violation of a contract. I had not even agreed to the deprivation of a magistrate to appear before this commissioner.

No sooner had they illegally processed me into the Los Angeles County jail system, that they wanted to get rid of me. Under California statute, no person can be jailed on an alleged infraction, but here I was in jail. The fact is, neither the courts nor the administrative boards know how to deal with the rare individual who sensibly raises questions about the existence of a contract, so they just bully forward with police power enforcement, and address nothing.

The deputies told me they were putting me out of jail, but that I must come back to court on the date specified by the commissioner. I told them "No! I did not agree to appear." They told me that if I did not appear, I would be arrested. I said that I was already under arrest, so just keep me in jail until you are finished with me. They said, we can't do that, we don't have the money to keep you here. I said, "I'm not here to save you money. If you want me, just keep me here. If you don't want me, put me out." So they threw me out of jail to get rid of me, and I never showed up later. In the meantime, I commenced suit against the commissioner for kidnapping, holding me hostage and demanding ransom for my release. (His ransom was my signature, for he said when I gave him my signature, I would be free to go. Of course, that was why I was in jail because I did not agree to that.)

In my civil suit against the commissioner, I had him totally defenseless, and the trial judge hearing the case knew it. There was absolutely no way the commissioner could lawfully wiggle off, but since when do judges do things lawfully? The trial judge knew the commissioner was naked, and had no jurisdiction whatsoever for what he did to me. He slammed his hands down on the bench and said, "Mr. Branson, in all my twenty years' career on the bench, I have never met a person like you." He then quoted the words found in my complaint, "Just keep me in jail until you are finished with me."

This judge could see the potential chaotic conditions if every person which was stopped by the cops stated "Just keep me in jail until you are finished with me." I was supposed to fear losing my job, my reputation and companionship and capitulate.
He knew that if everybody did what I was doing, the entire system would fall apart. I was suddenly costing government mucho money to the tune of thousands upon thousands of dollars when the whole idea was to make some money from me. This lawsuit continued for years all the way up to the U.S. Supreme Court, yet not one judge would address the issues of my contract case.

I now refer to a humorous situation that sounds like make-believe. An acquaintance of mine was called into court by one of the ABC "public service" administrative agencies to be cross-examined to discover information from him to be used against him. He was asked to take the witness stand. They asked him to raise his right hand after which the clerk of the court said, "Do you solemnly swear to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?" He responded, "No, I do not!" Everyone in the court gasped. (Remember, the right to say "Yes" also includes the right to say "No!") The judge instructed the clerk to re-read the swearing-in again, supposing that he just did not understand the question. He responded the second time, "I heard you the first time, and my answer is, No, I do not!" You can imagine the uncomfortable and embarrassing situation into which this placed the judge. He asked why he would not swear to tell the truth, and he said, "The Bible says, 'Let God be true, but every man a liar,' " (referring to Rom. 3:4), and "I am a man, and a liar."

The judge came unglued and threatened him with jail if he did not swear to tell the truth. He responded, "Judge, you asked me a straight-forward question requiring either a yes, or a no answer. I gave you a straight-forward answer to your question, and that was No, I do not. You can't say I did not answer your question, for I did answer it, but you just don't like my answer. If you didn't want to hear my answer, then don't ask me the question. And judge, on what basis do you threatened me with jail? Is it because I answered your question truthfully? Or is it because you wanted me to lie, and I didn't do it? Or is it because you believe I am lying to you when I tell you I am a man, and a liar?"

The judge threw him in jail for three days, after which he brought him forth to swear him in again. He said, "Judge, my answer to you is still the same as three days ago. I am still a man, and still a liar, and no amount of jail time can change that. The judge again threatened him with jail, to which he responded:

"On what basis do you threaten me with jail? Is it because I answered your question truthfully, and you want me to lie? Or is it because you believe I am lying to you when I tell you I am a man, and a liar?"

The system just does not know how to handle people who question the actions of government when all the government is only trying to get your approval to what they do to you. If you don't agree to the Contract Agreement, then they do you the favor of "agreeing" for you even if it is against your will, without consideration. As I say, this is not quite like you saying "I do" at the altar, but the judge spake and it was so.

Other examples are, when you are called to jury duty, the judge makes you raise your right hand and agree to follow the law as interpreted to you by the judge. But wait, it is not the judge or the jurors who are entitled to a jury trial, but the defendant who is constitutionally entitled to a fully informed and unencumbered jury which must judge on both the law and the facts. Here we have a judge seeking to induce the defendant's jurors to conspire with him against the defendant. How can the judge, in conspiracy with the jurors, lawfully agree to waive the rights of the defendant? They can't. It is the defendant that is entitled to a fair and impartial trial. "In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy ... an impartial jury." Jurors who have been induced to conspire with the judge cannot possibly be "an impartial jury." Fifth Amendment, U.S. Constitution.

Then there are the various taxing agencies who want you to enter into a "Contract Agreement" with them. They kindly provide you with a pre-printed line on their forms to agree with their offer of a "Contract Agreement." But if you choose not to accept their offer, can one go to jail? Not constitutionally. However, they somehow want you to believe that if you do not accept their offer, then you are obligated to comply with their "Imposed Criminal Administrative Law," for after all, you don't want to go to jail because you violated the law.

Remember, anything that requires your signature, or a swearing thereto in order to give it application, is not law, but a contract. A contract must entail:

1. Being fully cognizant of all its terms.
2. Agreeing to all those terms.
3. Having equal right to say yes or no.
4. Offering you a consideration to which you would rather have than retaining your constitutional rights and saying no.
5. Being totally done without duress in any way.
Anything otherwise fails the test of a contract.

5.4.4 The three methods for exercising our Constitutional right to contract

Within the legal field, there are three distinct ways that we exercise our right to contract and thereby surrender a portion of our private rights or become the target of enforcement actions by the government:

1. Contract between two private parties: see Article 1, Section 10 of the Constitution. We can sign a contract or consent to a contract by our behavior, and thereby forfeit our rights in pursuit of the benefits or special privileges that result from availing oneself of the contract.

2. Government “codes” or “statutes” which are not enacted positive law and which therefore are a voluntary private contract between you and the state. An example is marriage licenses and the family law codes in most states which implement them in fact entirely voluntary. If you don’t volunteer or consent to get a marriage license, then you aren’t obligated to comply with the family code in most states, and especially those that do not recognize “common law marriage”.

3. Enacted positive law. Law which the people directly or indirectly consented to because their elected representatives “enacted” it into positive law.

The above list is in order of priority. The first two are based on our private right to contract. The last one is based on our ability to contract collectively as a group called a “state” with the public servants who will enforce and protect our rights using the law/contract. The parties to the contract are our representatives and the public servants who will enforce the contract they enact called a “Public law”. In a society such as we have which is populated with sovereigns, our private power to contract supersedes enacted positive law and in some cases is also used as a substitute for positive law in cases where positive law cannot be enacted. No government, as we pointed out earlier in section 5.4.1, has the power to interfere with our private right to contract. Likewise, no state has the ability to interfere with the right of the federal government to contract with private people in the states to provide “social services” such as Medicare, Social Security, etc.

Below is a tabular summary that graphically depicts who the parties are to each of the above three types of contracts and what form the contract takes in each case. The purpose of each of the tree types of contract is to protect and defend the rights of the parties:

The second option above is the equivalent of an “invisible adhesion contract” in the legal field:

“Adhesion contract.” Standardized contract form offered to consumers of [government] goods and services on essentially “take it or leave it” basis without affording consumer realistic opportunity to bargain and under such conditions that consumer cannot obtain desired product or services except by acquiescing in form contract.

Distinctive features of adhesion contract is that weaker party has no realistic choice as to its terms. Cubic Corp. v. Marty, 4 Dist., 185 C.A.3d 438, 229 Cal.Rptr. 828, 833; Standard Oil Co. of Calif. V. Perkins, C.A.Or., 347 F.2d 379, 383. Recognizing that these contracts are not the result of traditionally “bargained” contracts, the trend is to relieve parties from onerous conditions imposed by such contracts. However, not every such contract is unconscionable. Lechmere Tire and Sales Co. v. Burwick, 360 Mass. 718, 720, 721, 277 N.E.2d. 503;” [Black’s Law Dictionary, Sixth Edition, p. 40]
Adhesion contracts have only come into vogue in the last century because of the corporatization of America and the monopolistic power that these large corporations have over the economy. If we didn’t have such large, government sanctioned, corporate monopolies within specific segments of our economy, the sovereign People would have enough choice that they would never knowingly consent to an “adhesion contract” because they could entertain other competitive options. This concept of monopolistic coercion of the public also applies to the federal government. 28 U.S.C. §3002(15)(A) identifies the “United States” government as a “corporation”. It also happens to be the largest corporation in the world which has a virtual monopoly in certain market segments. It has abused this monopolistic power to coerce people into complying with what amounts to an “invisible adhesion contract” called the Infernal Revenue Code. What makes this particular contract “invisible” is the fact that our public servants positively refuse to help you or notify you of precisely what activity or action makes you a party to this private contract. They do this because they don’t want anyone escaping their control so that everyone will be trapped in their usurping spider web of lies, lies, and deceit. Hence, we had to write this entire book so you would understand all the nuances of this invisible contract and thus make an informed choice about whether you wish to be party to it. In response to publishing the terms of this “stealth contract” within our book, the government has repeatedly harassed, threatened, and persecuted us in an effort to keep the truth away from public view. Earlier in this book, in section 4.3.2, we revealed some of the many devious ways that dishonest and evil public servants attempt to conceal, avoid, or hide the requirement for consent in their interactions with the public. If you haven’t read that section, then we recommend going back and doing so now before you proceed further.

On the subject of “invisible adhesion contracts”, you might want to visit our website and read a fascinating series of articles by George Mercier on the subject at:

http://famguardian.org/PublishedAuthors/Indiv/MercierGeorge/GeorgeMercier.htm

Our public dis-servants often use the second option above, the “invisible adhesion contract”, quite deviously in order to pass statutes that “appear” to impose a mandatory obligation on their surface, but which in fact are not “law” and are entirely voluntary and only simply “directory” in nature:

"Directory. A provision in a statute, rule of procedure, or the like, which is a mere direction or instruction of no obligatory force, and involving no invalidating consequence for its disregard, as opposed to an imperative or mandatory provision, which must be followed. The general rule is that the prescriptions of a statute relating to the performance of a public duty are so far directory that, though neglect of them may be punishable, yet it does not affect the validity of the acts done under them, as in the case of statute requiring an officer to prepare and deliver a document to another officer on or before a certain day.”

The second option above, by the way, is an extension of both our and the government’s right to contract. The government writes the contract as a statute but doesn’t enact it into positive law. This makes it simply a “proposal” that we can choose to accept or not to accept. The contract provides some benefit or “privilege” that people or the states want, which is usually some form of protection or some entitlement to a financial benefit. An example would be welfare “benefits”. When a person or a state accept the benefit of the statute, then they must obey the REST of the contract, even if they did not explicitly consent in writing to the rest of the contract. In the case of receipt of federal welfare benefits, one requirement is that all states want to receive the benefit MUST require those applying for driver’s licenses to provide a Slave Surveillance Number, for instance. This approach is simply a devious legal extension of the Golden Rule:

“He who owns the gold rules.”

In the case of our current federal government, by the way, the gold they are ruling with is stolen! It is loot! Here is how the Supreme Court describes it:

"The Government urges that the Power Company is estopped to question the validity of the Act creating the Tennessee Valley Authority, and hence that the stockholders, suing in the right of the corporation, cannot [297 U.S. 323] maintain this suit. ... The principle is invoked that one who accepts the benefit of a statute cannot be heard to question its constitutionality. Great Falls Manufacturing Co. v. Attorney General, 124 U.S. 581; Wall v. Parrod Silver & Copper Co., 244 U.S. 407; St. Louis Casting Co. v. Prendergast Construction Co., 260 U.S. 469." [Ashwander v. Tennessee Valley Auth., 297 U.S. 288 (1936)]

"...when a State willingly accepts a substantial benefit from the Federal Government, it waives its immunity under the Eleventh Amendment and consents to suit by the intended beneficiaries of that federal assistance.” [Papasan v. Allain, 478 U.S. 265 (1986)]
In effect, a statute that is not positive law but which confers a government “privilege” or a “benefit”, becomes a “roach trap”. They set the trap by writing the statute that implements the benefit program, and those who walk into the legal trap must obey their new landlord to get out of the trap. We call this kind of trickery “privilege-induced slavery” earlier in section 4.3.12. We will simply refer to it as the “roach trap statutes” throughout the rest of this book. Do you want your public servants treating you like an insect because that is what you have become? The easiest way to avoid the “roach trap” is never to accept any government benefit. Those who are sovereign cannot be dependent in any respect and won’t walk into such a trap to begin with. Another way to avoid “roach trap statutes” is to qualify one’s consent when applying for the benefit by explicitly stating the terms under which one consents. If the receiving agency accepts your application, then they accepted the terms of your proposed new or replacement “contract”. This, by the way, is the vehicle we recommend for those who insist on filing “tax returns” with the government: making them into conditional self-assessments with tons of strings attached.

IMPORTANT!: Only those who are party to “roach trap” statutes and the “constructive contract” they describe should be using or citing anything from them! If you aren’t a “taxpayer”, and are not subject to the Internal Revenue Code, then don’t go citing anything from the I.R.C. in a court federal or state court pleading or in correspondence with the government. The minute you claim any “privilege” or “benefit” from using or quoting any part of the Internal Revenue Code is the minute you become a “taxpayer”! WATCH OUT! People who aren’t subject to federal law shouldn’t be benefiting from it in any way. The only exception to this rule are positive laws elsewhere in the U.S. Code such as Title 18, the Criminal Code, which applies to all crimes committed by federal employees or on federal property. We cover this subject of not citing federal statutes to protect your rights earlier in section 4.2.6 entitled “Why you shouldn’t cite federal statutes as authority for protecting your rights.

The U.S. Supreme Court has also agreed with the conclusions of this section, by declaring that the payment of taxes is “quasi-contractual”, which means that the Internal Revenue Code must be the contract!

“Even if the judgment is deemed to be colored by the nature of the obligation whose validity it establishes, and we are free to re-examine it, and, if we find it to be based on an obligation penal in character, to refuse to enforce it outside the state where rendered, see Wisconsin v. Pelican Insurance Co.,[127 U.S. 265, 292 et seq. 8 S.Ct.] 1370, compare Fauntleroy v. Lum,[210 U.S. 230, 28 S.Ct. 641, still the obligation to pay taxes is not penal. It is a statutory liability, quasi contractual in nature, enforceable, if there is no exclusive statutory remedy, in the civil courts by the common-law action of debt or indebitatus assumpsit. United States v. Chamberlin,[219 U.S. 250, 31 S.Ct. 155; Price v. United States, 260 U.S. 492, 46 S.Ct. 180; Dollar Savings Bank v. United States, 19 Wall. 227; and see Stockwell v. United States, 13 Wall. 531, 542; Meredith v. United States, 13 Pet. 486, 493. This was the rule established in the English courts before the Declaration of Independence, Attorney General v. Weeks, Bunbury's Exch. Rep. 223; Attorney General v. Jewers and Batty, Bunbury's Exch. Rep. 225; Attorney General v. Hatton, Bunbury's Exch. Rep. [296 U.S. 268, 272]; Attorney General v. ___, 2 Ans.Rep. 558; see Comyn's Digest (Title 'Dett,' A, 9); 1 Chitty on Pleading, 123; cf. Attorney General v. Sewell, 4 M.&W. 77. " [Milwaukee v. White, 296 U.S. 268 (1935)]

Below is the meaning of “quasi-contract” from the above quote:

"Quasi contract. An obligation which law creates in absence of agreement; it is invoked by courts where there is unjust enrichment. Andrews v. O'Grady, 44 Misc.2d. 28, 252 N.Y.S.2d. 814, 817. Sometimes referred to as implied-in-law contracts (as a legal fiction) to distinguish them from implied-in-fact contracts (voluntary agreements inferred from the parties' conduct). Function of "quasi-contract" is to raise obligation in law where in fact the parties made no promise, and it is not based on apparent intention of the parties. Fink v. Goodson-Todman Enterprises, Limited, 9 C.A.5d 996, 88 Cal.Rptr. 679, 690. See also Contract." [Black's Law Dictionary, Sixth Edition, p. 1245]

The weak point of roach trap laws and the point upon which we can attack and undermine them is that the benefit must indeed be a tangible, measurable benefit. Simply “perceiving” it as a benefit does not in fact make it into a benefit. The benefit also cannot derive from the absence of force, fraud, or illegal duress upon the person in receipt of the benefit. Compelled receipt of a benefit is nothing but slavery and involuntary servitude cleverly disguised as government “benevolence”. Without some mutual tangible benefit voluntarily and freely accepted, which is called “consideration” in the legal field, a valid contract cannot be formed. Every valid legal contract must include an offer, acceptance, mutual consideration, and mutual informed consent. In the case of the Internal Revenue Code, it ought to be quite obvious that if payment is voluntary and consensual under Subtitle A, there is absolutely no tangible benefit whatsoever that can result from “volunteering” or “consenting” to become a federal serf as a person domiciled in a state of the Union. The only people who could possibly “benefit” from this corrupt communist and socialist system, in fact, are parasites and thieves who intend from the beginning to draw more out of the government than they put in. God’s law, however, tells us that no righteous government has any moral authority to be taxing and pillaging the successful members of society in order to subsidize and reward this kind of thievery, failure, and government dependency:

“My son, if sinners [socialists, in this case] entice you,

Do not consent [do not abuse your power of choice]
If they say, “Come with us,
Let us lie in wait to shed blood [of innocent “nontaxpayers”];
Let us lurk secretly for the innocent without cause;
Let us swallow them alive like Sheol,
And whole, like those who go down to the Pit:
We shall fill our houses with spoil [plunder];
Cast in your lot among us,
Let us all have one purse [share the stolen Loot]”–

My son, do not walk in the way with them [do not ASSOCIATE with them and don’t let the government FORCE you to associate with them either by forcing you to become a "taxpayer" [government whore or a statutory "U.S. citizen"];
Keep your foot from their path;
For their feet run to evil,
And they make haste to shed blood.
Surely, in vain the net is spread
In the sight of any bird;
But they lie in wait for their own blood.
They lurk secretly for their own lives.
So are the ways of everyone who is greedy for gain [or unearned government benefits];
It takes away the life of its owners.”
[Proverbs 1:10-19, Bible, NKJV]

Furthermore, the U.S. Supreme Court has said several times that the government cannot manipulate Constitutional rights out of existence either directly or indirectly, which means they can’t abuse their taxing powers or their power to contract in order to deceive people into bargaining away their Constitutional rights:

"It has long been established that a State may not impose a penalty upon those who exercise a right guaranteed by the Constitution." Frost & Frost Trucking Co. v. Railroad Comm’n of California, 271 U.S. 583. "Constitutional rights would be of little value if they could be indirectly denied," Smith v. Allwright, 321 U.S. 649, 644, or manipulated out of existence," Gomillion v. Lightfoot, 364 U.S. 339, 345."
[Harman v. Forssenius, 380 U.S 528 at 540, 85 S.Ct. 1177, 1185 (1965)]

When we signed our first tax return or IRS Form W-4, which were knowingly false as far as our public dis-servants were concerned, the government didn’t explicitly inform us as “nationals” and “non-resident non-persons” who have rights that we would be giving away those rights by lying to the government in admitting that we are a “U.S. individual” in the upper left corner of the form. In fact, the government didn’t even want you to know that you were consenting to anything by submitting the form. Did you ever notice, for instance, that the upper left corner of the IRS Form W-4 says “Employee’s Withholding Allowance Certificate”, and yet within the Treasury Regulations that the government knows you will probably never read in your lifetime, they instead call this same form a “Withholding Agreement”? Sneaky, huh?

26 C.F.R. Sec. 31.3401(a)-3 Amounts deemed wages under voluntary withholding agreements.

(a) IN GENERAL. Notwithstanding the exceptions to the definition of wages specified in section 3401(a) and the regulations thereunder, the term “wages” includes the amounts described in paragraph (b)(1) of this section with respect to which there is a voluntary withholding agreement in effect under section 3402(p). References in this chapter to the definition of wages contained in section 3401(a) shall be deemed to refer also to this section (Section 31.3401(a)-3).

(b) REMUNERATION FOR SERVICES.

(1) Except as provided in subparagraph (2) of this paragraph, the amounts referred to in paragraph (a) of this section include any remuneration for services performed by an employee for an employer which, without regard to this section, does not constitute wages under section 3401(a). For example, remuneration for services...
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

Who is doing the agreeing here, anyway? IT’S YOU!! Your public servants don’t want you to know that they need your consent to take your money. They want the process of giving consent to be “invisible” to you so that you are tricked into believing that participation in payroll withholding is mandatory. Your devious politicians and government lawyer “servants” have been playing tricks on you like this for decades, and most Americans have been blissfully unaware of these devious machinations until this book came out. Consequently then, it must be presumed in the context of the W-4 fraud documented above that we never provided sufficiently informed or voluntary consent, which the Supreme Court interprets to mean that we never made any choice or provided any “consent” at all:

"Waivers of constitutional rights not only must be voluntary but must be knowing, intelligent acts done with sufficient awareness of the relevant circumstances and likely consequences."

Laws that are not “positive law” are described simply as “prima facie evidence of law” and may not be cited as admissible evidence in any criminal or civil trial. Prima facie evidence is rebuttable evidence:

1 U.S.C. §204

Sec. 204. - Codes and Supplements as evidence of the laws of United States and District of Columbia; citation of Codes and Supplements

In all courts, tribunals, and public offices of the United States, at home or abroad, of the District of Columbia, and of each State, Territory, or insular possession of the United States -

(a) United States Code. -

The matter set forth in the edition of the Code of Laws of the United States current at any time shall, together with the then current supplement, if any, establish prima facie [by presumption] the laws of the United States, general and permanent in their nature, in force on the day preceding the commencement of the session following the last session the legislation of which is included: Provided, however, That whenever titles of such Code shall have been enacted into positive law the text thereof shall be legal evidence of the laws therein contained, in all the courts of the United States, the several States, and the Territories and insular possessions of the United States.

Of the above three methods for exercising our right to contract, the Internal Revenue Code falls into the category of item 3 above: Legislation or statutes which is not enacted into positive law and which are therefore not “law”, and whose enforcement provisions are not published in the Federal Register. See the following for evidence of the missing enforcement regulations at:

IRS Due Process Meeting Handout, Form #03.008
http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

Consequently, the Internal Revenue Code, because it is neither “positive law” nor “law” and because there are no enforcement provisions published in the Federal Register, can only be enforced against federal “employees” who are effectively connected to U.S. government income if it is enforced at all. The reason is because federal employees basically must observe their employment contract, which includes the implied agreement to pay “kickbacks” to the federal government out of their pay called “income taxes”. These “kickbacks” are recorded and accounted for on a “return”, which is a return of the government’s property to its rightful owner. For all persons other than federal “employees”, the I.R.C. is nothing more than a voluntary contract which each individual must choose for himself or herself whether he or she individually wants the “benefits” of. Those who choose to avail themselves of the benefits of this constructive voluntary private “contract” reveal their consent and intent by declaring themselves to be federal “employees” on the IRS Form W-4 and submitting it directly to the IRS or indirectly, through their private, non-federal employer. When they elect to avail themselves of this contract, they will be treated by the government in every respect relating to “taxes” like any typical federal “employee”, even if they in fact are not and even if they deny having done so. Note, however, that in the vast majority of cases, those who submit the IRS Form W-4 had to LIE in order to avail themselves of the contract because there are 280+ million Americans but only about 2,000 elected or appointed “public officers” who lawfully hold public office. Once they perjure themselves on the W-4 by claiming they are federal “employees” under penalty of perjury, now the government has them trapped because they have given the government court-admissible evidence that they are federal “employees”. If they then later claim they were deceived or tricked in filling out the form, the government can try to blackmail them by saying they committed perjury on the form. Checkmate!

Another way to challenge the “roach trap” in court is simply to show that statistically, the statute one is subject to does not “benefit”, but instead harms people and societies. Once you can prove that it isn’t a benefit but in fact a harm to the people, the government loses its ability to enforce its contract upon the recipient. The sole purpose of both law and government is to protect and not harm society. Government cannot exceed that boundary no matter what. The Supreme Court explained why this is as follows:

“...The great principle is this: because the constitution will not permit a state to destroy, it will not permit a law involving the power to destroy.”

[Providence Bank v. Billings, 29 U.S. 514 (1830)]

The last point we want to make about “roach trap statutes” in relation to income taxation is that the Supreme Court has already said that their main benefit, which is the Social Security and Medicare benefits that go with the payment of income taxes, is NOT, and I repeat NOT, a contract.

“We must conclude that a person covered by the Act has not such a right in benefit payments... This is not to say, however, that Congress may exercise its power to modify the statutory scheme free of all constitutional restraint.”

Therefore, payment by the government of benefits is not contractual, it is discretionary according to the Supreme Court. Where there is no contract, there can be no breach of contract or harm to the benefit recipient. Therefore, payment to the government for these so-called “benefits” through income taxation cannot be contractual either. Equal protection of the laws guaranteed by Section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment demands this. Not only that, but anyone who takes out anything more than exactly what they put in, is a THIEF! The Bible says that all such thieves MUST be forced to pay back DOUBLE what they stole to the victims of the theft:

“If a man [the government, in this case] delivers to his neighbor [a citizen, in this case] money or articles to keep, and it is stolen out of the man’s house [our out of his paycheck], If the thief is found, he shall pay double. If the thief is not found, then the master of the house shall be brought to the judges to see whether he has put his hand into his neighbor’s goods.”

[Exodus 22:7-8, Bible, NKJV]

The "victim" of the theft, in this case, are all the "nontaxpayers" who never wanted to participate in this bankrupt humanistic/socialist tax and welfare-state system to begin with. If people cannot lawfully be permitted to take out more than they put in because it would be theft, then why have the socialist program to begin with? All it will do is encourage those who receive the benefit to abuse their voting power to compel the government to STEAL from their fellow working citizens, in violation of 18 U.S.C. §597, which IS positive law, by the way.

5.4.5 Federalism

Federalism is the mechanism by which the sovereignty of the States and the People are preserved out of respect for the requirements of the Tenth Amendment to the United States Constitution, which states:

United States Constitution

Tenth Amendment

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

Federalism is advanced primarily but not exclusively through the following means:

1. Requirement for comity when acting extra-territorially. Whenever the federal government wishes to exercise extraterritorial jurisdiction within a state of the Union, which is a foreign state for the purposes of federal legislative
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

2. The separation of powers between the states and the federal government in order to preserve a “diffusion of sovereign power.” This means that a state may not delegate any of its powers conferred by the Constitution to the Federal Government, and likewise, that the federal government may not delegate any of its powers to any state of the Union:

“Every State or nation possesses an exclusive sovereignty and jurisdiction within its own territory, and her laws affect and bind all property and persons residing within it. It may regulate the manner and circumstances under which property is held, and the condition, capacity, and state of all persons therein, and also the remedy and modes of administering justice. And it is equally true that no State or nation can affect or bind property out of its territory, or persons not residing [domiciled] within it. No State therefore can enact laws to operate beyond its own dominions, and if it attempts to do so, it may be lawfully refused obedience. Such laws can have no inherent authority extraterritorially. This is the necessary result of the independence of distinct and separate sovereignties.”

“Now it follows from these principles that whatever force or effect the laws of one State or nation may have in the territories of another must depend solely upon the laws and municipal regulations of the latter, upon its own jurisprudence and polity, and upon its own express or tacit consent.”

[Dred Scott v. John F.A. Sanford, 60 U.S. 393 (1856)]

“Judge Story, in his treatise on the Conflicts of Laws, lays down, as the basis upon which all reasonings on the law of comity must necessarily rest, the following maxims: First ‘that every nation possesses an exclusive sovereignty and jurisdiction within its own territory’; secondly, ‘that no state or nation can by its laws directly affect or bind property out of its own territory, or bind persons not resident therein, whether they are natural born subjects or others.’ The learned judge then adds: ‘From these two maxims or propositions there follows a third, and that is that whatever force and obligation the laws of one country have in another depend solely upon the laws and municipal regulation of the latter; that is, upon its own proper jurisdiction and polity, and upon its own express or tacit consent.’ Story on Conflict of Laws §23.”

[Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. v. Chambers, 73 Ohio St. 16, 76 N.E. 91, 11 L.R.A., N.S., 1012 (1905)]

“Judge Story, in his treatise on the Conflicts of Laws, lays down, as the basis upon which all reasonings on the law of comity must necessarily rest, the following maxims: First ‘that every nation possesses an exclusive sovereignty and jurisdiction within its own territory’; secondly, ‘that no state or nation can by its laws directly affect or bind property out of its own territory, or bind persons not resident therein, whether they are natural born subjects or others.’ The learned judge then adds: ‘From these two maxims or propositions there follows a third, and that is that whatever force and obligation the laws of one country have in another depend solely upon the laws and municipal regulation of the latter; that is, upon its own proper jurisdiction and polity, and upon its own express or tacit consent.’ Story on Conflict of Laws §23.”

[Page 5-412]

3. Parties domiciled in states of the Union may not consent to the jurisdiction of the federal courts where no subject matter jurisdiction exists within the Constitution, because it would unlawfully enlarge the jurisdiction of the federal government beyond the clear boundaries enumerated in the Constitution of the United States.

Pacemaker argues that in the federal system a party may not consent to jurisdiction, so that the parties cannot waive their rights under Article III. The maxim that parties may not consent to the jurisdiction of federal courts is not applicable here. The rule is irrelevant because it applies only where the parties attempt to confer upon an Article III court a subject matter jurisdiction that Congress or the Constitution forbid. See, e.g., Jackson v. Ashton, 33 U.S. (8 Peters), 148, 148-49, 5 L.Ed. 898 (1834); Mansfield, Coldwater & Lake Michigan Railway Co. v. Swan, 111 U.S. 379, 28 L.Ed. 462, 4 S.Ct. 510 (1884). The limited jurisdiction of the federal courts and the need to respect the boundaries of federalism underlie the rule. In the instant case, however, the subject matter, patents, is exclusively one of federal law. The Supreme Court has explicitly held that Congress may "confer upon federal courts jurisdiction conditioned upon a defendant's consent." Williams v. Austrian, 331 U.S. 642, 652, 91 L.Ed. 1718, 67 S.Ct. 1443 (1947); see Harris v. Avery Brundage Co., 305 U.S. 160, 83 L.Ed. 100, 59 S.Ct. 131 (1938).

The litigant waiver in this case is similar to waiver of a defect in jurisdiction over the person, a waiver federal courts permit. Hoffman v. Blaski, 363 U.S. 335, 343, 4 L.Ed.2d. 1254, 80 S.Ct. 1084 (1960).

[Pacemaker Diagnostic Clinic of America Inc. v. Instrument Inc., 725 F.2d. 537 (9th Cir. 02/16/1984)]

The best descriptions of federalism are found in presidential executive orders. Below is an example:

Executive Order 12612--Federalism

By the authority vested in me as President by the Constitution and laws of the United States of America, and in order to restore the division of governmental responsibilities between the national government and the States that was intended by the Framers of the Constitution and to ensure that the principles of federalism established by the Framers guide the Executive departments and agencies in the formulation and implementation of policies, it is hereby ordered as follows:

Section 1. Definitions. For purposes of this Order:
(a) "Policies that have federalism implications" refers to regulations, legislative comments or proposed legislation, and other policy statements or actions that have substantial direct effects on the States, on the relationship between the national government and the States, or on the distribution of power and responsibilities among the various levels of government.
(b) "State" or "States" refer to the States of the United States of America, individually or collectively, and, where relevant, to State governments, including units of local government and other political subdivisions established by the States.

Sec. 2. Fundamental Federalism Principles. In formulating and implementing policies that have federalism implications, Executive departments and agencies shall be guided by the following fundamental federalism principles:
(a) Federalism is rooted in the knowledge that our political liberties are best assured by limiting the size and scope of the national government.
(b) The people of the States created the national government when they delegated to it those enumerated governmental powers relating to matters beyond the competence of the individual States. All other sovereign powers, save those expressly prohibited the States by the Constitution, are reserved to the States or to the people.
(c) The constitutional relationship among sovereign governments, State and national, is formalized in and protected by the Tenth Amendment to the Constitution.
(d) The people of the States are free, subject only to restrictions in the Constitution itself or in constitutionally authorized Acts of Congress, to define the moral, political, and legal character of their lives.
(e) In most areas of governmental concern, the States uniquely possess the constitutional authority, the resources, and the competence to discern the sentiments of the people and to govern accordingly. In Thomas Jefferson's words, the States are "the most competent administrations for our domestic concerns and the surest bulwarks against antirepublican tendencies."
(f) The nature of our constitutional system encourages a healthy diversity in the public policies adopted by the people of the several States according to their own conditions, needs, and desires. In the search for enlightened public policy, individual States and communities are free to experiment with a variety of approaches to public issues.
(g) Acts of the national government--whether legislative, executive, or judicial in nature--that exceed the enumerated powers of that government under the Constitution violate the principle of federalism established by the Framers.
(h) Policies of the national government should recognize the responsibility of--and should encourage opportunities for--individuals, families, neighborhoods, local governments, and private associations to achieve their personal, social, and economic objectives through cooperative effort.
(i) In the absence of clear constitutional or statutory authority, the presumption of sovereignty should rest with the individual States. Uncertainties regarding the legitimate authority of the national government should be resolved against regulation at the national level.

Sec. 3. Federalism Policymaking Criteria. In addition to the fundamental federalism principles set forth in section 2, Executive departments and agencies shall adhere, to the extent permitted by law, to the following criteria when formulating and implementing policies that have federalism implications:

(a) There should be strict adherence to constitutional principles. Executive departments and agencies should closely examine the constitutional and statutory authority supporting any Federal action that would limit the policymaking discretion of the States, and should carefully assess the necessity for such action. To the extent practicable, the States should be consulted before any such action is implemented. Executive Order No. 12372 (“Intergovernmental Review of Federal Programs”) remains in effect for the programs and activities to which it is applicable.

(b) Federal action limiting the policymaking discretion of the States should be taken only where constitutional authority for the action is clear and certain and the national activity is necessitated by the presence of a problem of national scope. For the purposes of this Order:

(1) It is important to recognize the distinction between problems of national scope (which may justify Federal action) and problems that are merely common to the States (which will not justify Federal action because individual States, acting individually or together, can effectively deal with them).

(2) Constitutional authority for Federal action is clear and certain only when authority for the action may be found in a specific provision of the Constitution, there is no provision in the Constitution prohibiting Federal action, and the action does not encroach upon authority reserved to the States.

(c) With respect to national policies administered by the States, the national government should grant the States the maximum administrative discretion possible. Intrusive, Federal oversight of State administration is neither necessary nor desirable.

(d) When undertaking to formulate and implement policies that have federalism implications, Executive departments and agencies shall:

(1) Encourage States to develop their own policies to achieve program objectives and to work with appropriate officials in other States.

(2) Refrain, to the maximum extent possible, from establishing uniform, national standards for programs and, when possible, defer to the States to establish standards.

(3) When national standards are required, consult with appropriate officials and organizations representing the States in developing those standards.

Sec. 4. Special Requirements for Preemption.

(a) To the extent permitted by law, Executive departments and agencies shall construe, in regulations and otherwise, a Federal statute to preempt State law only when the statute contains an express preemption provision or there is some other firm and palpable evidence compelling the conclusion that the Congress intended preemption of State law, or when the exercise of State authority directly conflicts with the exercise of Federal authority under the Federal statute.

(b) Where a Federal statute does not preempt State law (as addressed in subsection (a) of this section), Executive departments and agencies shall construe any authorization in the statute for the issuance of regulations as authorizing preemption of State law by rule-making only when the statute expressly authorizes issuance of preemptive regulations or there is some other firm and palpable evidence compelling the conclusion that the Congress intended to delegate to the department or agency the authority to issue regulations preempting State law.

(c) Any regulatory preemption of State law shall be restricted to the minimum level necessary to achieve the objectives of the statute pursuant to which the regulations are promulgated.

(d) As soon as an Executive department or agency foresees the possibility of a conflict between State law and Federally protected interests within its area of regulatory responsibility, the department or agency shall consult, to the extent practicable, with appropriate officials and organizations representing the States in an effort to avoid such a conflict.

(e) When an Executive department or agency proposes to act through adjudication or rule-making to preempt State law, the department or agency shall provide all affected States notice and an opportunity for appropriate participation in the proceedings.

Sec. 5. Special Requirements for Legislative Proposals. Executive departments and agencies shall not submit to the Congress legislation that would:

(a) Directly regulate the States in ways that would interfere with functions essential to the States’ separate and independent existence or operate to directly displace the States’ freedom to structure integral operations in areas of traditional governmental functions;

(b) Attach to Federal grants conditions that are not directly related to the purpose of the grant; or

(c) Preempt State law, unless preemption is consistent with the fundamental federalism principles set forth in section 2, and unless a clearly legitimate national purpose, consistent with the federalism policymaking criteria set forth in section 3, cannot otherwise be met.

Sec. 6. Agency Implementation.

(a) The head of each Executive department and agency shall designate an official to be responsible for ensuring the implementation of this Order.

(b) In addition to whatever other actions the designated official may take to ensure implementation of this Order, the designated official shall determine which proposed policies have sufficient federalism implications to warrant the preparation of a Federalism Assessment. With respect to each such policy for which an affirmative determination is made, a Federalism Assessment, as described in subsection (c) of this section, shall be prepared. The department or agency head shall consider any such Assessment in all decisions involved in promulgating and implementing the policy.

(c) Each Federalism Assessment shall accompany any submission concerning the policy that is made to the Office of Management and Budget pursuant to Executive Order No. 12291 or OMB Circular No. A-19, and shall:

(1) Contain the designated official’s certification that the policy has been assessed in light of the principles, criteria, and requirements stated in sections 2 through 5 of this Order;

(2) Identify any provision or element of the policy that is inconsistent with the principles, criteria, and requirements stated in sections 2 through 5 of this Order;

(3) Identify the extent to which the policy imposes additional costs or burdens on the States, including the likely source of funding for the States and the ability of the States to fulfill the purposes of the policy; and

(4) Identify the extent to which the policy would affect the States’ ability to discharge traditional State governmental functions, or other aspects of State sovereignty.

Sec. 7. Government-wide Federalism Coordination and Review.

(a) In implementing Executive Order Nos. 12291 and 12498 and OMB Circular No. A-19, the Office of Management and Budget, to the extent permitted by law and consistent with the provisions of those authorities, shall take action to ensure that the policies of the Executive departments and agencies are consistent with the principles, criteria, and requirements stated in sections 2 through 5 of this Order.

(b) In submissions to the Office of Management and Budget pursuant to Executive Order No. 12291 and OMB Circular No. A-19, Executive departments and agencies shall identify proposed regulatory and statutory provisions that have significant federalism implications and shall address any substantial federalism concerns. Where the departments or agencies deem it appropriate, substantial federalism concerns should also be addressed in notices of proposed rule-making and messages transmitting legislative proposals to the Congress.

Sec. 8. Judicial Review.

This Order is intended only to improve the internal management of the Executive branch, and is not intended to create any right or benefit, substantive or procedural, enforceable at law by a party against the United States, its agencies, its officers, or any person.

An example of the operation of Federalism to constrain the extraterritorial jurisdiction of the federal government in a judicial setting is found in the Supreme Court ruling below. Note that the court is addressing a situation where Congress is acting extraterritorially upon land within a state of the Union that is not within its exclusive or general jurisdiction of the federal government:

Respondents contend that Congress is without power, in view of the immunity doctrine, to subject a State to suit. We disagree. Congress enacted the FELA in the exercise of its constitutional power to regulate interstate commerce. While a State’s immunity from suit by a citizen without its consent has been said to be rooted in “the inherent nature of sovereignty,” Great Northern Life Ins. Co. v. Read, supra, 322 U.S. 47, 51, the States surrendered a portion of their sovereignty when they granted Congress the power to regulate commerce.

This power, like all others vested in Congress, is complete in itself, may be exercised to its utmost extent, and acknowledges no limitations other than are prescribed in the constitution. . . . If, as has always been understood, the sovereignty of Congress, though limited to specified objects is plenary as to those objects, the power over commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, is vested in Congress as absolutely as it would be in a single government, having in its constitution the same restrictions on the exercise of the power as are found in the constitution of the United States.

Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 196-197. Thus, as the Court said in United States v. California, supra, 297 U.S. at 184-185, a State’s operation of a railroad in interstate commerce must be in subordination to the power to regulate interstate commerce, which has been granted specifically to the national government. The sovereign power of the states is necessarily diminished to the extent of the grants of power to the federal government in the Constitution . . . . [There is no such limitation upon the plenary power to regulate commerce as there is upon the federal power to tax] [377 U.S. 192] state instrumentalities. The state cannot deny the power if its exercise has been authorized by Congress than can an individual.

By empowering Congress to regulate commerce, then, the States necessarily surrendered any portion of their sovereignty that would stand in the way of such regulation. Since imposition of the FELA right of action upon interstate railroads is within the congressional regulatory power, it must follow that application of the Act to such a railroad cannot be precluded by sovereign immunity.[10]
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

Recognition of the congressional power to render a State liable under the FELA does not mean that the immunity doctrine, as embodied in the Eleventh Amendment with respect to citizens of other States and as extended to the State’s own citizens by the Hans case, is here being overridden. It remains the law that a State may not be sued by an individual without its consent. Our conclusion is simply that Alabama, when it began operation of an interstate railroad approximately 20 years after enactment of the FELA, necessarily consented to such suit as was authorized by that Act. By adopting and ratifying the Commerce Clause, the States empowered Congress to create such a right of action against interstate railroads; by enacting the FELA in the exercise of this power, Congress conditioned the right to operate a railroad in interstate commerce upon amenability to suit in federal court as provided by the Act; by thereafter operating a railroad in interstate commerce, Alabama must be taken to have accepted that condition and thus to have consented to suit.

By engaging in interstate commerce by rail, [the State] has subjected itself to the commerce power, and is liable for a violation of the . . . Act, as are other [377 U.S. 193] carriers . . . United States v. California, supra, 297 U.S. at 185; California v. Taylor, supra, 353 U.S. at 568. We thus agree that [T]he State is liable upon the theory that, by engaging in interstate commerce by rail, it has subjected itself to the commerce power of the federal government.

* * *

It would be a strange situation indeed if the state could be held subject to the [Federal Safety Appliance Act] and liable for a violation thereof, and yet could not be sued without its express consent. The state, by engaging in interstate commerce, and thereby subjecting itself to the act, must be held to have waived any right it may have had arising out of the general rule that a sovereign state may not be sued without its consent.

Respondents deny that Alabama’s operation of the railroad constituted consent to suit. They argue that it had no such effect under state law, and that the State did not intend to waive its immunity or know that such a waiver would result. Reliance is placed on the Alabama Constitution of 1901, Art. I, Section 14 of which provides that “the State of Alabama shall never be made a defendant in any court of law or equity”; on state cases holding that neither the legislature nor a state officer has the power to waive the State’s immunity;[12] and on cases in this Court to the effect that whether a State has waived its immunity depends upon its intention and is a question of state law [377 U.S. 195] only. Chandler v. Dix, 194 U.S. 590; Palmer v. Ohio, 248 U.S. 32; Ford Motor Co. v. Department of Treasury, 323 U.S. 459, 466-470. We think these cases are inapposite to the present situation, where the waiver is asserted to arise from the State’s own commission of an act to which Congress, in the exercise of its constitutional power to regulate commerce, has attached the condition of amenability to suit. More pertinent to such a situation is our decision in Petty v. Tennessee-Missouri Bridge Comm’n, supra. That was a suit against a bi-state authority created with the consent of Congress pursuant to the Compact Clause of the Constitution. We assumed arguendo that the suit must be considered as being against the States themselves, but held nevertheless that, by the terms of the compact and of a proviso that Congress had attached in approving it,[13] any immunity they might otherwise have had. In reaching this conclusion, we rejected arguments, like the one made here, based on the proposition that neither [377 U.S. 196] of the State, under its own law, would have considered the language in the compact to constitute a waiver of its immunity. The question of waiver was, we held, one of federal law. It is true that this holding was based on the inclusion of the language in an interstate compact sanctioned by Congress under the Constitution. But such compacts do not present the only instance in which the question whether a State has waived its immunity is one of federal law. This must be true whenever the waiver is asserted to arise from an act done by the State within the realm of congressional regulation; for the congressional power to condition such an act upon amenability to suit would be meaningless if the State, on the basis of its own law or intention, could conclusively deny the waiver and shake off the condition. The broad principle of the Petty case is thus applicable here: where a State’s consent to suit is alleged to arise from an act not wholly within its own sphere of authority, but within a sphere -- whether it be interstate compacts or interstate commerce -- subject to the constitutional power of the Federal Government, the question whether the State’s act constitutes the alleged consent is one of federal law. Here, as in Petty, the States by venturing into the congressional realm “assume the conditions that Congress under the Constitution attached.” 359 U.S. at 281-282.

Note in the above case that extraterritorial jurisdiction was procured by the federal government within the exterior limits of a “foreign state”, which was a state of the Union, by the commission of an act by the state in the context of its private business ventures, which act constituted interstate commerce. The state indicated that it did not consent to the jurisdiction of the federal government, but their consent was implied by the combination of the Constitution, which is a “contract” or “compact”, as well as an act falling within the Constitution for which Congress was granted exclusive authority over the state by the state’s own ratification of said “compact” as a member of the Union. In that sense, the Constitution creates the equivalent of an “implied contract” or “quasi contract” which can be used to regulate all activities covered by the contract extraterritorially, even among parties who were unaware of the implied contract and did not explicitly or individually consent. Below is a definition of “implied contract” from Black’s Law Dictionary:

CONTRACT. [...] An implied contract is one not created or evidenced by the explicit agreement of the parties, but inferred by the law, as a matter of reason and justice from their acts or conduct, the circumstances surrounding the transaction making it a reasonable, or even a necessary, assumption that a contract existed between them by tacit understanding. Miller’s Appeal, 100 Pa. 568, 45 Am.Rep. 394; Landon v. Kansas City Gas Co., C.C.A.Kan., 10 F.2d. 263, 266; Caldwell v. Missouri State Life Ins. Co., 230 S.W. 566, 568, 148 Ark. 474; Cameron, to Use of Cameron, v. Eynon, 322 Pa. 529, 3 A.2d. 423, 424; American La France Fire Engine Co., to Use of American La France & Fomite Industries, v. Borough of Shenandoah, C.C.A.Pa., 115 F.2d. 896, 867.

Implied contracts are sometimes subdivided into those “implied in fact” and those “implied in law,” the former being covered by the definition just given, while the latter are obligations imposed upon a person by the law, not in pursuance of his intention and agreement, either expressed or implied, but even against his will and design, because the circumstances between the parties are such as to render it just that the me should have a right, and the other a corresponding liability, similar to those which would arise from a contract between them. This kind of obligation therefore rests on the principle that whatsoever it is certain a man ought to do that the law will suppose him to have promised to do. And hence it is said that, while the liability of a party to an express contract arises directly from the contract, it is just the reverse in the case of a contract “implied in law,” the contract there being Implied or arising from the liability, Bliss v. Hoy, 70 Vt. 534, 41 A. 1026; Kellum v. Browning’s Adm’r. 231 Ky. 308, 21 S.W.2d. 459, 465. But obligations of this kind are not properly contracts at all, and should not be so denominated. There can be no true contract without a mutual and concurrent intention of the parties. Such obligations are more properly described as “quasi contracts.” Union Life Ins. Co. v. Glasscock, 270 Ky. 750, 110 S.W.2d. 681, 686, 114 A. L. R. 375.

If you want to investigate the matter of federalism further, we highly recommend the following succinct summary from the Liberty University, Item #2.4:

Cooperative Federalism, Gerald Brown, Ed.D.

5.4.6 The Internal Revenue Code is not Public or Positive Law, but Private Law

5.4.6.1 Proof that the I.R.C. is not positive law

You can find a list of specific titles of the U.S. Code that are positive law by examining the legislative Notes under 1 U.S.C. §204. In addition, each Title of the U.S. Code indicates whether or not it contains positive law. As an example, Title One, General provisions, starts out with:

“This title has been made positive law by section 1 of the act of July 30, 1947, ch. 388, 61 Stat. 633, which provided in part that: ‘Title 1 of the United States Code entitled ‘General Provisions,’ is codified and enacted into positive law and may be cited as ‘1 U.S.C. Sec....’”

Whereas Title 26 makes no statement that it is positive law. Congress just says that I.R. Codes were “enacted” and how they may be cited, but never explicitly says they are “positive law”. That means they don’t obligate you to anything without your explicit consent in some form. In that sense, they are “private law” and amount essentially to a contract for federal employment.

If you trace the history of the current Internal Revenue Code, you will find that it began with the 1939 code. All revenue laws prior to the 1939 I.R.C. were repealed when the 1939 code was enacted. See Section 4 of the 1939 code, 53 Stat. 1. In addition to repealing all the previous revenue laws, the 1939 code repealed itself! You can see this for yourself by viewing the 1939 code in section 4:

There have been two major revisions of the I.R.C. since the 1939 code: 1954 and 1986. Both of these codes referred to themselves simply as “amendments”, but what they amended was a repealed code that was dead! If you look at the list of amendments in the 1954 code, it doesn’t even list the sections of the previous 1939 code that were changed, and the reason it doesn’t is because it is amending a dead, inactive, and repealed code! That is why the Internal Revenue Code is not only... not positive law, but is not law at all. Instead, it is a “code of repealed laws” that have no force and effect at all against anyone who does not explicitly consent in some way. Consequently, any legal trials based on the Internal Revenue Code are simply religious inquisitions and not valid legal proceedings by any stretch of the imagination. We will cover this startling fact in the next section to show all the similarities between a historical religious inquisition and a modern tax trial.

No reference to the I.R. Code being positive law either in 1 U.S.C. §204 legislative notes or in the “Title” itself confirms that it is “private law” that applies to specific persons rather than “all persons generally”. These specific persons are those who chose to become “effectively connected” with the U.S. Government income and the only “individual” mentioned in the I.R. Code is a person with the specific status of a Federal Government employee. This is confirmed, for instance, by:

1. 26 U.S.C. §6331(a), which is the ONLY person against whom levy and distraint (enforcement) may be instituted.
2. 26 U.S.C. §7343, which defines “person” for the purposes of the criminal provisions of the I.R.C. as:

   “...an officer or employee of a corporation, or a member or employee of a partnership, who as such officer, employee, or member is under a duty to perform the act in respect of which the violation occurs.”

3. 26 U.S.C. §6671(b), which defines “person” for the purposes of the penalty provisions of the I.R.C. as:

   “...an officer or employee of a corporation, or a member or employee of a partnership, who as such officer, employee, or member is under a duty to perform the act in respect of which the violation occurs.”

Incidentally, the “duty” they are talking about above is fiduciary duty as a “transferee” over federal payments. This fiduciary duty is then defined in 26 U.S.C. §6903. The fiduciary duty was created when you signed up to be a “trustee” for the Social Security Trust by signing and submitting SSA Form SS-5. A trustee is a person who has a fiduciary duty to the Beneficiary of the trust. Your elected representatives in the District of Criminals are the beneficiary of the trust, which has a domicile in the District of Columbia. See the following for exhaustive details on this scam:

Another very important point about codes that are not “positive law” needs to be made here, which is that those codes within the U.S. code which are not “positive law”, such as the Internal Revenue Code, are described simply as “prima facie evidence” of law. 1 U.S.C. §204 and the notes thereunder describe the I.R.C. as a “code” or a “title”, but NEVER as a “law”. Below is the text of 1 U.S.C. §204 to demonstrate this:

TITLE 1 > CHAPTER 3 > §204

§204. Codes and Supplements as evidence of the laws of United States and District of Columbia; citation of Codes and Supplements

In all courts, tribunals, and public offices of the United States, at home or abroad, of the District of Columbia, and of each State, Territory, or insular possession of the United States—

(a) United States Code.—

The matter set forth in the edition of the Code of Laws of the United States current at any time shall, together with the then current supplement, if any, establish prima facie the laws of the United States, general and permanent in their nature, in force on the day preceding the commencement of the session following the last session the legislation of which is included. Provided, however, That whenever titles of such Code shall have been enacted into positive law the text thereof shall be legal evidence of the laws therein contained, in all the courts of the United States, the several States, and the Territories and insular possessions of the United States.

The term “prima facie evidence” is a fancy legal term or “word of art” that simply means “presumed to be law until rebutted with substantive evidence”. Based on our discussion of “presumption” earlier in section 2.8.2 and our detailed coverage of “due process” starting later in section 5.4.14 and following, we know that anything involving “presumption” is not only a Biblical sin under Psalm 19:12-13 and Numbers 15:30, but also is a violation of “due process”.

“The power to create [false] presumptions is not a means of escape from constitutional restrictions,”

“...But where the conduct or fact, the existence of which is made the basis of the statutory presumption, itself falls within the scope of a provision of the Federal Constitution, a further question arises. It is apparent that a
Under the rules of Constitutional due process, an unsubstantiated presumption of any kind cannot act as a substitute for hard physical evidence or else the Constitution has been violated. In a system of jurisprudence such as we have where people are “presumed” to be innocent until proven guilty with evidence, any “presumption” to the contrary is a violation of due process. It is a violation of due process to “assume” or “presume” that anything is “law” unless it was enacted into positive law and proof is entered on the record of same. Positive law is the only legitimate or admissible evidence that the people ever consented to the enforcement of an enactment, and without such explicit consent, no enactment is enforceable nor may it adversely affect a person’s rights. Once again, the Declaration of Independence says that all just powers derive from “consent”, which implies that any compulsion by government absent consent is unjust. The only exception to this rule is the criminal laws, which could not function properly if consent of the criminal was required. “Presumption”, in fact, is the OPPOSITE of “due process”, as the definition of “due process” admits in Black’s Law Dictionary:

“Due process of law. Law in its regular course of administration through courts of justice. Due process of law in each particular case means such an exercise of the powers of the government as the settled maxims of law permit and sanction, and under such safeguards for the protection of individuals rights as those maxims prescribe for the class of cases to which the one in question belongs. A course of legal proceedings according to those rules and principles which have been established in our systems of jurisprudence for the enforcement and protection of private rights. To give such proceedings any validity, there must be a tribunal competent by its constitution—that is, by the law of the creation—to pass upon the subject-matter of the suit; and, if that involves merely a determination of the personal liability of the defendant, he must be brought within its jurisdiction by service of process within the state, or his voluntary appearance. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 714, 24 L.Ed. 565. Due process of law implies the right of the person affected thereby to be present before the tribunal which pronounces judgment upon the question of life, liberty, or property, in its most comprehensive sense: to be heard, by testimony or otherwise, and to have the right of controverting, by proof, every material fact which bears on the question of right in the matter involved. If any question of fact or liability be conclusively presumed [rather than proven] against him, this is not due process of law.”

How do we rebut the false “presumption” that the Internal Revenue Code is law using admissible evidence? One way to rebut the fact that the Internal Revenue Code is “law” is to present section 4 of the 1939 Internal Revenue Code itself, located in 53 Stat. 1, and show that the code repealed all prior revenue laws as well as itself, and therefore is unenforceable. You can also present the legislative notes for 1 U.S.C. §204 to show that it is not “law” or “positive law”, but is “presumed to be law”. Since all presumption which prejudices Constitutional rights is a violation of due process, then the code cannot be used as a substitute for real positive law evidence. The only reason this wouldn’t work in a court of law is because a tyrant judge with a conflict of interest (in violation of 18 U.S.C. §208 and 28 U.S.C. §455) who is subject to IRS extortion won’t allow such evidence to be admitted at trial because it is too likely to reduce his federal retirement benefits. However, if we put the evidence in our IRS administrative record BEFORE the trial by attaching it to the certified mail correspondence we send them, and keep the original correspondence and the notarized proof that we mailed it, then the corrupt judge can no longer keep it out of evidence and may not grant a motion “in limine” by the Department of Injustice to exclude it as evidence at trial. Our administrative record with the IRS is ALWAYS admissible as evidence.

The authority of the IRS is limited to seeing that a proper “return” (kickback) of U.S. Government property (income) is made by Federal Government “employees” and fiduciaries (Trustees) in the name of “tax”. The tax is actually corporate profit that is kicked back to the mother corporation, which is defined as the “United States” in 28 U.S.C. §3002(15)(A). When IRS employees act upon property not within the authority given them by the I.R. Code, they are NOT acting in behalf of the U.S. government and must personally accept the consequences of their illegal actions.
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

IRS employees and government welfare recipients such as tax attorneys have invented a number of specious and false arguments relating to the fact that the I.R.C. is not “positive law”. They will try to exploit your legal ignorance in order to deceive you into thinking that it IS positive law by any one of the following statements. We observed these false statements being made by Mr. Rookyard (http://www.geocities.com/b_rookard/) as we debated him on the Sui Juris Forums (http://suijuris.net). We used the information below to “checkmate” him on each of these issues and thereby exposed his fraud to the large audience there. We have cataloged each false statement and provided a rebuttal you can use against it:

1. FALSE STATEMENT #1: “Everything in the Statutes at Large is ‘positive law’. The IRC was published in the Statutes at Large. Therefore, the I.R.C. MUST be positive law.”

2. REBUTTAL TO FALSE STATEMENT #1: Not everything in the Statutes at Large is “positive law”, in fact. Both the current Social Security Act and the current Internal Revenue Code (the 1986 code) were published in the Statutes at Large and 1 U.S.C. §204 legislative notes indicate that NEITHER Title 26 (the I.R.C.) nor Title 42 (the Social Security Act) of the U.S. Code are “positive law”. Therefore, this is simply a false statement. If you would like to see the evidence for yourself, here it is:

   2.1. 1 U.S.C. §204 Legislative Notes:
       https://www.law.cornell.edu/uscode/ext/1/204
   2.2. 1986 Internal Revenue Code. 100 Stat 2085:

3. FALSE STATEMENT #2: “The Statutes at Large, 53 Stat. 1, say the 1939 Internal Revenue Code was ‘enacted’. Anything that is ‘enacted’ is ‘law’. Therefore, the 1939 I.R.C. and all subsequent versions of it MUST be positive law.”

4. REBUTTAL TO FALSE STATEMENT #2: A repeal of a statute can be enacted, and it produces no new “law”. Seeing the word “enacted” in the Statutes of Law does not therefore necessarily imply that new “law” was created. In fact, you can go over both the current version of 1 U.S.C. §204 legislative notes and all of its predecessors all the way back to 1939 and you will not find a single instance where the Internal Revenue Code has ever been identified as “positive law”. If you think we are wrong, then show us the proof or shut your presumptuous and deceitful mouth.

5. FALSE STATEMENT #3: “The Internal Revenue Code does not need to be ‘positive law’ in order to be enforceable. Federal courts and the I.R.S. call it ‘law’ so it must be ‘law’.”

6. REBUTTAL TO FALSE STATEMENT #3: The federal courts are a foreign jurisdiction with respect to a state national domiciled in his state on land not subject to exclusive federal jurisdiction under Article 1, Section 8, Clause 17 and who has no contracts or fiduciary relationships with the federal government. This is covered extensively in the Tax Fraud Prevention Manual, Form #06.008, Chapter 7. Your statement represents an abuse of caselaw for political rather than legal purposes as a way to deceive people. Even the IRS’ own Internal Revenue Manual (I.R.M.), Section 4.10.7.2.9.8 says that cases below the Supreme Court may not be cited to sustain a position. Furthermore, if you read the cases to which you are referring, you will find out that the party they were talking about was a “taxpayer”. Because the Internal Revenue Code has no liability statute under Subtitle A, then the only way a person can become a “taxpayer” is by consenting to abide by the Code. If he consented, then the code becomes “law” for him. This is why even the U.S. Supreme Court itself refers to the income tax as “voluntary” in Flora v. United States, 362 U.S. 145 (1960). Consent is the ONLY thing that can produce “law”, as we covered in previous sections. The I.R.C. is private law, special law, and contract law that only applies to those who explicitly consent by signing a contract vehicle, such as a W-4, an SS-5, or a 1040. Since all of these forms produce an obligation, then all of them are contracts. The obligation cannot exist without signing them, nor can the IRS lawfully or unilaterally assess a person on a 1040 form under 26 U.S.C. §6020(b) who does not first consent. See section 5.3.1 earlier for details on this scam.

5.4.6.2 The “Tax Code” is a state-sponsored Religion, not a “law”

"Preach the Word; be prepared in season and out of season [by diligent study of this book and God’s Word]; correct, rebuke and encourage—with great patience and careful instruction. For the time will come when men [in the legal profession or the judiciary] will not put up with sound [legal doctrine such as that found in this book]. Instead, to suit their own desires, they [our covetous public dis-servants] will gather around them a great number of teachers [court-appointed “experts”, “licensed” government whores called attorneys and CPA’s, and educators in government-run or subsidized public schools and liberal universities] to say what their itching ears want to hear. They will turn their ears away from the truth and turn aside to [government controlled profession] myths and fables. But you [the chosen of God and His servants must], keep your head in all situations, endure hardship, do the work of an evangelist, discharge all the duties of your [God’s] ministry."

[2 Tim. 4:2-5, Bible, NKJV]
As a consequence of the considerations in the previous section about the requirement for “positive law”, one may safely conclude the following with regard to the Internal Revenue “Code”:

1. The Internal Revenue Code is not positive law, and therefore imposes no obligation upon anyone except federal “public officers”, agents, and contractors and those who consented (called “elected” in IRS publications) to be treated as one of these, even if they in fact are not. Instead, it is “special law”, which applies to particular persons and things and not to all people generally throughout the country. Personal consent is required to give the I.R.C. the status of enforceable law, and we can choose to withhold our consent with no adverse legal consequence.

2. The I.R.C. effectively amounts to an offer and a proposal by the government to put you under their “special protection” from the abuses and tyranny of the IRS. If you accept their offer, you are a party to a private contract with them and are in receipt of taxable federal privileges. The privilege you agreed to accept was that of being left alone and not harassed by the IRS for your decision to keep or retain whatever money and property is left over after the Federal Mafia has raped and pillaged their share from your estate.

3. Every contract requires four things to be valid:
   3.1. An offer: The Internal Revenue Code.
   3.2. Informed and voluntary Consent/Acceptance. Both parties must voluntarily accept the terms of the offer and duress may not be used to procure consent.
   3.3. Mutual Consideration: Something valuable that both parties receive from the agreement.
   3.4. Mutual Assent: Both parties were fully informed about the rights they were surrendering and the consideration they were receiving in return, and all terms of the contract were fully disclosed in writing.

4. In the case of the voluntary contract called the Internal Revenue Code, the consideration is the right to be left alone after you pay the IRS a large bribe and that essentially amounts to “protection money”. Keeping whatever is left over after you bribe them and pay them their extortion is the consideration you derive from this private contract. This is not, however, true consideration, mind you, because it is not an exercise of free will. Instead, if you don’t accept the contract, then you become the target of IRS harassment and terrorism, may lose your job (especially your federal job) and be persecuted by your coworkers for being a “crackpot”. Voluntary consent is impossible under such conditions. Therefore, it is impossible for you to agree to such a legal contract, which is why the government never bothers to disclose it to begin with!

5. The contract is also void on its face because it was not based on informed consent. The IRS and the government never fully disclosed to you the terms of their “invisible adhesion contract”, and chances are you never even read any part of the contract by reading Title 26 for yourself. As a matter of fact, they have exercised every opportunity available to stifle and persecute those freedom advocates who were trying to educate others about the nature of this contract. Consequently, like the marriage license you never should have gotten, you signed away your whole life and all your rights by filing your first 1040 or IRS Form W-4 and thereby declaring yourself to be a “taxpayer” under penalty of perjury.

"Waivers of Constitutional rights not only must be voluntary, but must be knowing, intelligent acts done with sufficient awareness of the relevant circumstances and likely consequences.”

"The question of a waiver of a federally guaranteed constitutional right is, of course, a federal question controlled by federal law. There is a presumption against the waiver of constitutional rights, see, e.g. Glasser v. United States, 314 U.S. 60, 70-71, 86 L.Ed. 680, 699, 62 S.Ct. 457, and for a waiver to be effective it must be clearly established that there was an 'intentional relinquishment or abandonment of a known right or privilege.' Johnson v. Zerbst, 304 U.S. 458, 464, 82 L.Ed. 1461, 1466, 58 S.Ct. 1019, 146 A.L.R. 357." [Brookhart v. Janis, 384 U.S. 1; 86 S.Ct. 1245; 16 L.Ed.2d. 314 (1966)]

6. The decision to accept the terms of the I.R.C. contract also involved fraud on the part of the government. The employees of the IRS who directly or indirectly influenced you to make the decision to accept the contract also never fully disclosed to you that they had no authority to enforce the Internal Revenue Code to begin with. If they never had authority to enforce the I.R.C. against a private citizen who is not employed by the federal government, then they couldn’t offer to stop doing that which they were never authorized to do to begin with! Therefore, they deceived you to believe that they really were giving you something of value (a “benefit” or “consideration”) that they had the legal authority to provide, which is the absence of lawful enforcement actions directed against you. In effect, they convinced you to pay for something that they didn’t have the legal authority to provide to begin with! It’s all based on fraud.

Unquestionably, the concealment of material facts that one is, under the circumstances, bound to disclose may constitute actionable fraud. 3 Indeed, one of the fundamental tenets of the Anglo-American law of fraud is that fraud may be committed by a suppression of the truth (soppessor veri) as well as by the suggestion of falsehood (soppesstio falsi). 4 It is, therefore, equally competent for a court to relieve against fraud whether it is committed by suppression of the truth—that is, by concealment—or by suggestion of falsehood. 5
Where failure to disclose a material fact is calculated to induce a false belief, the distinction between concealment and affirmative misrepresentation is tenuous. Both are fraudulent. 11 An active concealment has the same force and effect as a representation which is positive in form. 12 The one acts negatively, the other positively; both are calculated, in different ways, to produce the same result. 13 The former, as well as the latter, is a violation of the principles of good faith. It proceeds from the same motives and is attended with the same consequences; 14 and the deception and injury may be as great in the one case as in the other.

[[37 American Jurisprudence 2d, Fraud and Deceit, §144 (1999)]]

“Fraud vitiates every transaction and all contracts. Indeed, the principle is often stated, in broad and sweeping language, that fraud destroys the validity of everything into which it enters, and that it vitiates the most solemn contracts, documents, and even judgments. 8 Fraud, as it is sometimes said, vitiates every act, which statement embodies a thoroughly sound doctrine when it is properly applied to the subject matter in controversy and to the parties thereto and in a proper forum. As a general rule, fraud will vitiate a contract notwithstanding that it contains a provision to the effect that no representations have been made as an inducement to enter into it, or that either party shall be bound by any representation not contained therein, or a similar provision attempting to nullify extraneous representations. Such provisions do not, in most jurisdictions, preclude a charge of fraud based on oral representations.”

[[37 American Jurisprudence 2d, Fraud and Deceit, §144 (1999)]]

Since the people domiciled in the states never enacted the Internal Revenue Code into “positive law”, then they as the “sovereigns” in our system of government never consented to enforce it upon themselves collectively. “Positive law” is the only evidence that the people ever explicitly consented to enforcement actions by their government, because legislation can only become positive law by a majority of the representatives of the sovereign people voting (consenting) to enact the law. Since the people never consented, then the “code” cannot be enforced against the general public. The Declaration of Independence says that all just powers of government derive from the “consent” of the governed. Anything not consensual is, ipso facto, unjust by implication. In fact, the sovereign People REPEALED, not ENACTED the Internal Revenue Code. It has been nothing but a repealed law since 1939, in fact. An examination of the Statutes at Large, 53 Stat. 1, Section 4, reveals that the Internal Revenue Code and all prior revenue laws were REPEALED. See:

Revenue Act of 1939, 53 Stat. 1, SEDM Exhibit #05.027
http://sedm.org/Exhibits/ExhibitIndex.htm

Even state legislatures recognize that the Internal Revenue Code is not law. Below is a cite from the Oregon Revised Statutes (ORS), section 316.012, which refers to the Internal Revenue Code. Notice below the use of the phrase “laws of the United States or to the Internal Revenue Code”. If the Internal Revenue Code were “law”, then that phrase would be redundant, now wouldn’t it?:

316.012 Terms have same meaning as in federal laws; federal law references. Any term used in this chapter has the same meaning as when used in a comparable context in the laws of the United States relating to federal income taxes, unless a different meaning is clearly required or the term is specifically defined in this chapter. Except where the Legislative Assembly has provided otherwise, any reference in this chapter to the laws of the United States or to the Internal Revenue Code:

(1) Refers to the laws of the United States or to the Internal Revenue Code as they are amended and in effect:

(a) On December 31, 2002; or

(b) If related to the definition of taxable income and attributable to a change in the laws of the United States or in the Internal Revenue Code that is enacted after December 31, 2005, as applicable to the tax year of the taxpayer.

(2) Refers to the laws of the United States or to the Internal Revenue Code as they are amended and in effect applicable for the tax year of the taxpayer, if the reference relates to:

[SOURCE: http://landru.leg.state.or.us/ors/316.html]

If the Internal Revenue Code is not “positive law”, but a voluntary contract, then what exactly is it? It is a de facto state-sponsored Federal/Political Religion. Below is how one Christian Writer describes this state-sponsored de facto religion:
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

“There is a war on. Since 1975, hundreds of thousands of Christians in the United States have become aware of the threat to Christianity posed by humanism. It is amazing how long it took for Christians to recognize that humanism is a rival religion: about a century.”

You can read the above free book yourself on our website at:

http://famguardian.org/Subjects/Spirituality/Articles/75BibleQuestions.pdf

The Internal Revenue Code is “de facto” because there is no positive law passed by Congress that actually implements it. Only those who consent to follow it can have any legal obligation to follow it, because it prescribes no legal duties upon anyone but federal “employees”, contractors, agencies, and benefit recipients. Its existence outside of the federal workplace, such as in the lives of private Americans living or working in the states of the Union, was created and continues to be maintained by constructive fraud using “judge-made law”, which is de facto law put in place by the edicts of covetous criminals sitting on the federal bench. This type of law can only exist as long as there are guns and prisons in the hands of government thieves and idolaters, but as soon as the unlawful duress stops, so does the “[in]voluntary compliance”, as the government likes to call it. Remember what the First Amendment says?:

“Congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.”
[First Amendment]

The First Amendment doesn’t say anything at all about “judges making law”, so that is exactly what our corrupted state and federal judiciaries have done! A religion is simply a “voluntary” association of people who espouse certain common beliefs and behaviors, the object of which is to reverence or hold in high esteem a “superior being”. If that superior being is anything but the true living God mentioned in the Bible, then we are involved in pagan idol worship.

“Religion, Man’s relation to Divinity, to reverence, worship, obedience, and submission to mandates and precepts of supernatural or superior beings. In its broadest sense includes all forms of belief in the existence of superior beings exercising power over human beings by volition, imposing rules of conduct, with future rewards and punishments. Bond uniting man to God, and a virtue whose purpose is to render God worship due him as source of all being and principle of all government of things. Nikulnikoff v. Archbishop, etc., of Russian Orthodox Greek Catholic Church, 142 Misc. 894, 255 N.Y.S. 653, 663. “

Our society is based on “equal protection of the laws” (see section 4.3.2 earlier), so there simply can’t be any “superior beings” in America, but the judiciary has changed all that with “judge made law” so that judges become the object of idol worship. We call this “neo-religion” or state-sponsored pagan federal religion “The Civil Religion of Socialism”. This religion is thoroughly described in detail in the free pamphlet below:

Socialism: The New American Civil Religion, Form #05.016
http://sedn.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

Unlike Christianity, the foundation of this state-sponsored judicial religion is fear, not love. This state religion of humanism and socialism is based entirely on “the power to destroy”, which is why it produces fear and why people comply at all. In that sense, it is Satanic and evil. The only basis for a righteous justice system is “the power to create” and not the “power to destroy”, as we pointed out at the beginning of this chapter in section 5.1.1.

“The great principle is this: because the constitution will not permit a state to destroy, it will not permit a law involving the power to destroy. […] They decided against the tax; because the subject had been placed beyond the power of the states, by the constitution. They decided, not on account of the subject, but on account of the power that protected it; they decided that a prohibition against destruction was a prohibition against a law involving the power of destruction.”
[Providence Bank v. Billings, 29 U.S. 514 (1830)]

The “law” described above that is doing the destruction to our society presently is “judge made law”, and not statutes passed by Congress. The superior being that is being worshipped in this false religion is “The Beast”, mentioned in the book of Revelation chapters 17 and 18 in the Bible. That book describes “The Beast” as the political rulers (politicians, Congressmen, Judges, and the President) of the earth. The worship and servitude of this “Beast” occurs mostly out of fear but also because of ignorance and laziness, as we showed earlier in section 4.3.10.
"And I saw the beast, the kings [political rulers] of the earth, and their armies [of nonbelievers under a democratic form of government], gathered together to make war against Him [God] who sat on the horse and against His army.
[Revelation 19:19, Bible, NKJV]

Those who took the mark of this “Beast”, the Socialist Security Number, will be the first to be judged and condemned by God, as described in Revelation 16:1-2. See our book as follows available for free downloading at:

Social Security: Mark of the Beast, Steven Miller
http://famguardian.org/Publications/SocialSecurity/TOC.htm

This Beast is personified by the corruption evident in the political realm and the Federal and state Judiciaries in their treasurous and illegal enforcement of our revenue codes (not “laws”, but “codes”). The judges in courts everywhere have become the “Priests” of this pagan neo-religion, and by virtue of the fact that they are ignoring the federal and state Constitutions and are not being held accountable for such Treason, everything that comes out of their mouth becomes law, or “common law” or “judge-made law”:

"Judge-made law. A phrase used to indicate judicial decisions which construe away the meaning of statutes, or find meanings in them the legislature never intended. It is perhaps more commonly used as meaning, simply, the law established by judicial precedent and decisions. Laws having their source in judicial decisions as opposed to laws having their source in statutes or administrative regulations.”

This “judge-made law” has created a new, “de facto” government that is in complete conflict with the “de jure” government described by our federal and state Constitutions and the public acts that implement them. We show this process of corruption graphically later on in section 6.1, where we show the history of how the Executive, Legislative, and Judicial branches have conspired over the last 100 years to strip us of our Constitutional rights and thereby make us into tax slaves residing on the “federal plantation” called the federal zone. Only a pagan “god” called a “judge” can create law out of nothing and without explicit consent of the people found in the Constitution. Only a pagan “god” called a “judge” can deprive the people of “equal protection” by protecting IRS wrongdoers while coercing those who refuse to consent to their abuses. Only a pagan “god” can create man-made “law” which conflicts with the Ten Commandments and the Constitution and do so with impunity.

“…it must be recognized that in any culture the source of law is the god of that society. If law has its source in man’s reason, then reason is the god of that society. If the source is an oligarchy, or in a court, senate, or ruler, then that source is the god of that system.

Modern humanism, the religion of the state, locates law in the state and thus makes the state, or the people as they find expression in the state, the god of the system. As Mao Tse-Tung has said, “Our God is none other than the masses of the Chinese people.” [2] In Western culture, law has steadily moved away from God to the people (or the state) as its source, although the historic power and vitality of the West has been in Biblical faith and law.

“Third, in any society, any change of law is an explicit or implicit change of religion. Nothing more clearly reveals, in fact, the religious change in a society than a legal revolution. When the legal foundations shift from Biblical law to humanism, it means that the society now draws its vitality and power from humanism, not from Christian theism.

“Fourth, no disestablishment of religion as such is possible in any society. A church can be disestablished, and a particular religion can be supplanted by another, but the change is simply to another religion. Since the foundations of law are inescapably religious, no society exists without a religious foundation or without a law-system which codifies the morality of its religion.”
[The Institutes of Biblical Law, Rousas John Rushdoony, 1973, pp. 4-5]

The purpose of the “Civil Religion of Socialism” is to steal the sovereignty of the People and to replace it with a dictatorshipe and a totalitarian police state devoid of individual rights. This is accomplished through “judge-made law” and social engineering in the tax “code”. The result is that the people comply out of their desire to take the path of least resistance which minimizes fear and personal liability. The Internal Revenue Code is just such a voluntary federal religion. When we join this feudal religion and figuratively move our “domicile” and our primary political “allegiance” to the federal plantation under 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) and (a)(10), 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(39) and 26 U.S.C. §7408(d). By doing so, we surrender our sovereignty, turn it over to the Congress, and become “subjects” who live on the “federal plantation” (federal zone), which we call the “matrix”. To join such a state-sponsored religion, we need only lie about our status as federal “employees” on either a W-4 or submit a 1040 form with a nonzero liability. Once we shift our primary allegiance from God to the “state”, Congress becomes our new “king” because they can pass any statute and it will apply to us, including those statutes that are not “positive law”, and they can disregard the need for implementing regulations because they don’t need implementing regulations for federal “employees”. The benefits of this religion are that we are insulated from responsibility for ourselves and from fear of the IRS or the government. Acceptance of this religion represents a formal and complete transfer of sovereignty over your person, labor and property from you to your public “dis-servants”. You turn over responsibility for yourself to the government in exchange for them taking care of you when you get old or unemployed. You become federal property: a slave, in effect, through the operation of a voluntary contract called the Internal Revenue Code. This, friends, is nothing short of idolatry, in stark violation of the First Commandment in the Ten commandments (see Exodus 20 in the Bible) to not have any other idols before God. We are supposed to trust God, not government, to provide for us. Trusting government is putting the vanity of man ahead of the grace and majesty and sovereignty of God.

“"It is better to trust the Lord
Than to put confidence in man.
It is better to trust in the Lord
Than to put confidence in princes [or government, or the 'state']. "
[Psalm 118:8-9]

Such man-centric (rather than God-centric) idolatry is the worst of all sins described in the Bible, and a sin for which God repeatedly and violently killed those who committed it. Refer to sections 4.1 and 4.3.1 through 4.3.13 for an in-depth exposition backing up these conclusions. This type of idolatry describes the original sin of Lucifer, who wanted to do it “his [man’s] way” instead of God’s way. God pronounced a death sentence upon us for the original sin of Adam and Eve, and He said life would be a struggle as a consequence of this death sentence meted out under His sovereign Law.

"Cursed is the ground for your sake;
In toil you shall eat of it
All the days of your life.
Both thorns and thistles it shall bring forth for you,
And you shall eat the herb of the field.
In the sweat of your face you shall eat bread
Till you return to the ground,
For out of it you were taken;
For dust you are,
And to dust you shall return."
[Genesis 3:17-19, Bible, NKJV]

Ever since the original fall described above, we have been trying to escape God’s sovereign judgment and punishment for our sin by escaping liability for ourselves and accountability to Him. We have been doing this by making an atheistic government into our false god, parent, caretaker, and social insurance company. The purpose of law within a society based on this “Civil Religion of Socialism” is to facilitate irresponsibility and thereby undermine God’s sovereignty by interfering with the curse He put on us for our original sin and disobedience against His sovereign command. We talked about this much more thoroughly earlier in section 4.3.10, entitled “The Unlimited Liability Universe” if you would like to investigate further. In so doing, we fornicate with the Beast, which is the political rulers of the world. Black’s Law Dictionary defines “commerce” as “intercourse”.

“Commerce … Intercourse by way of trade and traffic between different peoples or states and the citizens or inhabitants thereof, including not only the purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities, but also the instrumentalities [governments] and agencies by which it is promoted and the means and appliances by which it is carried on…”

When we, as natural persons, send our money to the government or receive money from the government, we are involved in “intercourse”. The Bible in Isaiah 54:5-6 describes God as the “husband” of believers and it describes believers as His “bride”. We as His bride are committing adultery and fornication when we conduct “commerce” with the government as private individuals. See section 4.3.1 earlier for a complete explanation of this analogy that is quite frightening and completely fulfills the prophesy found in the book of Revelation in the Bible.

Now that we have established that the “Tax Code” is in fact a state sponsored religion, we will now document the core “beliefs” that make up this false religion. We will also show why every one of these beliefs not only cannot be substantiated with facts or law, but also that the opposite can be established with admissible evidence, scientifically provable facts, and law. This comparison and analysis builds upon our earlier article in section 4.3.13 entitled “Our Government has become Idolatry and a False Religion”, where we proved that our government has become a god, and that this was done essentially by destroying the “equal protection of the laws” that is the foundation of freedom in this country, and thereby making the public servants into gods because they do not have to abide by the same rules as everyone else does.

This scam started in 1918, which was the first year that federal judges were made into “taxpayers” and subject to IRS extortion. As long as a federal judge risks an audit by IRS for not helping them prosecute tax resisters, justice is impossible in any courtroom. As long as attorneys are licensed by the government, it is impossible to get impartial representation in a court either. One of the things you hear church pastors talk about quite often is how Satan is the great imitator. Satan imitates God’s design for everything. Satan, in fact, is quoted as saying:

“I will ascend into heaven,
I will exalt my throne above the stars of God;
I will also sit on the mount of the congregation
On the farthest sides of the north;
I will ascend above the heights of the clouds,
I will be like the Most High.”
[Isaiah 14:13-14, Bible, NKJV]

The Bible also says that Satan is in control of this world and the governments of the world. See Matt. 4:8-11, John 14:30-31. Our tax system, in fact, is an imitation of God’s design for the church and has all the trappings of a church. Going back to our definition of “religion” once again to prove this:

Based on the criteria in the above table, we can see that the Internal Revenue Code has all the essential characteristics of a “religion” and a church and thereby imitates God’s design:

1. “Belief” in a superior being, which is the federal judge and our public “servants”. This reversal of roles, whereby the public “servants” become the ruling class is called a “dulocracy” in law.

   “Dulocracy. A government where servants and slaves have so much license and privilege that they domineer.”

2. The capitol, Washington D.C., is the “political temple” or headquarters of this false religious cult. Don’t believe us? During the Congressional debates of the Sixteenth Amendment in 1909, one Congressman amazingly admitted as much. The Sixteenth Amendment is the income tax amendment that was later fraudulently ratified in 1913. Notice the use of the words “civic temple” and “faith” in his statement, which are no accident.

   “Now, Mr. Speaker, this Capitol is the civic temple of the people, and we are here by direction of the people to reduce the tariff tax and enact a law in the interest of all the people. This was the expressed will of the people at the polls, and you promised to carry out that will, but you have not kept faith with the American people.”
   [44 Cong.Rec. 4420, July 12, 1909; Congressman Heflin talking about the enactment of the Sixteenth Amendment]

If you want to read the above amazing admission for yourself, visit our website at:

3. This false and evil religion meets all the criteria for being described as a “cult”, because:
   3.1. The cult imposes strict rules of conduct that are thousands of pages long and which are far more restrictive than any other religious cult.
   3.2. Participating in it is harmful to our rights, liberty, and property.
   3.3. The “cult” is perpetuated by keeping the truth secret from its members. This book contains 1,900 pages of secrets that our public servants and the federal judiciary have done their best to keep cleverly hidden and obscured from public view and discourse. When these secrets come out in federal courtrooms, the judges make the case unpublished so the American people can’t learn the truth about the misdeeds of their servants in government. Don’t believe us? Read the proof for yourself:
   http://www.nonpublication.com/
   3.4. Those who try to abandon this harmful cult are threatened and harassed illegally and unconstitutionally by covetous public dis-servants. For an example, see:
   http://www.irs.gov/compliance/enforcement/article/0,,id=119332.00.html

4. No scientifically proven basis for belief. False belief is entirely based on false presumption, which in turn is promoted by:
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

4.1. “Prima facie” law such as the Internal Revenue Code. “Prima facie” means “presumed to be law”.

4.2. Propaganda and “brainwashing” by the media and public schools and cannot stand public scrutiny or scientific investigation because it cannot be substantiated.

4.3. Deceptive IRS publications that don’t tell the whole truth. See section 3.19 earlier for proof.

5. The false government “god” is the “source of all being and principle of all government”. Those who refuse to comply are illegally stripped of their property rights, their security, and their government employment by a lawless federal judiciary in retaliation for demanding the rule of written positive law. They cease to have a commercial existence or “being” as a punishment for demanding the “rule of law” instead of “rule of men” in our country. Their credit rating is destroyed and their property is illegally confiscated as punishment for failure to comply with the whims, wishes, and edicts of an “imperial judiciary” and its henchmen, the IRS.

6. The false religion has its own “bible”, which is all 9,500 pages of the “Infernal (Satanic) Revenue Code”. This “scripture” or “bible” was written by the false prophets, who are our political leaders in Congress. It was written to further their own political (church) ends. Former Treasury Secretary Paul O’Neil calls the I.R.C.:

“9,500 pages if gibberish.”

7. Federal courtrooms are where “worship services” are held for the cult. Even the seats are the same as church pews! This worship service amounts to devil worship, because its purpose is to help criminals working for the government to enforce in a federal courtroom that which is neither law nor which can be worship service amounts to devil worship, because its purpose is to help criminals working for the government to enforce in a federal courtroom that which is neither law nor which can be 7.1. Worship services begin with a religious event.

7.1.1. The taking of an oath is a religious event.

Jurare est Deum in testum vocare, et est actus divini cultus.

To swear is to call God to witness, and is an act of religion. 3 Co. Inst. 165. Vide 3 Bouv. Inst. n. 3180, note; 1 Bent, Rat. of Jud. Ev. 376, 371, note.

[Bouvier’s Maxims of Law, 1856; SOURCE: http://famguardian.org/Publications/BouvierMaximsOfLaw/BouviersMaxims.htm]

7.1.2. Before the worship services begin, observers and the jury must stand up when the judge enters the room. This too is an act of “worshipping and reverencing” their superior being, who in fact is a pagan deity.

Religion. Man’s relation to Divinity, to reverence, worship, obedience, and submission to mandates and precepts of supernatural or superior beings [JUDGES, in this case]. In its broadest sense includes all forms of belief in the existence of superior beings exercising power over human beings by volition, imposing rules of conduct, with future rewards and punishments. Bond uniting man to God, and a virtue whose purpose is to render God worship due him as source of all being and principle of all government of things. Nikulnikoff v. Archbishop, etc., of Russian Orthodox Greek Catholic Church, 142 Misc. 894, 255 N.Y.S. 653, 663.

7.2. The worship ceremony, at least in the context of taxes, is conducted in the figurative dark, like a séance. The Bible describes Truth as “light”. Any ceremony where the entire truth is not considered is conducted in the dark.

7.2.1. The judge is gagged by the law from speaking the truth by the legislature. 28 U.S.C. §2201(a).

7.2.2. The judge forbids others from speaking the ONLY truth, which is the law itself. In tax trials, judges very commonly forbid especially defendants from quoting or using the law in front of the jury. Those who disregard this prohibition are sentenced to contempt of court.

“One who turns his ear from hearing the law [God’s law, or man’s law], even his prayer [and ESPECIALLY his trial] is an abomination.”

[Prov. 28:9, Bible, NKJV]

7.2.3. Jurists who have never read or learned the law in public school are not even aware of what they are enforcing. Therefore, they become agents of the judge instead of the law.

7.2.4. The law library in the court building forbids jurors from going in and reading the law they are enforcing, and especially while serving as jurists. They are supposed to be supervising the judge in executing the law, and they can’t fulfill that duty as long as they have never learned and are forbidden from reading the law while serving as jurors.
7.2.5. The judge does everything in his power to destroy the weapons of the nongovernmental opponent by excluding everything he can and excluding none of the government’s evidence. This basically results in a vacuum of truth in the courtroom.

_The first one to plead his cause seems right. Until his neighbor comes and examines him._

[Prov. 18:17, Bible, NKJV]

_“The hypocrite with his mouth destroys his neighbor, But through knowledge the righteous will be delivered.”_

[Prov. 11:9, Bible, NKJV]

8. The “deacons” of the church are attorneys who are “licensed” to practice law in the church by the chief priests of the church.

8.1. They too have been “brainwashed” in both public school and law school to focus all their effort on procedure, presentation, and managing their business. They learn NOTHING about history, legislative intent, or natural law, which are the very foundations of law.

8.2. The Statutes At Large published by Congress are the only real law and legally admissible evidence, in most cases. See 1 U.S.C. §204. Yet, it is so expensive and inconvenient to read the Statutes At Large online that for all practical purposes, it is off limits to all attorneys. For instance, it costs over $7 per page to even VIEW the Statutes at Large in the largest online legal reference service, Westlaw.

8.3. Because they are licensed to practice law, the license is used as a vehicle to censor and control the attorneys from speaking the truth in the courtroom. Consequently, they usually blindly follow what the priest, ahem, I mean “judge” orders them to do and when they don’t, they have their license pulled and literally starve to death.

9. The greatest sin in the government church called court is willful violations of the law. All tax crimes carry “willfulness” as a prerequisite. God’s law and Christianity work exactly the same way. The greatest sin in the Holy Bible is to blaspheme the Holy Spirit, which is equivalent of doing something that you KNOW is wrong. See Matt. 12:32, Mark 3:29, Luke 12:10.

10. The judge, like the church pastor, wears a black robe and chants in Latin. Many legal maxims are Latin phrases that have no meaning to the average citizen, which is the very same thing that happens in Catholic churches daily across the country.

11. The jury are the twelve disciples of the judge, rather than of the Truth or the law or their conscience. Their original purpose was as a check on government abuse and usurpation, but judges steer them away from ruling in such a manner and being gullible sheep raised in the public “foo” system, they comply to their own injury.

11.1. Those who are not already members of the cult are not allowed to serve on juries. The judge or the judge’s henchmen, his “licensed attorneys” who are “officers of the court”, dismiss prospective jurors who are not cult members during the voir dire (jury selection) phase of the tax trial. The qualifications that prospective jurists must meet in order to be part of the “cult” are at least one of the following:

11.1.1. They collect government benefits based on income taxes and don’t want to see those benefits reduced or stopped. The only people who can collect federal benefits under enacted law and the Constitution are federal employees. Therefore, they must be federal employees. Since jurors are acting as “voters”, then receipt of any federal benefits makes them into a biased jury in the context of income taxes and violates 18 U.S.C. §597, which makes it illegal to bribe a voter. The only way to eliminate this conflict of interest is to permanently remove public assistance or to recuse/disqualify them as jurists.

11.1.2. They faithfully pay what they “think” are “income taxes”. They are blissfully unaware that in actuality, the 1040 return is a federal employment profit and loss statement.

11.1.3. They believe or have “faith” in the cult’s “bible”, which is the Infernal Revenue Code and falsely believe it is “law”. Instead, 1 U.S.C. §204 legislative notes says it is NOT positive law, but simply “presumed” to be law. Presumption is a violation of due process and therefore illegal under the Sixth Amendment.

11.1.4. They are ignorant of the law and were made so in a public school. They therefore must believe whatever any judge or attorney tells them about “law”. This means they will make a good lemming to jump off the cliff with the fellow citizen who is being tried.

11.2. Juries are FORBIDDEN in every federal courthouse in the country from entering the law library while serving on a jury because judges don’t want jurists reading the law and finding out that judges are misrepresenting it in the courtroom. Don’t believe us? Then call the law library in any federal court building and ask them if jurors are allowed to go in there and read the law while they are serving. Below are the General Order 228C for the Federal District Court in San Diego proving that jurors are not allowed to use the court law library while serving. Notice jurors are not listed as authorized to use the library in this order:

_General Order 228C, San Diego Federal District Court_

Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

11.3. Unlike every other type of federal trial, judges forbid discussing the law in a tax trial. Could it be because we don’t have any and he doesn’t want to admit it?

11.4. Public (government) schools deliberately don’t teach law or the Constitution either, so that the public become sheep that the government can shear and rape and pillage.

11.5. Federal judges also warn juries these days NOT to vote on their conscience, as juries originally did and were encouraged to do. He does this to steer or direct the jury to do his illegal and unconstitutional dirty work. He turns the jury effectively into an angry lynch mob and thereby maliciously abuses legal process for his own personal benefit in violation of 18 U.S.C. §208. He helps get the jury angry at the defendant by giving them the idea that their “tax” bill will be bigger because the defendant refuses to “pay their fair share”.

12. Those who refuse to worship the false god and false religion (which the Bible describes in the book of Revelation as “the Beast”) are “exorcised” from society by being put into jail so that they don’t spread the truth about the total lack of lawful authority to institute income taxation within states of the Union. They are jailed as political prisoners by communist judges and socialist fellow citizens, just like in the Soviet Union. You can read more about this at:

Social Security: Mark of the Beast, Form #11.407
http://famguardian.org/Publications/SocialSecurity/TOC.htm

13. The lawyers representing both sides are licensed by the pope/judge and therefore will pay homage to and cooperate with him fully or risk losing their livelihood and becoming homeless. Every tax trial has THREE prosecutors who are there to prosecute you: your defense attorney, the opposing U.S. attorney, and the judge, all of whom are on the take. Attorneys have a conflict of interest and it is therefore impossible for them to objectively satisfy the fiduciary duty to their clients which they have under the law. You can read more about this scam at:

Petition for Admission to Practice, San Diego Federal District Court http://famguardian.org/Subjects/LawAndGovt/LegalEthics/PetForAdmToPractice-USDC.pdf

14. “Future rewards and punishments”, which are political persecution in a courtroom using our uninformed neighbors acting as jurors as a weapon against us and by exploiting their fear of the government, envy and jealousy directed against the rich or those who dare to demand the authority of law before they will pay “their fair share”, or those who challenge being compelled to subsidize the government benefit payments to these jurors with their labor.

15. Tax preparation businesses all over the country like H.R. Block are where “confession” is held annually to “deacons” of the federal church/cult.

16. Representatives of this church/cult, such as the Department of Justice and the IRS, dress the same as Mormon missionaries.

17. Those who participate in this cult can write-off or deduct their contributions just like donations to any church. State income taxes, for instances, are deductible from federal gross income.

18. The false god/idol called government gets the “first fruits” of our labor, before the Lord even gets one dime, using payroll deductions. Some employers treat the payroll deduction program like it is a law to be followed religiously, even though it is not. This is a violation of Prov. 3:9, which says:

“Honor the LORD with your possessions, And with the firstfruits of all your increase;”
[Prov. 3:9, Bible, NKJV]

Yes, people, the government has made itself into a religion and a church, at least in the realm of taxation. The problem with this corruption of our government is that the U.S. Supreme Court said they cannot do it:

“The "establishment of religion" clause of the First Amendment means at least this: neither a state nor the Federal Government can set up a church. Neither can pass laws which aid one [state-sponsored political] religion, aid all religions, or prefer one religion over another. Neither can force or influence a person to go to or to remain away from church against his will, or force him to profess a belief or disbelief in any religion. No person can be punished for entertaining or professing religious beliefs or disbeliefs, for church attendance or non-attendance. No tax in any amount, large or small, can be levied to support any religious activities or institutions, whatever they may be called, or whatever form they may adopt to teach or practice religion. Neither a state nor the Federal Government can, openly or secretly, participate in the affairs of any religious organizations or groups and vice versa."
[Everson v. Bd. of Ed., 330 U.S. 1, 15 (1947)]

“(The Establishment Clause is infringed when the government makes adherence to religion relevant to a person’s standing in the political community. Direct government action endorsing religion or a particular religious practice is invalid under this approach, because it sends a message to nonadherents that they are outsiders, not full members of the political community, and an accompanying message to adherents that they are insiders, favored members of the political community.”
Can we prove with evidence that this false political religion is a “cult”? Below is the definition of “cult” from Easton’s Bible Dictionary:

“cults, illicit non-Israelite forms of worship. Throughout the history of ancient Israel, there were those who participated in and fostered the growth of cults (cf. 2 Kings 21). These cults arose from Canaanite influence in the land of Israel itself and from the influence of neighboring countries. One of the main tasks of the prophets was to return the people to the proper worship of God and to eliminate these competing cults (1 Kings 18:20–40). See also Asherah; Baal; Chemosh; Harlot; High Place; Idol; Milkom; Molech; Queen of Heaven; Tammuz; Topheth; Worship; Zeus. 57

Since the belief and worship of people is directed at other than a monotheistic Christian God, the government has become a “cult”. It has also become a dangerous or harmful cult. Below is the description of “dangerous cults” from the Microsoft Encarta Encyclopedia 2005:

“V. Dangerous Cults

Some cults or alternative religions are clearly dangerous: They provoke violence or antisocial acts or place their members in physical [or financial] danger. A few have caused the deaths of members through mass suicide or have supported violence, including murder, against people outside the cult. Sociologists note that violent cults are only a small minority of alternative religions, although they draw the most media attention.

Dangerous cults tend to share certain characteristics. These groups typically have an exceedingly authoritarian leader who seeks to control every aspect of members’ lives and allows no questioning of decisions. Such leaders may hold themselves above the law or exempt themselves from requirements made of other members of the group. They often preach a doomsday scenario that presumes persecution from forces outside the cult and a consequent need to prepare for an imminent Armageddon, or final battle between good and evil. In preparation they may hoard firearms. Alternatively, cult leaders may prepare members for suicide, which the group believes will transport it to a place of eternal bliss”

To summarize then:

1. A “cult” is “dangerous” if it promotes activities that are harmful. Giving away one’s earnings and sovereignty is harmful if not done knowingly, voluntarily, and with full awareness of what one was giving up. This is exactly what people do who file or pay monies to the government that no law requires them to pay.

2. Dangerous cults are authoritarian and have stiff mainly “political penalties” for failure to comply. The federal judiciary dishes out stiff penalties to people who refuse to join or participate in the dangerous cult, even though there is no “law” or positive law authorizing them to do so and no implementing regulation that authorizes any kind of enforcement action for the positive law. These penalties are as follows:

   2.1. Jail time.
   2.2. Persecution from a misinformed jury who has been deliberately tampered with by the judge to cover up government wrongdoing and prejudice the case against the accused.
   2.3. Exorbitant legal fees paying for an attorney in order to resist the persecution.
   2.4. Loss of reputation, credit rating, and influence in society.
   2.5. Deprivation of property and rights to property because of refusal to comply.

3. The dangerous cult of the Infernal (Satanic) Revenue Code also seeks to control every aspect of the members lives. The tax code is used as an extensive, excessive, and oppressive means of political control over the spending and working habits of working Americans everywhere. The extent of this political control was never envisioned or intended by our Founding Fathers, who wanted us to be completely free of the government. Members of the cult falsely believe that there is a law requiring them to report every source of earnings, every expenditure in excruciating detail. They have to sign the report under penalty of perjury and be thrown in jail for three years if even one digit on the report is wrong. The IRS, on the other hand, isn’t responsible for the accuracy of anything, including their publications, phone support, or even their illegal assessments. In that sense, they are a false god, because they play by different and lesser rules than everyone else.

4. The cult of the Infernal Revenue Code also “preaches a doomsday scenario that presumes persecution from forces outside the cult”. This is a religion based on fear, and the fear originates both from ignorance about the law and with what will happen to the members who leave the cult or refuse to comply with all the requirements of the cult. The doomsday messages are broadcast from the IRS and DOJ website, public affairs section, where they target famous personalities for persecution because of failure to participate in the cult, and when successful, use the result as evidence that they too will be severely persecuted for failure to participate. This is no different than what the Communists did in Eastern Europe, where they put a big wall around East Berlin 100 miles long to force people to remain under communist rule. They patrolled the wall by guards, dogs, and weapons, and highly publicized all escape attempts in which people were killed, maimed, or murdered. This negative publicity acted as a warning and deterrent against those who might think of escaping.

5. The cult of the Infernal (Satanic) Revenue Code also prepares people for spiritual suicide and Armageddon. Remember, the term “Armageddon” comes from the Bible book of Revelation, where doomsday predictions describe what will happen to those who allowed government to become their false god. Those who did so, and who accepted the government’s “mark” called the Socialist INSecurity Number, will be the first to be judged and persecuted and injured, according to Revelation. This is the REAL Armageddon folks!

“So the first [angel] went and poured out his bowl [of judgment] upon the earth, and a foul and loathsome sore came upon the men who had the mark of the beast [political rulers] and those who worshiped his image [on the money].”
[Rev. 16:2, Bible, NKJV]

Only those who do not accept the government’s mark will reign with Christ in Heaven:

“And I saw thrones, and they sat on them, and judgment was committed to them. Then I saw the souls of those who had been beheaded for their witness to Jesus and for the word of God, who had not worshiped the beast or his image, and had not received his mark on their foreheads or on their hands. And they lived and reigned with Christ for a thousand years.”
[Rev. 20:4, Bible, NKJV]

Surprisingly, the U.S. Congress, who are the REAL criminals and cult leaders who wrote the “Bible” that started this dangerous “cult of the Infernal Revenue Code”, also described the cult as a form of “communism”. Here is the unbelievable description, right from the Beast’s mouth, of the dastardly corruption of our legal and political system which it willfully did and continues to perpetuate and cover up:

and evil. Go back and review section 2.7.1 earlier if you want to compare our system of government with Pure Communism.

The “wall” between east and west like the one in Berlin is an invisible “legal wall” maintained by the federal judiciary and the legal profession, who keep people (the “slaves” living on the federal plantation) from escaping the communism and regaining their freedom and complete control over their property, their labor, and their lives. Those who participate in the federal income tax system by living on this figurative “federal plantation” essentially are treated as government “employees”. In order to join this dangerous cult, all they have to do is use a federal W-4 or 1040 form to lie or deceive the federal government into believing that they are “U.S. citizens” and “employees”, who under the I.R.C. are actually and only privileged “public officers” of the United States government. This is what it means to have income “effectively connected with a trade or business”, as described throughout the code, because “trade or business” is defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(26) as “the functions of a [privileged, excise taxable] public office [in the United States Government]”. If you would like to know how this usurious and unconstitutional federal employee kickback program is used to perpetuate the fraud, read section 5.6.10 later. A whole book has been written about how the “federal employee kickback program” works called IRS Humbug: Weapons of Enslavement, Frank Kowalik, written by Frank Kowalik, and it is a real eye opener that we highly recommend.

All the earnings of these slaves living on this federal plantation are treated in law (not physically, but by the courts) as originating from a gigantic monopoly called the “United States” government which, based on the way it has been acting, is actually nothing but a big corporation (see 28 U.S.C. §3002(15)(A)) a million times more evil than what happened to Enron and which will eventually destroy everyone, including those who refuse to participate in the “cult”, if we continue to complacently tolerate its usurpations and violations of the Constitution and God’s laws. The book of Revelation in the Bible describes exactly how the destruction will occur, and it even gives this big corporation a name called “The Beast”. The people living on the federal corporate plantation are called “Babylon the Great Harlot”, which is simply an assembly of ignorant, lazy, irresponsible, and dependent people living under a pure, atheistic commercial democracy who are ignorant and complacent about government, law, truth, and justice. They have been dumbed-down in the school system and taught to treat government as their friend, not realizing that this same government has actually become the worst abuser of their rights.

Wake up people!

“And I heard another voice from heaven [God] saying, ‘Come out of her [Babylon the Great Harlot, a democratic state full of socialist non-believers], my people [Christians], lest you share in her sins, and lest you receive of her plagues.’”

[Revelation 18:4, Bible, NKJV]

5.4.6.3 How you were duped into signing the contract and joining the state-sponsored religion and what the contract says

It might surprise you to find that if you are a “taxpayer”, then at one point or another, you probably unknowingly volunteered to become a federal “employee”, even if you never set foot in a federal building or worked for the federal government! That process of volunteering is accomplished using the Form W-4, which says at the top “Employee Withholding Allowance Certificate” and this is the nexus that connects you to the Beast. When you signed that IRS Form W-4 and submitted it with a perjury oath in violation of Matt. 5:34, then:

1. You consented to be treated as an “employee” of the federal government. All “employees” are elected or appointed under 26 C.F.R. §31.3401(c)-1. That makes you into a “public officer” and the federal government has always had nearly totalitarian authority over its officers and employees, and can compel them to surrender ALL of their constitutional rights in the lawful exercise of their duties.

“The restrictions that the Constitution places upon the government in its capacity as lawmaker, i.e., as the regulator of private conduct, are not the same as the restrictions that it places upon the government in its capacity as employer. We have recognized this in many contexts, with respect to many different constitutional guarantees. Private citizens perhaps cannot be prevented from wearing long hair, but policemen can. Kelley v. Johnson, 425 U.S. 238, 247 (1976). Private citizens cannot have their property searched without probable cause, but in many circumstances government employees can. O’Connor v. Ortega, 480 U.S. 709, 723 (1987) (plurality opinion); id., at 732 (SCALIA, J., concurring in judgment). Private citizens cannot be punished for refusing to provide the government information that may incriminate them, but government employees can be dismissed when the incriminating information that they refuse to provide relates to the performance of their job. Gardner v. Broderick, [497 U.S. 62, 95] 99 U.S. 273, 277–278 (1968). With regard to freedom of speech in particular: Private citizens cannot be punished for speech of merely private concern, but government employees can be fired for that reason. Connick v. Myers, 461 U.S. 138, 147 (1983). Private citizens cannot be punished for partisan political activity, but federal and state employees can be dismissed and otherwise punished for that reason. Public Workers v. Mitchell, 330 U.S. 75, 101 (1947); Civil Service Comm’n v. Letter Carriers, 413 U.S. 548, 556 (1973); Broadrick v. Oklahoma, 413 U.S. 601, 616 –617 (1973).”

Every action you do after signing up to be a federal “employee”, including your earnings from private life, are considered to be “done on official federal business” at that point. Your new boss and idol to be worshipped is the federal government, and not God. Your continued obedience to the IRS is evidence that you worship this false god.

2. By virtue of being a federal “employee”, then you became “effectively connected with a trade or business” because “trade or business” is defined in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(26) as “the functions of a public office”. 26 C.F.R. §1.1-1(a)(2)(ii) reveals that only “aliens” (residents) and “nonresident aliens” (nationals domiciled in states of the Union engaged in a public office) with income “effectively connected with a trade or business” can have “taxable income” or be the proper subject of the code. The process of becoming “effectively connected” with federal income was done through what is called an “election” in the Internal Revenue Code. This “election” is made upon either filing a form W-4 that authorizes withholding or a 1040 form that indicates a nonzero liability. This contractual act of “election” can be revoked using the procedures described later in section 5.3.6, which are further described in our Tax Fraud Prevention Manual, Form #06.008.

3. Once your earnings contractually became “effectively connected with a trade or business”, at least a portion of them became “public property” and the federal government gained “in rem” jurisdiction over them by virtue of Article 4, Section 3, Clause 2 of the U.S. Constitution, even if that property is not situated on federal land or otherwise within exclusive federal jurisdiction. The portion of your earnings that are considered “public property” over which they have jurisdiction is that portion which you owe in “taxes” (kickbacks) at the end of the year. If you resist efforts to collect property in your custody that always has belonged to the government, then all actions against you will be a “replevin”, meaning an action against the property under your control and not against the “person”, which is you.

"Replevin. An action whereby the owner or person entitled to repossession of goods or chattels may recover those goods or chattels from one who has wrongfully distrained or taken or who wrongfully detains such goods or chattels. Jim’s Furniture Mart, Inc. v. Harris, 42 Ill.App.3d. 488, 1 Ill.Dec. 175, 176, 356 N.E.2d. 175, 176. Also refers to a provisional remedy that is an incident of a replevin action which allows the plaintiff at any time before judgment to take the disputed property from the defendant and hold the property pendente lite. Other names for replevin include Claim and delivery, Detinue, Revendication, and Sequestration (q.v.)." [Black’s Law Dictionary, Sixth Edition, p. 1299]

4. Because your earnings as a federal “employee” are “public property”, then under 5 U.S.C. §553(a)(2) and 44 U.S.C. §1505(a)(1), there is no need to publish implementing regulations in the Federal Register governing the management of that property. Because you volunteered to be treated as a federal “employee”, you already consented to the terms of the implied employment agreement found in the Internal Revenue Code between your new “employer” (the federal government) and you. Those who don’t want to be “effectively connected” simply don’t pursue federal employment or volunteer to fill out any forms that would indicate they are “effectively connected”.

5. Because you are an “employee” and are treated under the I.R.C., Subtitles A and C as a “person” whose every action is in the context of federal employment, then all monies paid to the IRS at that point literally do support the “government”, because everything you do in your private life is done essentially as a government “employee”. Therefore, the Internal Revenue Code literally does describe a “tax” at that point because it does support only the government, of which you are part 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. The only thing the government can spend money on is a “public purpose”, which means the only thing they can compensate you for is services as a federal “employee”:

"Public purpose. In the law of taxation, eminent domain, etc., this is a term of classification to distinguish the objects for which, according to settled usage, the government is to provide, from those which, by the like usage, are left to private interest, inclination, or liberality. The constitutional requirement that the purpose of any tax, police regulation, or particular exertion of the power of eminent domain shall be the convenience, safety, or welfare of the entire community and not the welfare of a specific individual or class of persons (such as, for instance, federal benefit recipients as individuals). "Public purpose" that will justify expenditure of public money generally means such an activity as will serve as benefit to community as a body and which at same time is directly related function of government. Pack v. Southwestern Bell Tel. & Tel. Co., 215 Tenn. 503, 387 S.W.2d. 789, 794.

The term is synonymous with governmental purpose. As employed to denote the objects for which taxes may be levied, it has no relation to the urgency of the public need or to the extent of the public benefit which it is to follow; the essential requisite being that a public service or use shall affect the inhabitants as a community, and not merely as individuals. A public purpose or public business has for its objective the promotion of the public health, safety, morals, general welfare, security, prosperity, and contentment of all the inhabitants or residents within a given political division, as, for example, a state, the sovereign powers of which are exercised to promote such public purpose or public business.” [Black’s Law Dictionary, Sixth Edition, p. 1231, Emphasis added]

6. As a federal statutory “employee” (5 U.S.C. §2105(a)), you surrendered your sovereign immunity as a “non-resident non-person” and made an election (elected yourself into public office) under 26 U.S.C. §6013(g) to be treated as a

...presents “alien” and a “resident” who no longer has control over his earnings. Here is how the U.S. Supreme Court describes it:

A nondiscriminatory taxing measure that operates to defray the cost of a federal program by recovering a fair approximation of each beneficiary’s share of the cost is surely no more offensive to the constitutional scheme than is either a tax on the income earned by state employees or a tax on a State’s sale of bottled water. 18 The National Government’s interest in being compensated for its expenditures is only too apparent. More significantly perhaps, such revenue measures by their very nature cannot possess the attributes that led Mr. Chief Justice Marshall to proclaim that the power to tax is the power [435 U.S. 444, 461] to destroy. There is no danger that such measures will not be based on benefits conferred or that they will function as regulatory devices unduly burdening essential state activities. It is, of course, the case that a revenue provision that forces a State to pay its own way when performing an essential function will increase the cost of the state activity. But Graves v. New York ex rel. O’Keefe, and its precursors, see 306 U.S. at 483 and the cases cited in n. 3, teach that an economic burden on traditional state functions without more is not a sufficient basis for sustaining a claim of immunity. Indeed, since the Constitution explicitly requires States to bear similar economic burdens when engaged in essential operations, see U.S. Const., Art. I, 10, cl. 1; Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Mahon, 260 U.S. 393 (1922) (State must pay just compensation when it “takes” private property for a public purpose); U.S. Const., Art. I, 10, cl. 1; United States Trust Co. v. New Jersey, 431 U.S. 1 (1977) (even when burdensome, a State often must comply with the obligations of its contracts), it cannot be seriously contended that federal exactions from the States of their fair share of the cost of specific programs that they receive from federal programs offend the constitutional scheme.

Our decisions in analogous context support this conclusion. We have repeatedly held that the Federal Government may impose appropriate conditions on the use of federal property or privileges and may require that state instrumentalities comply with conditions that are reasonably related to the federal interest in particular national projects or programs. See, e. g., Ivanhoe Irrigation Dist. v. McCracken, 357 U.S. 275, 294 - 296 (1958); Oklahoma v. Civil Service Comm’n, 303 U.S. 127, 142 - 144 (1947); United States v. San Francisco, 310 U.S. 16 (1940); cf. National League of Cities v. Usery, 426 U.S. 833, 853 (1976); Fry v. United States, 421 U.S. 542 (1975). A requirement that States, like all other users, pay a portion of the costs of the benefits they enjoy from federal programs is surely permissible since it is closely related to the [435 U.S. 444, 462] federal interest in recovering costs from those who benefit and since it affects no greater interference with state sovereignty than do the restrictions which this Court has approved.

A clearly analogous line of decisions is that interpreting provisions in the Constitution that also place limitations on the taxing power of government. See, e. g., U.S. Const., Art. I, 8, cl. 3 (restricting power of States to tax interstate commerce); 10, cl. 3 (prohibiting any state tax that operates “to impose a charge for the privilege of entering, trading in or caring for a port.” Clyde Mallory Lines v. Alabama ex rel. State Docks Comm’n, 298 U.S. 261, 265 - 266 (1935)). These restrictions, like the implied state tax immunity, exist to protect constitutionally valued activity from the undue and perhaps destructive interference that could result from certain taxing measures. The restriction implicit in the Commerce Clause is designed to prohibit States from burdening the free flow of commerce, see generally Complete Auto Transit, Inc. v. Brady, 430 U.S. 274 (1977), whereas the prohibition against duties on the privilege of entering ports is intended specifically to guard against local hindrances to trade and commerce by vessels. See Packet Co. v. Kokak, 95 U.S. 80, 85 (1877).

Our decisions implementing these constitutional provisions have consistently recognized that the interests protected by these Clauses are not offended by revenue measures that operate only to compensate a government for benefits supplied. See, e. g., Clyde Mallory Lines v. Alabama, supra (flat fee charged each vessel entering port upheld because charge operated to defray cost of harbor policing); Evansville-Vanderburgh Airport Authority v. Delta Airlines, Inc., 405 U.S. 707 (1972) ($1 head tax on explaining commercial air passengers upheld under the Commerce Clause because designed to recoup cost of airport facilities). A governmental body has an obvious interest in making those who specifically benefit from its services pay the cost and, provided that the charge is structured to compensate the government for the benefit conferred, there can be no danger of the kind of interference [435 U.S. 444, 463] with constitutionally valued activity that the Clauses were designed to prohibit.

[Massachusetts v. United States, 435 U.S. 444 (1978)]

7. As an employee, the federal courts exercise jurisdiction over you as a federal “employee”, trustee, and fiduciary as described in 26 U.S.C. §6903. If you fail to properly discharge your duties and return profits of your employment to the mother corporation, you violate your fiduciary duty and your employment contract, the I.R.C., and become subject to federal but not state jurisdiction. Below is how the legal encyclopedia American Jurisprudence 2d describes claims by the United States against its employees and officers:

“The interest to be recovered as damages for the delayed payment of a contractual obligation to the United States is not controlled by state statute or local common law.18 In the absence of an applicable federal statute, the

The same process above is also accomplished by completing and signing and submitting the IRS Form 1040 to the IRS. 26 C.F.R. §1.1-(1)(a)(2)(ii) specifically says that the only biological people who earn “taxable income” are those with income “effectively connected with a trade or business”, and these are the only sections anywhere in the I.R.C. or implementing regulations which we could find that refer to the earnings of a biological person as being taxable. By submitting a 1040 with a nonzero “taxable income” to the IRS or a W-4 to an “employer”, you are essentially signing a contract with the federal government. Below are the terms of that “adhesion contract”:

“For you, brethren, have been called to liberty; only do not use liberty as an opportunity for the flesh, but through love serve one another.”
[Gal. 5:13, Bible, NKJV]

1. Benefits/consideration:

1.1. You can surrender responsibility for yourself to your public servants and live a life of luxury and complacency at government expense. That life of luxury is described in Rev. 18:3:

1.1.1. Your new false god, the government, will now take care of you like it takes care of the rest of its own: counterfeiting money or stealing it from your neighbor to take care of you when you get old. You have joined the Mafia’s retirement system and they will take care of you, so long as you are politically correct.

1.1.2. You have imperceptibly and unknowingly joined Babylon the Great Harlot, and the process was transparent to you so you don’t have to fear the inevitable consequences of God’s wrath for your decision. To wit:

"For all the nations [and socialist peoples] have drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication, the kings [political rulers] of the earth have committed fornication [commerce] with her, and the merchants [corporations] of the earth have become rich through the abundance of her luxury."
And I heard another voice from heaven saying, “Come out of her, my people, lest you share in her sins, and lest you receive of her plagues. For her sins have reached to heaven, and God has remembered her iniquities.”
[Rev. 18:3-5, Bible, NKJV]

1.2. Your life while on earth will be a comfortable and “safe” life free of consequence or responsibility. It will be a life that rewards failure, dependency, and irresponsibility, and punishes, taxes, and persecutes success and entrepreneurship. You will be a “subject federal citizen” who surrendered all his rights and abdicated his godly stewardship:

TITLE 42 > CHAPTER 21 > SUBCHAPTER I > Sec. 1981.
Sec. 1981.- Equal rights under the law

(a) Statement of equal rights

All persons within the jurisdiction of the United States [. . .] shall be subject to like punishment, pains, penalties, taxes, licenses, and exactions [and IRS extortions] of every kind, and to no other.

You will live in a very temporary man-made, egalitarian socialist utopia free of God or liability to obey His laws. Those churches who criticize this result as immoral are persecuted by pulling their 501(c )(3) exemption and raping and pillaging and seizing their assets. The government will enforce with its unjust laws not only equality of opportunity, but equality of RESULT, by abusing its taxing powers to redistribute wealth from the “haves” to the “have-nots and parasites” of society.

1.3. Your political “mafia protectors” will abuse their lawmaker power to indemnify you from liability for all of the following sins and violations of God’s eternal laws. Their lawmaker power will be used as a “license to sin” free of consequence:

1.3.1. Bad parenting. The government will take care of your kids if you screw up. They will become “wards of the state” who won’t come knocking on your door when you get older because Uncle will take care of them instead.

1.3.2. Selfishness in churches. The government will take over the charity business with Welfare, Medicare, and Social Security so that churches don’t have to bother with charity anymore and can keep all their tithes for vain and self-serving purposes like gymnasiums, new buildings, raises for the pastor, and after-school programs.

1.3.3. Homosexuality. Leviticus 18:22 forbids homosexuality and says it is an abomination to be hated and for which God will judge. The government, on the other hand, will decriminalize it and even promote gay marriages, causing eternal damnation for all those who practice it after they die. Your politicians will either decriminalize it or offer to do so in order to procure your votes at election time.

1.3.4. Abortion. Exodus 20:13 and Prov. 31:8-9 say abortion is murder and violates God’s law. Politicians promise to decriminalize it in order to bribe promiscuous single people to vote for them.

1.3.5. Adultery. The Ten Commandments in Exodus 20:14 makes adultery a sin. King David was punished and persecuted by God for his violation of this law. Yet government, in race to bribe voters for votes, has replaced lifelong Holy Matrimony with temporary civil unions, thus making

1.3.5.1. Marriage into a form of legalized prostitution
1.3.5.2. Marriage licenses into prostitution licenses
1.3.5.3. Family court judges into “pimps”
1.3.5.4. Family law attorneys into tax collectors for the pimp.

Without Holy Matrimony virtually eliminated and replaced with temporary civil unions, there can be no such thing as adultery. All children born to parents practicing this form of prostitution give birth to bastard children under God’s law who have no right to inheritance. Consequently, the state will steal their inheritance through inheritance taxes. See: http://famguardian.org/Subjects/FamilyLaw/Marriage/InDefenseOfMarriage.htm

1.3.6. Fornication. God says in 1 Cor. 6:18 and 1 Thess. 4:3-6 not to fornicate. Yet the government panders to the sinful nature of people by loosening FCC rules for lewdness on TV, teaching children in high school sex education class how to fornicate without having babies. They teach “safe sex”, but avoid teaching “abstinence”, thus contributing to the decay of the family and the sacredness of Holy Matrimony.

1.3.7. Laziness. No need to be in a hurry to find a job because government will support me indefinitely if I don’t.

“The hand of the diligent will rule, but the lazy man will be put to forced labor [government slavery!]” [Prov. 12:24, Bible, NKJV]

1.3.8. Borrowing money. We showed earlier in section 2.8.11 that God’s laws, such as Rom. 13:8, Deut. 15:6, Deut. 28:12, Deut. 23:19 say we should not borrow or go into debt or charge interest to our brother. Yet our politicians actually encourage debt through the tax code by allowing write-offs.

1.4. You gain the right to demand that the government subsidize and encourage your sinful behaviors by offering you “tax deductions” for sins that it wants you to commit in its name. For instance:

1.4.1. You can demand on your tax return the “privilege” to demand that the government allow you to exempt or deduct interest on debt, as a way to encourage you to go into debt, even though debt violates God’s laws found in Rom. 13:8; Deut. 15:6; Deut. 28:12, Deut. 23:19.

1.4.2. You can “write off” those kids you never wanted by claiming them as deductions, as long as you make them into “taxpayers” and government “whores” by giving them “Slave Surveillance Numbers”. The government will then use the SSN as a way to chain your kids and their kids to the federal plantation for the rest of their lives. Is that kind of treachery of your kids worth $3,000 in deductions per year? Shouldn’t they have the right to make an informed choice when they reach adulthood whether or not they want to be “taxpayers” or have an SSN?

2. Responsibilities and Liabilities:

2.1. You must accept the Mark of the Beast, the Slave Surveillance Number (SSN). This number is simply a number used to track federal property, which you then become.

2.2. You become a federal “employee” on official business 24 hours a day, 7 days a week because:

2.2.1. When “employed”, you become a subcontractor to the federal government and a fiduciary over earnings that actually belong to the government and which are paid to you as a “trustee” of federal property by your federal “employer”.

2.2.2. Your “straw man”, who has the Slave Surveillance Number (SSN) attached to it, actually becomes the recipient of your earnings and you become the “trustee”. The straw man has “legal title” and you have “equitable title”. You cease to be the “trustee” and achieve “legal title” ONLY AFTER you have given the government their “fair share” according to whatever your benefactors at the IRS say you are entitled to keep. In other words, you get the “spoils” and the “leftovers” after the government has taken whatever it wants and picked the bones clean.

2.2.3. Any money you spend on yourself that came from the government disguised as an “entitlement” or “benefit” and which you did not directly earn with your own personal labor in effect becomes “employment income” that controls your private, personal behavior. The Supreme Court said in Loan Assoc. v. Topeka, 87 U.S. (20 Wall.) 655, 665 (1874), that a legitimate “tax” can only be spent on the support of the “government”. If you spend government entitlements on yourself instead of in furtherance of an official government function, then you become a thief and a criminal who is abusing government funds for personal gain. Therefore, it must be presumed that you are on “official business” 24 hours a day, 7 days a week or you would have to be thrown in jail for embezzlement.

2.3. Because you are a federal “employee” 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, then you, all of your earnings, and your personal and real property become federal property subject to federal jurisdiction under Article 4, Section 3, Clause 2 of the U.S. Constitution, regardless of where it physically exists. The government has an “equity interest” in your property which you gave to them by identifying yourself as a federal “employee” with a Slave Surveillance Number.

2.4. You become an “officer of a corporation”, which is the federal corporation called the United States government as defined in 28 U.S.C. §3002(15)(A). As such, you become the proper legal subject of most penalty statutes within the Internal Revenue Code such as 26 U.S.C. §6671(b) and 26 U.S.C. §7343, which only apply penalties to “officers of corporations”.

2.5. You become a “resident” (alien) living on the federal plantation situated in the District of Columbia (see 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(39)) and 26 U.S.C. §7408(d). None of the property or labor the government “harvests” from its slaves on the plantation can be considered stolen property, because everyone living on the federal plantation presumably “volunteered” to be there by signing the form W-4 and 1040.

2.6. You and your property become surety for endless government debt in violation of Prov. 6:1-5. The whole function of the IRS, in fact, is to manufacture fraudulent debt instruments called “assessments” without lawful authority and to thereby put people into perpetual debt slavery to their government in violation of the Thirteenth Amendment prohibition against “peonage” (slavery to pay off a debt), and “involuntary servitude”.

2.7. You become an individual and a “natural person” in the context of the Internal Revenue Code and become subject to the code in its entirety. This is called being “effectively connected with a trade or business” in the code.

2.8. Since you already admitted you are a “taxpayer”, which is a government “whore”, by furnishing a federal identifying number and specifying a liability on a tax form, then the burden of proof shifts to you to prove that you don’t earn “Taxable income” under 26 U.S.C. §7491. Your Constitutional right of being “innocent until proven guilty” is now completely reversed. You are guilty of being a government “whore” until you prove you are innocent.

2.9. All of your earnings become “effectively connected with a trade or business in the [federal] United States”, which means they are treated as though they originated from the Federal Government, even if they didn’t. All those who are “effectively connected” are essentially parties to an implied “employment” contract with the federal government. In effect, you became a federal “contractor” and the money you earn is theirs until you settle accounts with the prime contractor by submitting a tax return. This “return” is actually a return of property actually belonging to the federal government:

“THE”+ “IRS”= "THEIRS"

2.10. Whenever you are given a political or a legal choice as a jurist or voter or a parent, you have an obligation to do whatever you must in order to ensure the flow of your share of the stolen “loot” from the public servant thieves you work for in the federal judiciary and the IRS.

2.10.1. As a jurist, you must rule against all those people who try to exit the fraudulent revenue collection system or who try to reform the corruption within the system.

2.10.2. As a voter, you must vote for the candidate who promises the most stolen “loot”.

2.10.3. As a parent, you must train your children that they have a duty to participate in the tax system, because that is where your retirement is going to come from!

The above is EVIL! It is the essence of socialism. Christians cannot be socialists. All socialists worship government as their false god. This is Satan worship and idolatry, because it is man/government-centric instead of God centric. The Bible calls such rebellion and mutiny of God’s laws “witchcraft” in 1 Sam 15:22-23. Such idolatry is punishable by death under God’s law (see Ezekial 9 in the Bible). The same kind of rebellion by our public servants of the Constitution is also punishable by death under 18 U.S.C. §2381.

Based on the above analysis, the only ethical and moral way to avoid the “roach trap statute” called the Internal Revenue Code is to not accept any social welfare benefit. This is a very important point. The Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act (F.S.I.A.), codified in 28 U.S.C. Chapter 97, in fact, clearly identifies why this is the case. 28 U.S.C. §1605, part of the act, contains a list of exceptions whereby a foreign sovereign forfeits its sovereign immunity in courts of justice. Two exceptions in particular reveal why we can’t accept federal benefits or be “U.S. citizens”. To wit:

1. 28 U.S.C. §1605(a)(2) says that if you conduct “commerce” within the legislative jurisdiction of the “United States” (meaning the federal zone), then you lose your sovereign immunity. Receiving government benefits or paying for them through taxation qualifies as “commerce”. 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(39) and 26 U.S.C. §7408(d) place all “persons” subject to the tax code squarely within the District of Columbia regardless of where they live, which is what the “United States” is defined as in 26 U.S.C. §7701(a)(9) and (a)(10):

   TITLE 28 > PART IV > CHAPTER 97 > § 1605
   § 1605. General exceptions to the jurisdictional immunity of a foreign state

   A foreign state shall not be immune from the jurisdiction of courts of the United States or of the States in any case—

   (2) in which the action is based upon a commercial activity carried on in the United States by the foreign state; or upon an act performed in the United States in connection with a commercial activity of the foreign state elsewhere; or upon an act outside the territory of the United States in connection with a commercial activity of the foreign state elsewhere and that act causes a direct effect in the United States;

For further confirmation of the fact that your domicile as a federal “employee” is the District of Columbia, see Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 17(b), which says that those acting in a representative capacity for a federal corporation, which in this case is the “United States”, become subject to the laws for the domicile of the corporation, which is the District of Columbia under 4 U.S.C. §72 and Article 1, Section 8, Clause 17 of the Constitution:

IV. PARTIES > Rule 17.

Rule 17. Parties Plaintiff and Defendant; Capacity

(b) Capacity to Sue or be Sued.

Capacity to sue or be sued is determined as follows:
(1) for an individual who is not acting in a representative capacity, by the law of the individual’s domicile;
(2) for a corporation [or an officer of the corporation such as the Social Security Trustee], by the law under which it was organized; and
(3) for all other parties, by the law of the state where the court is located, except that:
   (A) a partnership or other unincorporated association with no such capacity under that state’s law may sue or be sued in its common name to enforce a substantive right existing under the United States Constitution or laws;
   (B) 28 U.S.C. §§ 754 and 959(a) govern the capacity of a receiver appointed by a United States court to sue or be sued in a United States court.

2. 28 U.S.C. §1603(b), also part of the act, defines an "agency or instrumentality" of a foreign state as an entity (1) which is a separate legal person, corporate or otherwise, and (2) which is an organ of a foreign state or political subdivision thereof, or a majority of whose shares or other ownership interest is owned by a foreign state or political subdivision thereof, and (3) which is neither a citizen of a state of the United States as defined in 28 U.S.C. §1332(c) and (d) nor created under the laws of any third country.

   TITLE 28 > PART IV > CHAPTER 97 > § 1603
   § 1603. Definitions

   For purposes of this chapter—
   (a) A “foreign state”, except as used in section 1508 of this title, includes a political subdivision of a foreign state or an agency or instrumentality of a foreign state as defined in subsection (b).
   (b) An “agency or instrumentality of a foreign state” means any entity—
   (1) which is a separate legal person, corporate or otherwise, and
   (2) which is an organ of a foreign state or political subdivision thereof, or a majority of whose shares or other ownership interest is owned by a foreign state or political subdivision thereof, and
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

Based on the above, when you are acting effectively as a federal “employee”, you are not a “separate legal person”, but instead are just an extension of the federal government. Consequently, you cannot be part of a “foreign state” and maintain judicial immunity in a federal court if you accept federal employment as a person engaged in a “trade or business”. Likewise, you will lose your sovereign immunity if you allow yourself to be a statutory “citizen of the United States” under 8 U.S.C. §1401. That is why we suggested in the preceding chapter that you MUST correct your citizenship status to expatriate statutory citizenship in favor of Constitutional citizenship. Watch out!

We can’t take what we didn’t earn, and so if we are willing to accept a “benefit” (government bribe), then we should be just as willing to accept the responsibility to pay for it or else we are definitely a thief. No devout Christian can be a thief. Some people try to compromise on this principle by calculating how much they paid in, inflation adjusting it, and then only taking out exactly what they put in and no more. This is another alternative, but the cleanest way to separate from the Beast is simply to:

1. Completely abandon all entitlement to government social welfare “benefits”. You can abandon Social Security Participation, for instance, using the following form:

   Resignation of Compelled Social Security Trustee, Family Guardian Fellowship

2. Consider all contributions so far as simply donations to charity.

3. Completely abandon allegiance to the Beast. When we say “abandon allegiance”, we mean abandon allegiance to the lawless de facto government we have now but maintain our allegiance to the de jure “state”, which is all the people that our public servants work for and who are the true “sovereigns” in our system of government. If we have allegiance to them instead of our political rulers, then we will want to do what is best for them but taking them off their sinful addiction to plundered loot stolen by our covetous public servants.

4. Vow to take complete and exclusive responsibility for ourselves from this day forward. This is what the Bible requires:

   “Make it your ambition to lead a quiet life, to mind your own business and to work with your hands, just as we told you, so that your daily life may win the respect of outsiders and so that you will not be dependent on anybody.”
   [1 Thess. 4:9-12, Bible, NIV]

   “Go to the ant, you sluggard! Consider her ways and be wise, which, having no captain, overseer or ruler, provides her supplies in the summer, and gathers her food in the harvest, how long will you slumber, O sluggard?
   When will you rise from your sleep? A little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep—so shall your poverty come on you like a prowler [and government dependence], and your need like an armed man.”
   [Prov. 6:6-11, Bible, NKJV]

   [INTERPRETATION: Laziness allows us to be robbed of our heritage and our birthright, our dignity and our sovereignty, because we are victimized by it and will end up surrendering our rights to the government out of desperation in order to get the sustenance that we were otherwise unwilling to earn. This makes the government into a Robinhood, which, using the tools of democracy, turns a sword against its own citizens to rob from the rich to give to the poor. This leads to the downfall of democracy eventually because the government becomes an agent of plunder.]

A search of the Federal Register and the C.F.R. will not find criminal sections 7201(tax evasion) and 7203(willful failure to file) of Title 26 (the I.R. Code) anywhere. This fact seems to contradict the mandate of 44 U.S.C. §1505(a), which says, “for the purposes of this chapter (Sec. 1501 et seq.) every document or order which prescribes a penalty has generally applicability and legal effect” and that those “having general applicability and legal effect” are “required to be published.” From this it would appear as though these penalty statutes should have been published in the Federal Register and the C.F.R. if they were to be enforced against the public at large, but Congress very deliberately limited the application of these penalty statutes and all of chapter 75 of the I.R. Code to a person described in section 7343 of the I.R. Code—a person who is “under a duty to perform the act in respect of which the violation occurs.” The person under a duty is only a person who “effectively connected” himself with the U.S. Government income, an act called a “trade or business”, and willfully made some of that income part of their own estate by criminal conduct, such as fraud or perjury. Upon proof of fraud or perjury, the additional punishment of these statutes is applicable. Hence, sections 7201 and 7203 are not statutes of primary punishment, they only provide for additional punishment after a primary criminal act has been charged and proven. Only then does the U.S. Court have authority to impose the additional punishment under section 7201 (tax evasion) and section 7203 (willful failure to file) upon such a person, and no other.

The Federal Government “employee” who works in the federal zone and is responsible for handling part of the U.S. Government’s income is the most likely candidate to be in a position to act fraudulently with regard to that income. Such person is in a fiduciary relationship with regard to the U.S. Government income and 44 U.S.C. §1501(a)(2) excepted statutes that are “effective only against Federal agencies or persons in their capacity as officers, agents, or employees thereof.” So, technically, section 1505(a) does not require section 7201 and section 7203 of the I.R. code to be in the Federal Register or C.F.R. if it is only being enforced against federal “employees”.

If these statutes prescribed primary rather than secondary punishment, they would have general applicability and would be required to be noticed. But, these statutes state they are additional punishment, so they cannot lawfully be used as primary punishment. The fact that they are not noticed in the Federal Register as required for other types of penalties is conclusive evidence that they can only be applied upon the specific persons described in section 7343 and only upon specific U.S. Government income. Section 7343, in turn, only specifies that “officer or employee of a corporation” is the party who has the duty to perform, and that person is holding “public office” in the United States government ONLY. Absence in the Federal Register tells that the subject matter is limited to internal revenue service and not possible to use for external (to the Federal Government) revenue service.

With I.R.C. Sections 7201 and 7203 being applied generally through malicious prosecutions and malicious abuse of legal process, there remains only one source of authority being used by Federal Government employees against Americans domiciled in states of the Union and outside of federal jurisdiction. Unlawfulness notwithstanding, Federal Government employees must be relying on authority received by judicial decisions, referred to as “case law” or “judge-made law” by lawyers within and without the U.S. Government.

If you would like to know more detail about how the federal tax “scheme” works as described in this section, we refer you to:

- Section 5.6.10 entitled “Public Officer Kickback Position” later.

5.4.6.4 No one in the government can lawfully consent to the contract

As we proved earlier in section 5.4.4, the U.S. Supreme Court held in Milwaukee v. White, 296 U.S. 268 (1935) that the obligation to pay income taxes is “quasi-contractual in nature”. In that case, they said

“Even if the judgment is deemed to be colored by the nature of the obligation whose validity it establishes, and we are free to re-examine it, and, if we find it to be based on an obligation penal in character, to refuse to enforce it outside the state where rendered, see Wisconsin v. Pelican Insurance Co., 127 U.S. 265, 292, et seq. 8 S.Ct. 1370, compare Fauntleroy v. Lum, 210 U.S. 230, 28 S.Ct. 641, still the obligation to pay taxes is not penal. It is a statutory liability, quasi contractual in nature, enforceable, if there is no exclusive statutory remedy, in the civil courts by the common-law action of debt or indebitatus assumpsit. United States v. Chamberlin, 219 U.S. 250, 31 S.Ct. 155; Price v., United States, 269 U.S. 492, 46 S.Ct. 180; Dollar Savings Bank v. United States, 19 Wall. 227; and see Stockwell v. United States, 13 Wall. 531, 542; Meredith v. United States, 13 Pet. 486, 493. This was the rule established in the English courts before the Declaration of Independence, Attorney General v. Weeks, Bunbury's Exch. Rep. 223; Attorney General v. Jewers and Baity, Bunbury's Exch. Rep. 225; Attorney General v. Hatton, Bunbury's Exch. Rep. [296 U.S. 268, 272] 262; Attorney General v. _ _ _, 2 Ans.Rep. 558; see Comyn's Digest (Title 'Dett.', A. 9); 1 Chitty on Pleading, 123; cf. Attorney General v. Sewell, 4 M.&K. 77. “ [Milwaukee v. White, 296 U.S. 268 (1935)]

The phrase “indebitatus assumpsit” is fancy Latin for “assumed debt”. In other words, the government, in collecting taxes, is “assuming” or “presuming” that you contracted a debt to pay for their services, even if you did not intend to use or contract for or consent to receive any of their services. In this section, we will expand the notion that income taxes are contractual to show that even if you did explicitly consent, there is no one in the government who could consent to the agreement or contract.

Any valid contract requires the following minimum elements:

1. An offer.
2. Mutual consideration.
3. Fully informed consent/assent.
4. Voluntary acceptance. This implies no penalty for failing to participate.
5. Legal age.

The Constitution for the United States divides the federal government into three distinct branches: Legislative, Executive, and Judicial. This broke “Humpty Dumpty” into three pieces. The reasonable question arises as to which of these three pieces has the lawfully delegated authority to contract for or on behalf of the U.S. government in the context of income taxes. Below is what the U.S. Supreme Court said about this interesting subject:

“The Government may carry on its operations through conventional executive agencies or through corporate forms especially created for defined ends. See Keifer & Keifer v. Reconstruction Finance Corp., 306 U.S. 381, 390, 518. Whatever the form in which the Government functions, anyone entering into an arrangement with the Government takes the risk of having accurately ascertained that he who purports to act for the Government stays within the bounds of his authority. The scope of this authority may be explicitly defined by Congress or be limited by delegated legislation, properly exercised through the rule-making power. And this is so even though, as here, the agent himself may have been unaware of the limitations upon his authority. See, e.g., Utah Power & Light Co. v. United States, 243 U.S. 389, 409, 391; United States v. Stewart, 311 U.S. 60, 70, 108, and see, generally, In re Flood Acceptances, 7 Wall. 666.” [Federal Crop Ins. v. Merrill, 332 U.S. 380 (1947)]

Justice Holmes wrote: “Men must turn square corners when they deal with the Government.” Rock Island, A. & L. R. Co. v. United States, 254 U.S. 141, 143 (1920). This observation has its greatest force when a private party seeks to spend the Government’s money. Protection of the public fisc requires that those who seek public funds act with scrupulous regard for the requirements of law; respondent could expect no less than to be held to the most demanding standards in its quest for public funds. This is consistent with the general rule that those who deal with the Government are expected to know the law and may not rely on the conduct of Government agents contrary to law. 17 [467 U.S. 51, 64]

The appropriateness of respondent’s reliance is further undermined because the advice it received from Travelers was oral. It is not merely the possibility of fraud that undermines our confidence in the reliability of official action that is not confirmed or evidenced by a written instrument. Written advice, like a written judicial opinion, requires its author to reflect about the nature of the advice that is given to the citizen, and subjects that advice to the possibility of review, criticism, and reexamination. The necessity for ensuring that governmental agents stay within the lawful scope of their authority, and that those who seek public funds act with scrupulous exactitude, argues strongly for the conclusion that an estoppel cannot be erected on the basis of the oral advice that underlay respondent’s cost reports. That is especially true when a complex program such as Medicare is involved, in which the need for written records is manifest.

[Heckler v. Comm Health Svc, 467 U.S. 51 (1984)]

In their answers some of the defendants assert that when the forest reservations were created an understanding and agreement was had between the defendants, or their predecessors, and some unmentioned officers or agents of the United States, to the effect that the reservations would not be an obstacle to the construction or operation of the works in question; that all rights essential thereto would be allowed and granted under the act of 1905; that, consistently with this understanding and agreement, and relying thereon, the defendants, or their predecessors, completed the works and proceeded with the generation and distribution of electric energy, and that, in consequence, the United States is estopped to question the right of the defendants to maintain and operate the works. Of this it is enough to say that the United States is neither bound nor estopped by acts of its officers or agents in entering into an arrangement or agreement to do or cause to be done what the law does not sanction or permit. Lee v. Muirroe, 7 Cranch, 366, 3 L.Ed. 373; Filor v. United States, 9 Wall. 45, 49, 19 L.Ed. 549, 551; Hart v. United States, 95 U.S. 316, 24 L.Ed. 479; Pine River Logging Co. v. United States, 186 U.S. 279, 291, 243 U.S. 389, 391; United States v. Stewart, 311 U.S. 60, 70, 108, and see generally, In re Flood Acceptances, 7 Wall. 666.” [Utah Power and Light v. U.S., 243 U.S. 389 (1917)]
"It is contended that since the contract provided that the government 'inspectors will keep a record of the work done,' since their estimates were relied upon by the contractor, and since by reason of the inspector's mistake the contractor was led to do work in excess of the appropriation, the United States is liable as upon an implied contract for the fair value of the work performed. But the short answer to this contention is that since no official of the government could have rendered it liable for this work by an express contract, none can by his acts or omissions create a valid contract implied in fact. The limitation upon the authority to impose contract obligations upon the United States is as applicable to contracts by implication as it is to those expressly made."

[Sutton v. U.S., 256 U.S. 575 (1921)]

Undoubtedly, the general rule is that the United States are neither bound nor estopped by the acts of their officers and agents in entering into an agreement or arrangement to do or cause to be done what the law does not sanction or permit. Also, those dealing with an agent of the United [294 U.S. 120, 124] States must be held to have had notice of the limitation of his authority. Utah Power & Light Co. v. United States, 243 U.S. 389, 409, 37 S.Ct. 387; Sutton v. United States, 256 U.S. 575, 579, 51 S.Ct. 563, 19 A.L.R. 461.

How far, if at all, these general rules are subject to modification where the United States enter into transactions commercial in nature ( Cooke v. United States, 91 U.S. 389, 399; White v. United States, 270 U.S. 175, 180, 46 S.Ct. 274) we need not now inquire. The circumstances presented by this record do not show that the assured was deceived or misled to his detriment, or that he had adequate reason to suppose his contract would not be enforced or that the forfeiture provided for by the policy could be waived. New York Life Insurance Co. v. Eggleston, 96 U.S. 572; Phoenix Mut. Life Insurance Co. v. Doster, 106 U.S. 30, 1 S.Ct. 18. The grounds upon which estoppel or waiver are ordinarily predicated are not shown to exist.

Based on the foregoing, we can safely conclude:

1. Only law or legislative enactment can bind the government to a contract.
2. Persons doing business with the government are presumed to know the law, and the law is the vehicle for notifying the public about the limitations imposed upon the authority of agents working for or on behalf of the government.
3. Oral contracts with the government are unenforceable.
4. Only written contracts with the government are enforceable.
5. Officers of the U.S. government who have no delegated authority to bind the government cannot lawfully be party to any agreement or contract.
6. Any contract or agreement entered into with an agent who had no lawful authority to bind the government is null and void ab initio.
7. Even among officers of the U.S. government who have delegated authority from their supervisor to bind the government through contracts, if either they or their supervisors are acting outside of the authority of law, the contracts are unenforceable and create no rights or remedies for the parties.

In addition to the above, no branch of government can delegate any of its powers to another branch. This requirement originates from the Separation of Powers Doctrine:

Where Congress exceeds its authority relative to the States, therefore, the departure from the constitutional plan cannot be ratified by the "consent" of state officials. An analogy to the separation of powers among the branches of the Federal Government clarifies this point. The Constitution's division of power among the three branches is violated where one branch invades the territory of another, whether or not the encroached-upon branch approves the encroachment. In Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 118-137 (1976), for instance, the Court held that Congress had infringed the President's appointment power, despite the fact that the President himself had manifested his consent to the statute that caused the infringement by signing it into law. See National League of Cities v. Usery, 426 U.S., at 842, n. 12. In INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919, 944 -959 (1983), we held that the legislative veto violated the constitutional requirement that legislation be presented to the President, despite Presidents' approval of hundreds of statutes containing a legislative veto provision. See id., at 944-945. The constitutional authority of Congress cannot be expanded by the "consent" of the governmental unit whose domain is thereby narrowed, whether that unit is the Executive Branch or the States.

State officials thus cannot consent to the enlargement of the powers of Congress beyond those enumerated in the Constitution. Indeed, the facts of this case raise the possibility that powerful incentives might lead both federal and state officials to view departures from the federal structure to be in their personal interests. Most citizens recognize the need for radioactive waste disposal sites, but few want sites near their homes. As a result, while it would be well within the authority of either federal or state officials to choose where the disposal sites will be, it is likely to be in the political interest of each individual official to avoid being held accountable to the voters for the choice of location. If 505 U.S. 144, 183 [1] a federal official is faced with the alternatives of choosing a location or directing the States to do it, the official may well prefer the latter, as a means of shifting responsibility for the eventual decision. If a state official is faced with the same set of alternatives - choosing a location or having Congress direct the choice of a location - the state official may also prefer the latter, as it may permit the avoidance of personal responsibility. The interests of public officials thus may not coincide with the Constitution's intergovernmental allocation of authority. Where state officials purport to submit to the direction of Congress in this manner, federalism is hardly being advanced."

The only persons within the government who can bind the government are “public officers” acting under the authority of law. These officials exercise broad discretion in the execution of the “public trusts” under their stewardship as elected or appointed officials of the U.S. government:

“As expressed otherwise, the powers delegated to a public officer are held in trust for the people and are to be exercised in behalf of the government or of all citizens who may need the intervention of the officer. 61 Furthermore, the view has been expressed that all public officers, within whatever branch and whatever level of government, and whatever be their private vocations, are trustees of the people, and accordingly labor under every disability and prohibition imposed by law upon trustees relative to the making of personal financial gain from a discharge of their trusts. 62 That is, a public officer occupies a fiduciary relationship to the political entity on whose behalf he or she serves. 63 and owes a fiduciary duty to the public. 64 It has been said that the fiduciary responsibilities of a public officer cannot be less than those of a private individual. 65 Furthermore, it has been stated that any enterprise undertaken by the public official which tends to weaken public confidence and undermine the sense of security for individual rights is against public policy.66”

[63C American Jurisprudence 2d, Public Officers and Employees, §247 (1999)]

An employee who is not a “public official” has no authority to bind the government because he has no fiduciary duty to act in the best interests of the government. It is worth noting that the ONLY person in the IRS who is a “public official” is the IRS commissioner himself. He is appointed by the President pursuant to 26 U.S.C. §7803(a)(1)(A). Everyone below him has no statutory authority to serve and DO NOT serve even as federal “employees”. This is confirmed by the 1939 Internal Revenue Code, which is the basis for the current Internal Revenue Code and was never repealed. All laws prior to that relating to federal taxation were repealed by the Revenue Act of 1939. See 53 Stat. 1, the Revenue Act of 1939. Below is what it says about Revenue Agents in the 1939 Code, in section 4000, 53 Stat. 489:

Chapter 43: Internal Revenue Agents
Section 4000 Appointment
The Commissioner may, whenever in his judgment the necessities of the service so require, employ competent agents, who shall be known and designated as internal revenue agents, and, except as provided for in this title, no general or special agent or inspector of the Treasury Department in connection with internal revenue, by whatever designation he may be known, shall be appointed, commissioned, or employed.

64 United States v Holzer (CA7 Ill) 816 F.2d. 304 and vacated, remanded on other grounds 484 US 807, 98 L.Ed.2d 18, 108 S.Ct. 53, on remand (CA7 Ill) 840 F.2d. 1343, cert den 486 US 1035, 100 L.Ed.2d. 608, 108 S.Ct. 2022 and (criticized on other grounds by United States v Osser (CA3 Pa) 864 F.2d. 1056) and (superseded by statute on other grounds as stated in United States v Little (CA5 Miss) 889 F.2d. 1367) and (among conflicting authorities on other grounds noted in United States v Boylan (CA1 Mass) 898 F.2d. 230, 29 Fed Rules Evid Serv 1223).
“Competent agents”? What a joke! If they were “competent”, then they would:

1. Know and follow the law and be fired if they didn’t.
2. Work as an “employee” for a specific Congressman in the House of Representatives who was personally accountable for their actions. “Taxation and representation” must coincide to preserve the original intent of the Constitution and the separation of powers doctrine.
3. Have delegated statutory authority of law to serve.
4. Would be public officers with a fiduciary duty to the public who they serve.

You can read the above statute yourself on the Family Guardian website at:

If “Revenue Agents” are not “appointed, commissioned, or employed”, then what exactly are they? We’ll tell you what they are: They are independent consultants who operate on commission. They get a commission from the property they steal from the American People, and their stolen “loot” comes from the Department of Agriculture. See the following response to a Freedom of Information Act request proving that IRS agents are paid by the Department of Agriculture:

Why would the Congress NOT want to make Revenue Agents “appointed, commissioned, or employed”? Well, if they are effectively STEALING property from the American people and if they are not connected in any way with the federal government directly, have no statutory authority to exist under Title 26, and are not “employees”, then the President of the United States and all of his appointees in the Executive Branch cannot then be held personally liable for the acts and abuses of these thieves. What politician in his right mind would want to jeopardize his career by being held accountable for a mafia extortion ring whose only job is to steal money from people absent any legal authority?

The upside of all this is that if IRS agents are not “appointed, commissioned, or employed”, then they have no authority to obligate the government to anything. This is true of EVERYONE in the IRS who serves below the IRS Commissioner. The implications of this are HUGE. Most people become “taxpayers” through the operation of private/special law, as we said earlier. This happens usually by them signing an “agreement” of some kind that makes them subject to the I.R.C., such as: IRS Form 1040, SSA Form SS-5, IRS Form W-4, etc. The Regulations for the IRS Form W-4, for instance, identify this form as an “agreement”:

26 C.F.R. Sec. 31.3402(p)-1
Title 26
CHAPTER I
SUBCHAPTER C
PART 31

Sec. 31.3402(p)-1 Voluntary withholding agreements.

(a) In general. An employee and his employer may enter into an agreement under section 3402(b) to provide for the withholding of income tax upon payments of amounts described in paragraph (b)(1) of Sec. 31.3401(a)-3, made after December 31, 1970. An agreement may be entered into under this section only with respect to amounts which are includible in the gross income of the employee under section 61, and must be applicable to all such amounts paid by the employer to the employee. The amount to be withheld pursuant to an agreement under section 3402(p) shall be determined under the rules contained in section 3402 and the regulations thereunder. (b) Form and duration of agreement. (1)(i) Except as provided in subdivision (ii) of this subparagraph, an employee who desires to enter into an agreement under section 3402(p) shall furnish his employer with Form W-4 (withholding exemption certificate) executed in accordance with the provisions of section 3402(f) and the regulations thereunder. The furnishing of such Form W-4 shall constitute a request for withholding.

How can this agreement be an agreement with the government without anyone in the IRS who can bind the government to the agreement? Does the IRS sign this form? NO! Did the government make you personally an offer to accept this agreement. NO! Who, then, are the parties to this agreement and by what authority does the government become a party to it?
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

5.4.6.5 Modern tax trials are religious “inquisitions” and not valid legal processes

This section will build upon sections 4.3.12 and 5.4.6.1 earlier, in which we showed that our government has become idolatry, a false religion, and false god and that its “Bible” has become the Infernal and Satanic Revenue Code. In it, we will prove that so-called “income tax” trials are not in fact legal proceedings at all, but essentially amount to religious inquisitions against those who do not consent to participate in the official state-sponsored federal religion called the Internal Revenue Code. We will start off by defining what a valid legal proceeding is, and then show you why today’s tax trials do not even come close to meeting these requirements, and are conducted more like religious inquisitions than valid legal proceedings. We will even compare modern tax trials to the early “witch trials” to show quite graphically just how similar that they are to religious inquisitions. We will then close the section by giving you a tabular comparison showing all the similarities between how federal tax trials of today are conducted and the way the inquisitions were conducted in the 1600’s so that the facts are crystal clear in your mind. This will form the basis to describe modern tax trials not only as religious inquisitions, but also as a “malicious abuse of legal process” that is the responsibility of mainly federal judges.

At the heart of the notion of religious liberty and the First Amendment is the freedom from “compelled association”. We can only be “holy” in God’s eyes, if we separate ourselves from pagan people and governments around us. Here are a few authorities from the Bible on this subject of separation of “church”, which is us as believers, from “state”, which is all the pagan nonbelievers living under our system of government:

> ‘Come out from among them [the unbelievers]
> And be separate, says the Lord.
> Do not touch what is unclean.
> And I will receive you.
> I will be a Father to you,
> And you shall be my sons and daughters,
> Says the Lord Almighty.”
> [2 Corinthians 6:17-18, Bible, NKJV]

> ‘Do not love the world or the things in the world. If anyone loves [is a citizen of] the world, the love of the Father is not in Him. For all that is in the world—the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life—is not of the Father but is of the world. And the world is passing away, and the lust of it; but he who does the will of God abides forever.’
> [1 John 2:15-17, Bible, NKJV]

> ‘Adulterers and adulteresses! Do you now know that friendship [and “citizenship”] with the world is enmity with God? Whoever therefore wants to be a friend [citizen or “taxpayer”] of the world makes himself an enemy of God.’
> [James 4:4, Bible, NKJV]

> ‘Pure and undefiled religion before God and the Father is this: to visit orphans and widows in their trouble, and to keep oneself unspotted from the world [and the corrupted governments and laws of the world].”
> [James 1:27, Bible, NKJV]

> ‘And you shall be holy to Me, for I the Lord am holy, and have separated you from the peoples, that you should be Mine.”
> [Leviticus 20:26, Bible, NKJV]

> ‘I am a stranger in the earth; Do not hide Your commandments from me.”
> [Psalm 119:19, Bible, NKJV]

> ‘I have become a stranger to my brothers, And an alien to my mother’s children; Because zeal for Your house has eaten me up, And the reproaches of those who reproach You have fallen on me.”
> [Psalm 69:8-9, Bible, NKJV]

A graphical example of the need for this separation of “church” and “state” is illustrated in the Bible book of Nehemiah, in which the Jews tried to rebuild the wall that separated them, who were believers, from the pagan people, governments, and rulers around them who were enslaving them with taxes, persecuting, and ridiculing them. Does this scenario sound familiar? It should because that is exactly the scenario Christians in America are beginning to be exposed to. Those who want to be holy and sanctified therefore cannot associate themselves with a pagan or socialist state without violating God’s laws, sinning, and alienating themselves from God. The First Amendment says the right to refuse to associate, which in this case is a “religious practice”, is protected. Below is what a prominent First Amendment reference book says on this subject:

> Just as there is freedom to speak, to associate, and to believe, so also there is freedom not to speak, associate, or believe. “The right to speak and the right to refrain from speaking [on a government tax return, and in violation of the Fifth Amendment when coerced, for instance] are complementary components of the broader

The concept of “individual freedom of mind.” Wooley v. Maynard, 430 U.S. 703 (1977). Freedom of conscience dictates that no individual may be forced to espouse ideological causes with which he disagrees:

“[A]t the heart of the First Amendment is the notion that the individual should be free to believe as he will, and that in a free society one’s beliefs should be shaped by his mind and by his conscience rather than coerced by the State [through illegal enforcement of the revenue laws].” Abbood v. Detroit Board of Education [431 U.S. 209] (1977)

Freedom from compelled association is a vital component of freedom of expression. Indeed, freedom from compelled association illustrates the significance of the liberty or personal autonomy model of the First Amendment. As a general constitutional principle, it is for the individual and not for the state to choose one’s associations and to define the persona which he holds out to the world.

All of the harassment, financial terrorism, and evil instituted by the IRS and the legal skirmishes happening in courtrooms across the country relating to income taxes is all designed with one very specific, singular purpose in mind: to force and terrorize people into associating with, subsidizing, and having allegiance to a pagan, socialist, EVIL government, and to thereby commit idolatry in making government one’s new false god and using that false god as a substitute for the Living God. We are being forced to choose between one of two competing sovereigns: the true, living God, or a pagan and evil government, and we can only choose ONE:

“No one can serve two masters; for either he will hate the one and love the other, or else he will be loyal to the one and despise the other. You cannot serve God and mammon [unrighteous gain or any other false god].”[46]

[Jesus in Matt. 6:24, Bible, NKJV]

“Bravery or slavery, take your pick, because your covetous government is going to force you to choose one!”

[Family Guardian Fellowship]

We must remember what the Bible says about this choice we have:

“You shall not follow a [socialist or democratic] crowd[or “mob”] to do evil: nor shall you testify in a dispute so as to turn aside after many to pervert justice.”

[Exodus 23:2, Bible, NKJV]

“Away with you, Satan! For it is written, ‘You shall worship the Lord your God, and Him ONLY [NOT the government!] you shall serve [with your labor or your earnings from labor].’”

[Jesus in Matt. 4:10, Bible, NKJV]

Therefor, there is only one righteous choice of who our “Master” can be as believers, and it isn’t man, or anything including governments, that is made by man. If it isn’t God, then you have violated your contract and covenant with God in the Bible. When you choose government as your Master, the tithes you used to pay to God then are diverted to subsidize your new pagan god, the government, in the form of “income taxes”. Once you understand this important concept completely, the picture becomes quite clear and the purposes behind the abuse of legal process relating to illegal income tax enforcement and collection will be clear in your mind. What we are dealing with in the court system then, is essentially not a legal, but a political and ideological war. The apostle Paul warned us about this inevitable ideological war, when he said:

“For we do not wrestle against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this age, against spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavenly [and government] places.”

[Eph. 6:12, Bible, NKJV]

In the context of individual taxation, we now know from the preceding sections that there are no “positive laws” at the federal level, other than perhaps the Constitution itself. The Internal Revenue Code is therefore a religion, and not a law, as we concluded earlier. The disciples of that religion are all those who benefit financially from it by receiving socialist government benefits, which are really just bribes paid from stolen money generated by this false religion. Among the victims of this socialist bribery effected with loot stolen from our fellow Americans are judges, lawyers, and jurors. To validate our analysis here, we will therefore prove to you scientifically in the remainder of this section that modern tax trials are more “political campaigns” and “religious inquisitions” rather than valid legal processes. In a society without tax laws where “voluntary compliance” must be maintained, some method of discipline must be used, and since it can’t be “law”, then the tools of discipline and enforcement must then degenerate into political persecution and religious inquisition.

A valid legal proceeding in a federal court against a sovereign National who lives in a state of the Union and not on land within federal territorial jurisdiction must meet all the following prerequisites to be a valid:

1. The statute which is being enforced must be a “positive law” which they are obligated to observe. See 1 U.S.C. §204(a).
   Positive law means that the people consented to the enforcement of the law and its adverse impact against their rights.
   If the statute being enforced is not a “positive law”, then the government must disclose on the record how and why the defendant comes under the contractual or voluntary jurisdiction of the statute. They must prove, for instance, beyond a reasonable doubt, why the person is a federal “employee” in order to enforce a “special law” statute such as the Internal Revenue Code that only applies to federal employees.
2. Implementing regulations must be published in the federal register for the positive law statute that allow the statute to be enforced. Without publication in the federal register, no law may prescribe any kind of penalty, as we learned earlier.
3. Jurisdictional boundaries and requirements must be strictly observed by the court:
   a. The violation of a “positive law” must occur within federal jurisdiction on land that the government can prove belonged to the federal government at the time of the offense. Such records are in the possession of the Department of Justice.
   b. If the government is exercising extraterritorial jurisdiction, it must provide evidence of consent to the law in some form, so that it is enforcing the equivalent of “private law” contract law within a foreign jurisdiction. This requirement is the essence of what the courts call “federalism”.
   c. Federal judges who hear federal tax trials must maintain a domicile on federal land within the district where they serve, and are unqualified to serve if they do not.
   d. Since federal law applies mainly inside the federal zone, then the only people who can serve as jurors on a federal trial are people born in and residing within the federal zone, and very few people meet this requirement.
4. The result of violating the positive law statute must harm a specific, flesh and blood individual. This is the foundation of the notion of “common law”. Laws are there to protect the “sovereign”, which in this country is the People and not the government. This means that if the government is proceeding as the injured party, then it must produce a “verified complaint” alleging a specific injury to other than itself in order to enforce a statute.
5. A confession or a critical statement or act by the accused upon which a conviction depends must be made completely voluntarily and the subject who made the confession or committed the act may not be under any kind of duress or undue influence, especially by the government who is hearing the case. It is considered prejudicial and a violation of due process to rely upon evidence that was obtained under duress and involuntarily.
6. No presumptions may be made about the status of the individual involved, because assumption and presumption violate due process of law under the Fifth Amendment and are also a religious sin (see Numbers 15:30, Bible). All evidence admitted, even if it is signed under penalty of perjury by the National, must be verified to be true and correct and the individual must agree that no duress was involved in the production of the evidence in order for it to be admissible.
   a. “prima facie” evidence of law, such as the Internal Revenue Code, are not admissible. “prima facie” means “presumed”. See the legislative notes under 1 U.S.C. §204.
   b. The accused cannot be “presumed” to be an statutory “U.S. citizen” pursuant to 8 U.S.C. §1401, without a showing with credible evidence that he was born within federal jurisdiction, on land under the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal government.
   c. The jury may not make any presumptions. Jurists must be warned in advance that they should not make any presumptions about what the tax code says, which means they must be:
      1. Shown that the code is not positive law but special law, and therefore may not be used generally, but only against persons who effectively connected themselves to the code by working for the government.
      2. Shown why the code themselves.
      3. Shown why the individual on trial is subject to the code by being shown the liability statute or by proving that he is a federal “employee”
   d. See the following for details on how “presumption” is abused by federal courts to DESTROY your rights:
      Presumption: Chief Weapon for Unlawfully Enlarging Federal Jurisdiction, Form #05.017
       http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm
7. The voir dire jury selection and judge selection process must remove all persons from the legal process who have any kind of conflict of interest:
7.1. Judges who receive retirement benefits or pay from illegal collection activity must recuse themselves.
7.2. Jurists who receive any kind of government benefit or who file tax returns and therefore are subject to influence by the IRS must be removed from the trial. The only people who can serve on the jury are those not subject to extortion or influence by the IRS. Consequently, the IRS must agree in writing not to institute any kind of collection action or retaliation against any of the jurists for any adverse decisions they might make against the IRS.
8. The judge:
8.1. May not pay or receive benefits from Subtitle A federal income taxes, nor be subject to any kind of collection action by the IRS. Even the possibility that such retaliation could happen by the IRS would severely prejudice the rights of the accused if he is opposing the IRS.
8.2. Must have an appointment affidavit making him an Article III judge, which is admitted into evidence prior to the start of the trial for the jury and the accused to see.
8.3. Must be a member of the Judicial Branch and not the Executive Branch. Consequently, he cannot be an “employee” of the Executive branch and may not have a SF-61 form on file with the executive branch. Instead, all of his records and pay must be handled by the Judicial branch and not any federal agency in the Executive Branch.
9. If the judge is either a “taxpayer” or does not demonstrate a willingness to recuse himself as a person who receives financial benefit from the operation of the I.R.C. against persons who do not consent or volunteer, then the jury must be advised that because a clear conflict of interest is present and that they have the right to rule on both the facts and the law. Ordinarily, the judge would rule on the law and the jury would rule only on the facts, but if the judge has a clear conflict of interest, then Thomas Jefferson and John Jay, one of our first chief Justices of the Supreme Court, both said that the jury can and should rule on BOTH the facts AND the law to prevent tyranny by the judge:

"It is left... to the juries, if they think the permanent judges are under any bias whatever in any cause, to take on themselves to judge the law as well as the fact. They never exercise this power but when they suspect partiality in the judges; and by the exercise of this power they have been the firmest bulwarks of English liberty."

[Thomas Jefferson to Abbe Arnoux, 1789, ME 7:423, Papers 15:283]

The judicial process we have today for hearing tax cases in federal district courts does not even remotely resemble most of what is listed above. For instance:

1. Federal judges commonly treat the Internal Revenue Code as “law” and admit it into evidence at tax trials against “nontaxpayers” who are not subject to it, which is very prejudicial of the rights of the accused.
2. Federal judges seldom if ever recuse themselves even though they are “taxpayers” and even though them being “taxpayers” and receiving benefits based on illegal enforcement of Internal Revenue Code, Subtitle A creates a conflict of interest in violation of 18 U.S.C. §208.
3. Jurors are seldom excused from tax trials because they are either “taxpayers” or are in receipt of benefits derived from income taxes which might create a conflict of interest. This prejudices the rights of the accused in favor of the government.
4. Few of the jurors or judges are domiciled or born on federal land that is within the judicial district or Internal Revenue District in question. Consequently, the trial is moot and illegal from the beginning. Many of them said on their jury summons that they are “U.S. citizens”, but the government never defines anywhere exactly what it means to be a “U.S. citizen” in any positive law statute pertaining to jury selection. Consequently, the federal government uses deliberately vague laws and the false presumption they generate to induct illegal jurors to serve on federal tax trials, thereby destroying the separation of powers between state and federal governments.
5. The criminal statutes that are being enforced, found in 26 U.S.C. §7201 through 7217 have no implementing regulations published in either the Federal Register or the Code of Federal Regulations, and therefore are unenforceable against anyone but federal “employees”. Likewise, the judge prejudices the rights of the accused by not requiring the government to prove that the accused is a federal employee who is the proper subject of the Internal Revenue Code.
6. The federal judge not only doesn’t prevent, but actually encourages false presumption and prejudice by the jury by:
   6.1. DOJ prosecutors and the judge work as a team to encourage jealousy and contempt in the jurists against the accused by telling them that they are “taxpayers” but “this bozo refuses to pay his fair share!”
   6.2. Judges refuse to allow jurists to see the actual laws that the accused is being tried for, because there simply are none in most cases.

The above abuses of the legal process are primarily the responsibility of the judge hearing the case. If you want to blame anyone or prosecute anyone for the abuse, prosecute the judge himself as a private individual for exceeding his lawful authority and thereby injuring your rights. All of the above abuses of the legal process are described in the legal dictionary as follows:
The federal injustice system we have is meant only as a counterfeit that is intended to deceive the people and give them a false sense of security and confidence in our legal system:

"GOVERNMENT ANNOUNCEMENT April 15, 2004

[Washington, D.C.] The federal government announced today that it is changing its emblem from an eagle to a condom, because that more clearly reflects its political stance.

A condom stands up to inflation, halts production, destroys the next generation, protects a bunch of pricks, and gives you a sense of security while it's actually screwing you."

Consequently, we contend that most federal tax trials are not a judicial or even a lawful proceeding. This is further described in the free Memorandum of law below:

In fact, based on several Freedom of Information Act Requests (FOIA) about the status of numerous federal district court "judges" we have, who hear such tax cases, most of the judges do not have a valid appointment document, never took any oath as required by positive law, and aren’t even listed as “judges” in the records of the government! Don’t believe us? Send in a Freedom Of Information Act (FOIA) request yourself and find out! Throughout the remainder of this section, we will refer to these imposters simply as "pseudo judges". Therefore, our “United States District Courts” have simply become the equivalent of administrative federal office buildings that are part of the Executive, and not Judicial, branch of the government. A truly sovereign and independent Article III Judicial Branch can’t even be mentioned in any federal statute, because of the separation of powers doctrine, and yet we have a whole Title of the U.S. Code, Title 28, which defines and prescribes what pseudo judges in these bogus “courts” can and can’t do. The Supreme Court says the existence of such laws proves that such “courts” aren’t really judicial tribunals. Notice the statement "the ONLY judicial power vested in Congress" below:

"As the only judicial power vested in Congress is to create courts whose judges shall hold their offices during good behavior, it necessarily follows that, if Congress authorizes the creation of courts and the appointment of judges for limited time, it must act independently of the Constitution upon territory which is not part of the United States within the meaning of the Constitution.

[O'Donoghue v. United States, 289 U.S. 516, 53 S.Ct. 740 (1933)]

Title 28 not only “creates” all the district and circuit courts of the United States, but it in fact even defines what the “judges” CANNOT rule on. See 28 U.S.C. §2201(a), which plainly states that federal judges CANNOT rule on rights in the context of income taxes. Excuse our language here, but what the HELL is a judge for if he can’t defend or rule on our rights(!)?

We’ll give you a hint: The only “rights” he is there to protect are the governments “right” to STEAL your money and use it to subsidize socialism. The only type of court over which the Congress could have such absolute legislative power over judges is in an Article IV (of the Constitution), territorial court, and this in fact exactly describes our present District and Circuit federal court systems. Our present federal District and Circuit courts were created to rule ONLY over issues relating to federal territory and property under Article 1, Section 8, Clause 17, and Article 4, Section 3, Clause 2 of the Constitution. They are all “legislative” rather than “constitutional” or “judicial” courts. They are part of the Executive Branch of the government, and which have no authority to even address Constitutional rights. They are NOT part of the “judicial branch”, and this is a deception. The entire Judicial Branch, in fact, is composed exclusively of the seven justices of the Supreme Court. A very exclusive club, we might add!

"The United States District Court has only such jurisdiction as Congress confers [by legislation]."

If the pseudo judges who hear tax trials aren’t even part of the Judicial branch, were never appointed, and are simply “employees” of the Executive Branch, then what exactly are they? They are simply imposters who are there to create the illusion that there is even a remote possibility of equity and justice in the courtroom relating to an income tax issue. To preserve some semblance of civil order and prevent a massive civil revolt, the government has to maintain some kind of façade so that the people don’t lose faith in a government that in fact has already become totally corrupted in the area of money and commerce. Keep in mind that deceit in commerce is the most offensive and abominable sin that God hates the most. Below is an excerpt from Matthew Henry’s commentary on the Bible demonstrating why this is:

“As religion towards God is a branch of universal righteousness (he is not an honest man that is not devout), so righteousness towards men is a branch of true religion, for he is not a godly man that is not honest, nor can he expect that his devotion should be accepted; for, 1. Nothing is more offensive to God than deceit in commerce.

A false balance is here put for all manner of unjust and fraudulent practices [of our public dis-servants] in dealing with any person [within the public], which are all an abomination to the Lord, and render those abominable [hated] to him that allow themselves in the use of such accursed arts of thriving. It is an affront to justice, which God is the patron of, as well as a wrong to our neighbour, whom God is the protector of. Men [in the IRS and the Congress] make light of such frauds, and think there is no sin in that which there is money to be got by, and, while it passes undiscovered, they cannot blame themselves for it; a blot is no blot till it is hit, Hos. 12:7. 8. But they are not the less an abomination to God, who will be the avenger of those that are defrauded by their brethren. 2. Nothing is more pleasing to God than fair and honest dealing, nor more necessary to make us and our devotions acceptable to him: A just weight is his delight. He himself goes by a just weight, and holds the scale of judgment with an even hand, and therefore is pleased with those that are herein followers of him. A balance cheats, under pretence of doing right most exactly, and therefore is the greater abomination to God.”

[Matthew Henry’s Commentary on the Whole Bible; Henry, M., 1996, c1991, under Prov. 11:1]

Back in the 1600’s in our country and elsewhere in Europe, there were several notable occasions where so-called “witches” were tried and finally executed for practicing “witchcraft”. The nature of the proceedings strongly resembled the religious “inquisitions” that preceded them throughout Europe in the 1400’s. In fact, witchcraft trials evolved out of these religious inquisitions and first began to appear in the late 1400’s. A History Channel special on witches aired on October 29, 2004, identified the following common characteristics about how these “witch trials” were conducted:

1. Historical foundations of the public outcry against witchcraft:
   1.1. The peak of the witch trials occurred in the late 1600’s. The period from the late 1400’s to the late 1600s were known as the “Burning Times” because witch hunts and executions were so prevalent during this period. The most common places for witch trials were in the rural villages of France and Germany, but they also occurred in America in the late 1600’s.
   1.2. The basis for the persecution of witches had a primarily “religious” foundation. The Bible forbids witchcraft in Deut. 19:10. Witches were believed to have a covenant with the devil and worship the devil and to be involved in harmful activities that were a threat to society as a whole.
   1.3. The practice of witchcraft was viewed as the worst type of religious heresy and was punishable by death by execution. The reason it had this status was because the practice of witchcraft was made to appear as a threat not just to the church, but to the whole society. Activities of accused “witches” were viewed as a competing “religion” and the worship of the devil. Witchcraft was also viewed as a threat to the predominantly Christian religion and evidence of possession by the “devil”.

2. Social status of witches;
   2.1. Hatred against and fear of witchcraft was most prevalent among uneducated or under-informed people, who are most susceptible to false belief, presumption, government propaganda, and superstition.
   2.2. Mobilizing the public against witchcraft was done by encouraging and exploiting intense fear and hatred towards immoral or harmful activities and by associating witches with such immoral and harmful activities. This was done by exploiting the ignorance, presumptions, and prejudices of the people by religious and political leaders.
   2.3. The people who were accused of witchcraft, in fact, were most often those who were accomplishing most to help their community. These people were often the most prominent political targets and opponents and accusing them of witchcraft was a way to retaliate politically against them. Most were older, single, or widowed and therefore didn’t fit the mold that most other women did. They did deviant things like use herbs and folk remedies to heal people magically. They had fewer friends and therefore were more vulnerable to false accusations and persecution, because they did not have a social network of friends who could help defend them.

3. How criminal charges of witchcraft were initiated:
   3.1. Search for the witch began when a person was observed to have psychological fits and delirium and the society could not explain the cause of the fits. Observers then would assume it was a supernatural possession by the devil

Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax  5-455

3.2. Witch trials were often initiated at the request of an upstanding citizen or someone having deliriums who wanted to politically retaliate against an opponent. Most of the accusations of witchcraft came from people who only superficially knew the accused “witches” and therefore were suspicious and fearful of them. An even larger number of accusations came from those accused of witchcraft themselves and who were under torture to make a confession.

3.3. The government fomented and facilitated the witch trials. There was a lot of political propaganda that was intended to smear and demigrate suspected “witches” by associating them with the following harmful activities:

3.3.1. Immoral activity.
3.3.2. The taking of hallucinogenic drugs.
3.3.3. Promiscuous sex, sometimes with the devil.
3.3.4. Murder and cannibalism of innocent infants.
3.3.5. Nocturnal worship of the devil as a deity. This worship was called either the “Witch’s Sabbath” or the “Black Sabbath”.
3.3.6. Secret invisible societies that created fear, suspicion, and insecurity in the people.

4. How witches were identified, arrested, convicted and punished:

4.1. The basis for determining who was a witch was described in an early book called the Malleus Maleficarum, which is translated to mean “The hammer against witches”. The book was published in 1486 by two Dominican monks in Germany named Jacob Springer and Heinrich Kramer. The book described women as the most vulnerable to becoming witches. It described the source of all witchcraft as the carnal lust of women, which it said was insatiable. The book was second in popularity only to the Bible, and served as the equivalent of a bible for witch hunters for over 200 years. Witches were described in the book as being:

4.1.1. Evil.
4.1.2. Lecherous
4.1.3. Vain
4.1.4. Lustful

4.2. The physical evidence required to prove that a person was a “witch” was very subjective and it was very difficult to prove with physical evidence that a person was a witch. Witch trials were more a matter of personal opinion and religious belief than a scientifically provable matter. Evidence that a person was a witch was often fabricated or imagined, and not real.

4.3. When witches were arrested, they:

4.3.1. Were stripped and searched.
4.3.2. Prodded with needles to find the mark of the devil.
4.3.3. Any suspicious wart, mole, or birth mark could be enough to condemn someone to death.
4.3.4. Any questionable character reference from a political opponent could doom a person to death.

4.4. Prerequisite for confession. Civil law required that a “witch” could not be prosecuted without first making a “voluntary” confession. Because few people would voluntarily confess to being “witches”, the government sanctioned and condoned an elaborate system of painful physical torture against the accused “witches” to compel them to give a “voluntary” confession. This was the very same type of persecution and torture that was instituted against heretics during the inquisitions in Spain and elsewhere in Europe. The following hideous instruments of torture were used to extract the “confession”:

4.4.1. Thumb screws
4.4.2. Leg screws
4.4.3. Head clamps
4.4.4. Iron maiden

4.5. During the torture:

4.5.1. The Malleus Maleficarum warned the torturer never to look a witch in the eye. This was a devious way to ensure that empathy or sympathy or compassion would not be employed towards those accused of witchcraft. This made the witch trials and those who could be accused of witchcraft very terrified and prejudiced the rights of those accused. The torture used to extract the coerced confessions was also used to implicate other innocent people, and this lead to the uncontrollable spread of witch trials throughout France and Germany.

4.5.2. Many people confessed to the crime of witchcraft who in fact were not witches, simply to avoid further suffering and torture. When the pain of torture is severe enough, people will confess to almost anything.

4.6. The English devised a very prejudicial method for determining if someone was a witch called “swimming the witch”. A person accused of witchcraft was thrown in deep water. If she swam and survived then she was innocent. Either way, the suspect was doomed and had no chance of survival.
4.7. Witnesses and political opponents were allowed to show up at the trials and act out being “possessed” by Satan in front of everyone in the courtroom.

4.8. Once a person confessed to being a “witch”, then they were usually burned at the stake in a very public way in order to terrorize the rest of the population into “compliance” with the wishes of whoever made the accusation of witchcraft to begin with. The reason for burning, was that it was believed that the witches evil spirit could only be destroyed if she was burned into ashes.

5. Political motivation for witch trials explains why they spread:

5.1. The government abused the laws against witchcraft, especially in Europe, as follows:

5.1.1. Church clergy in Christian churches were accused because they were political opponents of the government.

5.1.2. Witch hunters received a bounty for each witch they found and prosecuted.

5.1.3. The property and lands of executed witches were confiscated by the government and used to enrich public servants. This is a big reason that explains the promotion and spread of the witch hunts and witch trials by the government.

5.2. The largest witch trial ever occurred in the town of Wurzburg in Germany, in which an overzealous magistrate tried nearly the whole town on witchcraft charges! 600 people were condemned to death. 19 were priests and 41 were children. In some towns in Germany, there were no women left after the inquisitors came through. Some scholars estimate that between 60,000 and 300,000 people were executed as witches during the “Burning Years” in Europe.

5.3. The largest witch trial in America occurred in 1692 in Salem, Massachusetts, in which 200 people were burned at the stake. Salem was a Puritan town torn by Indian and land wars and political controversy. The Salem witch trial investigations began in the home of a Puritan minister, Rev. Samuel Paris. His daughters became allegedly possessed after playing a household game with the family slave and they went into a frenzy, which spread throughout the town. The Puritan minister then launched an investigation to find out who had instigated the possession, leading to three women being tried on witchcraft based on the accusations of the possessed girls. All three of the accused witches were outsiders and deviants who were easy targets for suspicion and retaliation. Historians agree that the investigation into witches in this incident was used to conceal a political agenda. The agenda involved a private dispute, and the witch allegation was used as a means to gain political advantage. After this incident, the witch hysteria spread to 200 other accused witches in 24 other surrounding villages. 27 witches were found guilty and 19 were hanged. The witch trials ended in America when the accusers began accusing prominent people, such as the wife of the governor of Massachusetts. At that point, political leaders abruptly stopped the trials because they were not only not benefiting from them, but began being hurt by them.

6. Why witch trials eventually ended and how these matters are handled today:

6.1. Two factors contributed to the end of the witch trials in America:

6.1.1. Scientific investigation and knowledge ultimately was what brought witch trials to an end. Science eliminated the role of superstition in attributing harmful events to supernatural and magical powers.

6.1.2. The wife of the governor of Massachusetts was accused of witchcraft. Once government officials saw that they could no longer benefit, but would be harmed by spreading the witch trials, they put them to an abrupt end.

6.2. Today, people who would have been accused as witches in the 1600’s would now simply be identified by a mental health expert as mentally ill. Unlike the early witch trials, in which the accusers and inquisitors were often religious figures, today’s accusers usually work in the government and they use as their justification the testimony of a mental health professional who:

6.2.1. Would be undermining his livelihood and his income by giving a person a clean mental bill of health.

6.2.2. Has no moral or religious training.

6.2.3. Has a conflict of interest because he is licensed by the same government that is doing the false accusing.

As we examined the above list of characteristics that describe witchcraft, some striking similarities became obvious between the way the government treated “witches” back then and the way the same government treats “tax freedom advocates” of today. Below is a table summarizing the many similarities between the two, organized in the same sequence as the above list:

Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

| 1.2 | Basis for persecution | Main motivation was Biblical prohibitions and superstition by ignorant citizens and government covetousness of property of accused witches. Witch hunts allowed government to confiscate all the property of the witch and not return it to the witch’s family. | Government greed and lust for power and money. |
| 1.3 | Activities of accused witches | Were viewed as a “religion” and a threat the Christianity. | Are viewed as a threat to the state-sponsored “Civil religion of Socialism” and a challenge to the authority of the government as the new false “god” and sovereign within society. |

Social Status

| 2.1 | Hatred and fear of most prevalent in | Uninformed, superstitious, and presumptuous people | Ignorant, superstitious, and presumptuous jurists educated in government schools. This ignorance about law is deliberately created by our government by manipulating the public education system to dumb down the population. Ignorant people tend to be more fearful than highly educated people. |
| 2.2 | Public mobilized against accused by government through | Associating “witches” with immoral and harmful activities. | Associating tax protesters with extremist groups such as “Montana Free Men”, terrorists, and criminals. |
| 2.3 | Profile of accused | Outcasts of society who don’t have many friends, and can therefore easily be picked on. This included widows, midwives, divorcees, spinsters, non-religious, and outcasts at their local church. | Outcasts of society who are denigrated by propaganda from government-licensed 501(c ) churches, government licensed attorneys, and the Internal Revenue Service (IRS). Wrongfully accused as “militia”, “gun activists”, “religious extremists”, “unpatriotic”, “irresponsible” (don’t pay fair share), and harmful to “taxpayers” because they raise the taxes on them. |

How criminal charges are initiated and encouraged

| 3.1 | Cause for start of investigation | Psychological disorders and abnormal behavior of a “witch” or someone possessed or visited by witch | American refuses to either incriminate themselves on a tax return or to pay money to IRS that law does not require them to pay |
| 3.2 | Investigation initiated by | Upstanding citizen or possessed individual who wanted to politically retaliate against an opponent. Most accusations came from people who superficially knew the accused “witches” and therefore were suspicious and fearful of them. Additional referrals came from accused “witches” who confessed or snitched on other witches while under duress and physical torture. | IRS in retaliation against people for demanding due process of law, respect for the Constitution, and obedience to IRS procedures. |
| 3.3 | Government fomenting of trials | Judges facilitate violation of due process and loosen need for objective or physical evidence. Government also cooperated with and staged executions of the accused witches and condoned their torture in order to obtain coerced confessions. | Judges condone violation of due process of accused by allowing IRS to take their property without due process of law or a court hearing using “Notice of Levies”, “Notice of liens”, and other fraudulent securities. The result essentially is grand theft and “extortion under the color of law”, which federal judges refuse to hold IRS agents accountable for. |

How accused is identified, arrested and convicted

| 4.1 | Basis for determining guilt | Malleus Maleficarum book published in 1486 provided procedures and processes useful for determining who are witches. The procedures were very prejudicial. Witches described in the book as: “evil, lecherous, vain, and lustful”. | The Department of Justice Criminal Tax manual is used as the “Bible” for federal prosecutors. The book is deliberately deceptive because it does not reveal the most important aspects about the legal basis for federal taxation as documented in this book. “Tax protesters” described in the book as vain, contemptible, ignorant, and impulsive. |
| 4.2 | Physical evidence required to prove guilt | A confession by the accused, imagined events by persons who were haunted by accused witch, subjective personal opinions, warts and moles, testimony of clergy, very biased questioning techniques. | 1099 and W-2 forms that are not signed by the reporters are therefore “hearsay” evidence that is inadmissible. Writings of accused submitted under duress on a tax return that are also not admissible because coerced. |
| 4.3 | Method of arrest and confinement | Stripped, searched, prodded with needles. Physically tortured until confessed. | Stripped, searched, prodded with needles. Financially tortured by having all assets seized and being forced into financial slavery to a legal professional to represent them. While in federal prison, not able to do own legal research and defense because deprived of proper resources, computers, and legal references. High legal fees act as punishment, torture, and coercion against accused to settle quickly and falsely admit guilt to end the financial bleeding. |
| 4.4 | Prerequisite for conviction | A confession from the accused “witch”, often extracted under severe physical torture. Even though testimony is coerced, judges still prejudicially admitted it anyway and thereby violated the due process rights of the accused. | Proving that tax crimes committed “willfully” by accused, meaning they were deliberate, define acts of disobedience to a known “lawful” duty. Willfulness is proven prejudicially and unfairly by using inadmissible evidence such as: 1. IRS publications which the IRS is not held responsible for the accuracy of; 2. Judicial opinions from courts outside the jurisdiction of the accused; 3. Correspondence and advice from the IRS which the government readily admits it cannot and should not be held accountable for the accuracy of; 4. Advice from government licensed “experts” with a severe conflict of interest such as attorneys, mental health professionals, etc. |
| 4.5 | Method and result of the torture | Physical torture conducted using hideous devices. Many accused died while imprisoned and before trial. Brutality and no compassion were shown during physical torture. Witches were dehumanized and torturers would not look witches in the eye. Many accused would make a false confession simply to end the torture. Prisoners could also not leave the prison until they reimbursed the state for the cost of holding them there, which is a double punishment. | Accused is financially tortured by being forced to hire an attorney and pay more than $300 per hour for services that he would not need if the prison provided or allowed computers, internet research, and an extensive law library. Prisoners do not have and are not allowed same legal research tools as attorneys and so are compelled to hire attorney. Once attorney is hired, accused loses right to challenge jurisdiction and becomes “ward of the state”, and this prejudices his case. While in prison, employer of accused usually terminates him, bills mount up, and result is that house is confiscated by banks and all equity is lost. Accused is slandered and has a hard time finding future work because of false charges of “willful failure to file” and “tax evasion” by government. Credit rating is destroyed, making it difficult to buy home or obtain credit in the future. Most torture is therefore financial, but it is still torture and done unjustly, because people who don’t pay money that no law requires them to pay are not a threat to society and do not need to be imprisoned. In fact, federal jailhouses have become the equivalent of “debtors prisons” for fraudulently created tax debts. “Debtors prisons”, including those for tax debts, were outlawed in 1868 by the passage of the Thirteenth Amendment, which outlawed not only slavery but all such involuntary servitude. Yet, the U.S. government STILL allows these debtor’s prisons to continue. |
| 4.6 | Prejudicial methods for determining guilt | Judges refusing to admit any of the evidence of the accused during preliminary motions in limine before trial while admitting all the government’s evidence. This leaves the accused essentially defenseless and a prejudiced attorney whose livelihood will be destroyed by having his license pulled if he objects to or exposes the tactics of the judge in front of the jury. |
| 4.7 | Violations of due process at trial | Government parades its own prejudiced “experts” in front of the jury and builds its case not on what the law says, but primarily on the subjective opinions of “experts” who nothing but slanders cleverly disguised as credentialed scientists or specialists. Like the judge himself, all these experts have a conflict of interest because they are usually licensed by the government and will lose their license if they turn on the government, or they are “taxpayers” and they know the IRS will turn on them if they turn on the government. The trial then simply devolves more into a mud-slinging political campaign and the judge and the prosecutor work as a tag team to convict the accused because both of them benefit financially from doing so. If the judge doesn’t help the prosecutor get the conviction, then he will end up on the IRS’ hit list. |
| 4.8 | Political propaganda following the trial | IRS and DOJ have a “Press Releases” section where they slander those convicted. Newspapers are called up and results are published to make sure public is warned that they better not buck the Gestapo. The news stories are often deliberately vague so that they look like they apply to everyone instead of the very small subset of people who are actually affected. Sometimes, even the judges will participate in this grandstanding and political propaganda by the way they write their rulings, which are often nothing but rubber-stamped versions of the proposed orders written by the Department of Injustice prosecutor himself. They do this to increase their chances of a promotion or new political appointment to a higher court by winning the favor of the Executive branch in “bringing home the stolen loot”. Public is therefore terrorized and coerced into compliance with laws that they are not even subject to, in order to spread the federal slavery and expand the power and control of politicians and judges over the general populace. |
| 5 | Political motivation for trials | NA | NA |
Isn’t it fascinating just how many similarities there are between the trial of a modern-day freedom advocate and the witch trials in the 1600’s? The only thing new is the history that you do not know. There is nothing new under the sun. This section, we believe, provides a compelling demonstration that in fact:

1. The Internal Revenue Code is a government-sponsored religion whose main purpose is to promote socialism, humanism, and the theft of the sovereignty of the individual and the transfer of that sovereignty to the government and the legal profession.
2. Modern day tax trials are nothing but “religious inquisitions”.
3. The government wins in modern day tax trials by using the same prejudicial techniques as witch hunters used against witches: Exploiting the ignorance, fear, and superstition of the general public about law and legal process.
4. Confessions are still obtained under duress the same way they were with the witch trials, but instead of the duress and torture being physical, it is now primarily financial. The results, however, are the same: A confession or “compliance” by the accused results primarily as a way to stop the torture, rather than because they actually committed any kind of crime.

<td>5.1</td>
<td>Witch trials used to punish political targets and dissidents. Religious factions and rivalry within small rural villages lead to the witch hunts, and they were directed at political targets. Accusers were usually disadvantaged parties in a dispute who wanted upper hand. Government capitalized on these rivalries by plundering the estates of the accused witches. When specific government officials were accused as witches and they found out they could no longer remain neutral in the dispute and could no longer benefit or avoid being harmed, the trials abruptly ended. Political factions and rivalries between “socialists” (Democrats) and “capitalists” (Republicans and independents) are exploited by the government during tax trials as a way to encourage convictions. Tax trials are turned into a type of class warfare between the “haves” (rich) and the “haves nots” (poor). Jealousy, greed, ignorance, fear, and envy are the main tool the government uses to motivate juries into convictions. Since there is no risk for the government participants and judges protect and shield IRS employees from the consequences of their unlawful behavior, then the abuses continue. This is called the “judicial conspiracy to protect the income tax” and it is described later in section 6.9 and following.</td>

<td>5.2</td>
<td>Largest trials. Occurred in rural areas where political factions and rivalries existed. Witch laws were used to settle political scores. Nepotism between the judges and the town marshal in the case of the Salem trials contributed to the spread of the witch hunts. The Salem marshal plundered the estates of the accused witches. Largest tax trials occur around tax time on April 15 and are used as a means to propagandize and scare Americans into paying extortion and bribery money to the government that no law requires. Big cities are most prevalent places for the convictions, because this is where the following types of dysfunctional types of citizens and government factions and rivalries exist. Witch trials used to punish political targets and dissidents. Back then, subjective opinions and superstition, strong religious beliefs, and political revenge motivated identification of “witches”. Since the field of psychology had not yet evolved, psychological disorders could not be attributed as the cause of the abnormal behavior that initiated the investigations. Today, atheistic and biased psychological “experts” are used as pawns by the government to slander the accused. Juries are deceived into believing that freedom advocates are irresponsible (won’t pay their “fair share”), deviant, mentally unstable, anti-social, and disrespectful of all authority. They are also made to appear as though they are a threat to the prevailing social order and the personal financial benefits of the jurists. Who wouldn’t vote against an accused that threatened the social security check of a jurist?</td>

| 6.1     | Why trials eventually ended. Cause of the end of trials. Scientific discoveries ended the role of superstition and the mass hysteria that the superstition caused. Also, when high officials in the government began to be implicated and risked conviction, the government quickly ended the trials. Still ongoing, primarily because the same kind of ignorance and superstition about law and legal process exists as that which existed about supernatural events in the 1600’s. |
| 6.2     | How witches are identified then and now. Back then, subjective opinions and superstition, strong religious beliefs, and political revenge motivated identification of “witches”. 5. The motivation for the witch hunts, insofar as the government is concerned, was the same as the motivation for modern day tax trials: Greed and covetousness. When the government executed a witch, they confiscated all their property and enriched themselves. When the government wins a tax trial, they enrich themselves and rape and pillage the assets of the accused and slander and destroy the credit rating of the accused.

6. Like the witch trials of the 1600’s, the only thing that will end the injustice is:

6.1. Public education about law in the schools, so that the scientific method and due process may return to the federal courtroom and ignorance, superstition, and fear may no longer be exploited by the government to convict the accused.

6.2. The financial incentives and rewards for the government must be removed from the process, so that judges will no longer act essentially as a partner to the prosecutors. Judges must be recused who are either “taxpayers” or who will receive benefits from illegal enforcement of the Internal Revenue Code. Judges pay must derive exclusively from lawful constitutional activities, which are exclusively taxes on imports, excises.

6.3. Due process must return to the courtroom, meaning that ambiguity of the Internal Revenue Code must be eliminated and they must be considerably simplified, so that “experts” are no longer required and so that the general public can easily discern what they mean. This will eliminate the role of ignorance, superstition, and fear in the courtroom that lead to the kind of hysteria present during the witch trials.

To help underscore and support assertions made in this section, consider the prosecution of Dr. Phil Roberts, which we will cover later in section 6.11.1. We provide excerpts from the transcript of his trial for tax evasion in that section. The federal judge kept telling the counsel of the defendant that he couldn’t talk about “the law” in the courtroom during the trial with the jury present. As a matter of fact, he threatened the counsel with disbarment if he continued to insist on quoting the law! By doing so, the judge was accomplishing the following:

1. Preventing the jury from learning that the Internal Revenue Code is not “law”.

2. Encouraging superstition, bias, and prejudice on the part of the jury. Absent an objective standard such as enacted positive law, the judge is ensuring that the jury reaches a “political” rather than a “legal” verdict. This makes those convicted of tax crimes into “political prisoners” rather than “criminals”.

3. Preventing enforcement of the Constitution, which is law and a contract, by the jury and against the government, in reaching a verdict. Indirectly, this is a violation of the judge’s oath of office to support and defend the Constitution, and amounts to Treason. You can’t in good faith uphold that which you refuse to discuss.

4. Ensuring that the result of the trial would be evil and unjust. The bible says that when “law” is removed from public life, the result will be “abominable”:

“One who turns his ear from hearing the law, even his prayer is an abomination.”

[Prov. 28:9, Bible, NKJV]

This is only the tip of the iceberg of courtroom corruption, folks. In 2004, we also visited a federal district courthouse in San Diego and noted that it had an extensive law library. We walked into the law library as a private citizen to see if we could read the law for ourselves in the books there while serving as a jurist. Remember, this is a PUBLIC building that is PUBLIC, not private property, which any citizen should have access to provided he does not take it or misuse it or interfere with use by others. There was NO ONE in the law library except the clerk. We were intercepted at the door by an inquisitive and nervous clerk, who asked us why we were there. We said we were serving on jury duty and that we wanted to read what the law says for ourselves rather than trust the biased judge or the attorneys. Here is what she the clerk told us, and what she said completely stunned us:

1. Federal jurists are NOT allowed to read the law while serving as a jurist.

2. Federal jurists are NOT allowed to enter the courthouse law library while serving as jurists. The clerk running the law library is under strict orders from the chief justice NOT to allow jurists into the courthouse law library. When we asked her why that was, she could not explain the reasoning.

3. Jurists who read the law while serving can be impeached from serving on the jury.

The above statements by the clerk of the district court law library, friends, and the orders from the Chief Justice lead her to say what she said to us, are not only Treason punishable by death under 18 U.S.C. §2381, but amount to jury tampering in violation 18 U.S.C. §§1503 and 1504. Law is the solemn expression of the will of the “sovereign” within any system of government.

"Law. . . .That which is laid down, ordained, or established. A rule or method according to which phenomenon or actions co-exist or follow each other. Law, in its generic sense, is a body of rules of action or conduct prescribed by controlling authority, and having binding legal force. United States Fidelity and Guaranty Co. v. Guenther, 281 U.S. 34, 50 S.Ct. 165, 74 L.Ed. 683. That which must be obeyed and followed by citizens subject to sanctions or legal consequences is a law. Law is a solemn expression of the will of the supreme power of the State. Calif. Civil Code, §22.” [Black’s Law Dictionary, Sixth Edition, p. 884]

The “State” above is “We the People”, and does not include our public servants at all. In our system of government, the “sovereign” is the People both individually and collectively, and is NOT anyone serving in government. Any federal judge who prevents law from being discussed in a courtroom is refusing to recognize the sovereignty of the People who ordained that law, and is interfering with the definition and protection of their sovereign will in courts of justice. All law is a “compact” or a “contract” between the sovereign People and their servants in government. Refusing to discuss tax laws in a court trial is every bit as ludicrous as trying to enforce a contract without the contract. In effect, federal judges who refuse to discuss law in the courtroom are interfering with the right to contract of the sovereign “People”, because law is a “compact” or “contract” between us as Sovereigns and our public servants. Here is what the Supreme Court said about the authority of the government to impair the obligation of such contracts, and in particular the main contract between the sovereign People and their government servants called the Constitution:

‘Independent of these views, there are many considerations which lead to the conclusion that the power to impair contracts [either the Constitution or the Holy Bible], by direct action to that end, does not exist with the general [federal] government. In the first place, one of the objects of the Constitution, expressed in its preamble, was the establishment of justice, and what that meant in its relations to contracts is not left, as was justly said by the late Chief Justice, in Hepburn v. Griswold, to inference or conjecture. As he observes, at the time the Constitution was undergoing discussion in the convention, the Congress of the Confederation was engaged in framing the ordinance for the government of the Northwestern Territory, in which certain articles of compact were established between the people of the original States and the people of the Territory, for the purpose, as expressed in the instrument, of extending the fundamental principles of civil and religious liberty, upon which the States, their laws and constitutions, were erected. By that ordinance it was declared, that, in the just preservation of rights and property, no law ought ever to be made, or have force in the said Territory, that shall, in any manner, interfere with or affect private contracts or engagements bona fide and without fraud previously formed.” The same provision, adds the Chief Justice, found more condensed expression in the prohibition upon the States [in Article I, Section 10 of the Constitution] against impairing the obligation of contracts, which has ever been recognized as an efficient safeguard against injustice; and though the prohibition is not applied in terms to the government of the United States, he expressed the opinion, speaking for himself and the majority of the court at the time, that it was clear ‘that those who framed and those who adopted the Constitution intended that the spirit of this prohibition should pervade the entire body of legislation, and that the justice which the Constitution was ordained to establish was not thought by them to be compatible with legislation [or judicial precedent] of an opposite tendency.” 5 Wall. 625. [99 U.S. 700, 765] Similar views are found expressed in the opinions of other judges of this court.” [Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U.S. 700 (1878)]

Now some people might respond to these observations by saying that since the Internal Revenue Code is not “positive law”, then the judge is actually preventing a biased trial by keeping discussions of it out of the courtroom. This is partially true, but if the judge either won’t allow the Internal Revenue Code to be identified as not being “law”, or won’t allow other types of real, positive law, such as the Constitution, to be discussed in the courtroom, then he is impairing the right to contract of the sovereign “People” who delegated authority to their government using that positive law. The only basis for interfering with discussing the Constitution as “law” in a federal courtroom is that:

1. Neither party to the suit inhabits areas in a state of the Union where the Constitution applies….AND

2. The crime occurred within exclusive federal jurisdiction within a territory or possession of the federal government.

In nearly all tax trials, the above false presumptions are invisibly made by both the U.S. attorney prosecutor and the judge. It is made either because of ignorance or because of deliberate malice on the part of the judge. Either way, the resulting tax trial devolves into a witch hunt that is a completely political proceeding that is not founded in any way upon positive law. Don’t believe us? Well then watch the movie on our website entitled “How to Keep 100% of Your Earnings”, at:

http://famguardian.org/Media/movie.htm

In the above movie, a jurist at a state income tax trial testifies that the judge manipulated the case against a person accused of willful failure to file by preventing the jurists from seeing the law he was accused of violating. She says on tape that this was a tacit admission by the judge that there is no law requiring anyone to pay income tax!
Therefore, any judge, whether state or federal, who interferes with discussing the Constitution at a federal tax trial can only justify such action based on a usually false presumption that the accused is a statutory “citizen” under 8 U.S.C. §1401 who does not inhabit the states of the Union and therefore is not a party to the Federal Constitution. It is up to you to understand and challenge all the false presumptions that your federal persecutors are going to make and to challenge them as early on as possible and get them into your administrative record in all your correspondence. Furthermore, also understand that federal tax trials are unique and different from other types of federal trials. We have sat through several other types of trials in federal district court and found through personal observation that tax trials are the only types of trials where the judges are so tenacious in keeping the discussion of law out of the courtroom. It’s perfectly OK to discuss law or the Constitution in most other types of trials, but not in tax trials. As a matter of fact, we sat next to a U.S. attorney who handled criminal law on an airplane flight. We asked them if it was OK to discuss criminal law in the courtroom, and she said “Of course. I’ve never heard of a trial that operated any other way”. She obviously hadn’t sat through any tax trials! Do you smell a rat here? WE DO!

The only thing left when positive law is completely removed from tax trials are the following unreliable and Satanic forces:

1. Ignorance
2. Prejudice
3. Conflict of interest
4. Bias on the part of the judge
5. The opinions of biased “experts” who are subject to IRS and judicial extortion.

On that last item above, we must consider what the Bible says about the use of “experts” in court:

"Preach the Word; be prepared in season and out of season; correct, rebuke and encourage—with great patience and careful instruction. For the time will come when men [in the legal profession or the judiciary] will not put up with sound [legal] doctrine [such as that found in this book]. Instead, to suit their own desires, they [our covetous public dis-servants] will gather around them a great number of teachers [court-appointed "experts", "licensed" government whores called attorneys and CPA’s, and educators in government-run or subsidized public schools and liberal universities] to say what their itching ears want to hear. They will turn their ears away from the truth and turn aside to [government and legal-profession myths and fables]. But you [the chosen of God and His servants must], keep your head in all situations, endure hardship, do the work of an evangelist, discharge all the duties of your [God’s] ministry."

[2 Tim. 4:2-5, Bible, NKJV]

Instead of ensuring justice, keeping law out of the courtroom and replacing it with subjective opinions of biased “experts” who have a conflict of interest simply transforms the court into an unruly lynch mob of angry “tax consumers” and federal benefit recipients (“taxpayers”) who want to keep their tax bill down by inducting other tax slaves to join them and share the burden of supporting the federal plantation. This is exactly the tactic, in fact, that was used against Jesus at his trial. A major subject at Jesus’ trial was his attitude about taxes, in fact:

"And they [the angry democratic lynch mob of atheistic socialists] began to accuse Him [Jesus], saying, “We found this fellow perverting the nation, and forbidding to pay taxes to Caesar, saying that He Himself is Christ, a King [sovereign].” [Luke 23:2, Bible, NKJV]"

The priests, who were the political enemies of Jesus, fomented negative public opinion against Jesus and caused an angry mob of atheists to bring Jesus before the courts and governor Pilate so that he could be tried for things that weren’t even crimes. These vindictive priests turned an exclusively religious ministry of Jesus into a political persecution by an angry lynch mob in order to silence dissent and challenges to their power and authority. The persecution of Jesus literally was a “witch hunt”, and not a valid legal process. The goal of his persecutors was to strip Him of His sovereignty, dignity, and life. For further information on this subject, see our article entitled “The Trial of Jesus” at the address below, where a real judge analyzed how Jesus was treated:

http://famguardian.org/Subjects/LawAndGovt/History/TrialOfJesus.htm

What the Department of Justice has learned how to do in terrorizing and illegally persecuting tax honesty advocates is to institutionalize the kind of tyranny, despotism, and violation of due process which Jesus experienced. They have made every tax trial into a witch hunt that exactly replicates the one Jesus experienced. Tax honesty advocates want their sovereignty and rights respected, while the government wants to destroy it and make them into federal serfs who are falsely “presumed” to inhabit the federal plantation called the “United States” as “U.S. citizens”. Remember: Jesus was a tax protester! See section 1.10.1 earlier for evidence of this fact.

5.4.6.6 How to skip out of “government church worship services”

It ought to be clear by now that government is simply another type of church and religion. We call it a “civil religion” and we have written an entire book to describe this religion:

_Socialism: The New American Civil Religion_, Form #05.016

http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

Those who don’t want to join the church simply change their domicile to be outside the state-sponsored church:

_Why Domicile and Becoming a “Taxpayer” Require Your Consent_, Form #05.002

http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm

Those who are not part of the church but who appear before the priests of the church, who are the judges in the government’s courts, are presumed to consent to their jurisdiction if they make an “appearance” before a judge:

appearance. A coming into court as a party to a suit, either in person or by attorney, whether as plaintiff or defendant. The formal proceeding by which a defendant submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court. The voluntary submission to a court’s jurisdiction.

In civil actions the parties do not normally actually appear in person, but rather through their attorneys (who enter their appearance by filing written pleadings, or a formal written entry of appearance). Also, at many stages of criminal proceedings, particularly involving minor offenses, the defendant’s attorney appears on his behalf. See e.g., Fed.R.Crim.P. 43.

An appearance may be either general or special; the former is a simple and unqualified or unrestricted submission to the jurisdiction of the court, the latter is a submission to the jurisdiction for some specific purpose only, not for all the purposes of the suit. A special appearance is for the purpose of testing or objecting to the sufficiency of service or the jurisdiction of the court over defendant without submitting to such jurisdiction; a general appearance is made where the defendant waives defects of service and submits to the jurisdiction of court. Insurance Co. of North America v. Kunis, 173 Neb. 260, 121 N.W.2d 372, 375, 376.

If you are compelled to appear before a priest of the state-sponsored church, all you have to do is make a “special visitation” rather than an “appearance”. This deprives the priest of your “worship and obedience”. One or our readers sent us information about a very interesting technique he uses when he gets involuntarily invited to a government “worship service” in a federal church called “District Court”. The intent of the interchange is to emphasize that we don’t consent and therefore are not subject to the jurisdiction of the court. We repeat it below for your edification and education.

What I'm talking about is actually a legal strategy that we ALL should be employing in the Courts, but very few of us do. It all has to do with CONTRACT law. I've actually known about this for a long time, but just recently did an in-depth study.

As I said, it's all built around contracts. EVERY State, and EVERY City in the United States of America is a for-profit corporation. It is the goal of every for-profit corporation to conduct "business" in order to obtain profits. It is impossible for any "business" to be conducted without a contract of some type in place. ALL businesses (contracts) are governed by the Uniform Commercial Code. For example, when you go to the grocery store, you offer to discharge your debt for the items you select by offering to give the clerk a certain amount of Federal Reserve Notes. This is a verbal contract which is consummated by both of your actions. You have made an exchange of equal value.

The same type of thing applies in the Courts. Courts, whether "of record" (state), or not "of record" (municipal/city), are all corporations, doing business for a profit. The only way a corporation can force you to do business with them is IF THEY HAVE YOU UNDER CONTRACT. A judge will always ask you your name, and if you understand the charges. If you give a name, and indicate that you understand the charges, you have entered into a contract to do business with the Court, and the Court will always protect its government corporations. The judge is nothing more than a third party debt collector corporate employee. If you do not enter into a contract to do business with the Court, then the Court cannot proceed against you, as it is not a party. Below is a sample transcript of how one might proceed to deny jurisdiction to the Courts using this approach.
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

---

J = Judge

PA = Prosecuting Attorney

C = Citizen

---

PA: Would you please identify yourself?

C: I make a reservation of all rights at all times, and surrender, transfer or relinquish none of my rights at any time. I am “I, me, myself, a Citizen of the United States of America”

J: Please answer the question

C: I just did.

J: We need your name.

C: I’ll just bet you do.

J: I’m not going to play this game. Let the record show that the defendant has refused to identify himself.

C: I take exception to that statement. I have done no such thing, and I assure you that you are absolutely correct when you say that this is not a game. I am dead serious.

J: You didn’t give the Court your name!

C: And, I’m not about to!

J: But, you have to give your . . .

C: I don’t have to do anything, because I’m not under contract to you. Judge, do you have a claim against me?

J: The State of XXXXXXXXX has a claim against you.

C: No, it doesn’t. It has a civil “allegation” (or “charge” if you are being tried for a crime), but there is no “claim”. There is a BIG difference between a “claim” and an “allegation” (or “charge”, as the case may be). Don’t try to change the subject. I asked you if you personally have a claim against me?

J: No.

C: Can you produce any evidence that I’ve entered a contract to do business with this Court?

J: What do you mean?

C: Don’t you know what a contract is?

J: Of course I do!

C: Well, where is your evidence that I’ve allegedly entered into any contract to do business with this Court? I haven’t given my name, and I DO NOT understand the allegations (or charges).

J: I don’t need any contract. This Court has jurisdiction of all the Citizens of this state.

C: Oh, yeah? Sans a contract, exactly what is your lawful authority for that statement? I want to see an actual LAW. This Court is a division of a corporation, and I have elected NOT to do business with you. Judge, you do not have me under contract. I have given no name, nor do I understand any “charge” or “allegation”. You are a third party debt collector, and I grant you no authority or jurisdiction over me whatsoever. That having been said, I am not under contract to you, and by your own admission you have acknowledged that no claim has been stated upon which relief may be granted. I do not accept any judgment from this Court. I order this Court, in the name of the United States Constitution, to dismiss these charges and/or allegations against me, with prejudice, unless you can produce a contract by which I’ve agreed to do business with you, and you can state a claim for which relief may be granted.

This is one way that you can absolutely deny the Courts any jurisdiction over you whatsoever. They will have no choice but to dismiss the charges against you if you do not agree to contract to do business with them.

5.4.7 No Taxation Without Consent

Once you give it a little thought, one should conclude that a self-governing people must consent to their own taxes. After all, what do conquered people do? They pay tribute to their conquerors right? Self-governing people don’t pay tribute, as they consent to their own taxation.

Today in America, what tax is it that takes the largest bite out of the typical American’s wallet? What tax is it that is the most invasive? What tax is it that incarcerates more Americans than any other tax? It is the income tax! Did we consent to this tax, or are we paying tribute as conquered people do?

The answer to this question is both yes and no. Yes, we consented to an indirect income tax on the net income from business and on the net income from investment. (However, this assumes that the 16th Amendment was properly and legally ratified, which is doubtful.) The amount of such income is determined by subtracting from the gross revenue all business expenses, depreciation, taxes, interest payments, etc., and then severing that income from the underlying asset that produced the income in the first place. Producing taxable net income is kind of like producing wine. There is an intricate process one must go through to get the final result, and there are some good years and bad years.

But the answer to the “consent question” is also no. The American People never consented to a direct tax on our wages and salaries. Call it an income tax, call it a capitation tax, call it whatever you want to call it, the American People never consented to a direct tax exempted from the apportionment rule required by the Constitution for direct taxes.

In order to understand the dynamics of this question, we must realize that some income taxes are direct, while other income taxes are indirect. The issue is actually quite simple. A direct tax is direct. The tax falls directly on the person or the thing taxed. The one who is obligated to pay such a tax is not in a position to shift it to another.

On the contrary, an indirect tax may either be avoided or shifted to another. A trucking company shifts the excise tax on fuel to the customer who ships his product by way of the trucking company. The excise tax on cigarettes is avoided by choosing not to smoke. How is the wage earner going to shift the taxes deducted out of his paycheck to another? He can’t. Therefore, the tax imposed directly by the government on the wage earner is a direct tax.

The idea that a free people would be taxed without their consent defies all logic. It simply can’t be true. From the beginning of recorded history people have paid taxes without their consent to their conquering masters. Today Americans are paying an income tax on their wages and salaries to which they never consented to. The saddest part about this state of affairs is that the American people are unaware of this fact. Thomas Jefferson was right when he said:

“If a nation expects to be ignorant and free... it expects what never was and never will be.”

The remainder of this article is actually a segment out of a Petition for Writ of Certiorari filed with the Supreme Court on June 21, 2002. This section covers pages 12 thru 17 of the Petition. The case is Philip Lewis Hart v. Commissioner of Internal Revenue. As of this date, the case has not been given a docket number. The Petition was limited to 30 pages, which is extremely short when considering that the Internal Revenue Code and supporting regulations are approximately some 20,000 pages. One cannot do justice to such a complex subject in only 30 pages. The following section is excerpted from the Petition:

No tax may be imposed on the American People without their consent.

In the Declaration of Independence, one of the Grievances against King George III listed by the American Colonists was, 'For imposing taxes on us without our consent.' The Declaration of Independence further states, “That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.”

----

68 Extract from an article by the same name written by Phil Hart, whose website is at:

http://www.constitutionalincome.com/
This Court has previously ruled that those Grievances listed in the Declaration of Independence provide a foundation as to the purpose of the American government and also the boundaries as to its power. The Declaration of Independence is America’s Great Charter; the Constitution is America’s by-laws. Government has only that power for which the People have consented to delegate to it.

The idea that taxes may not be levied unless the People consent to them appears in Magna Carta at chapters 12 and 14. But Magna Carta itself was a result of not only abusive and unjust taxation, but also taxation that was in violation of the Charter of Liberties of King Henry I. Henry I became king in 1100 A.D. when his brother, King William, was removed from the throne because of “unjust exactions.”

The requirement that taxes cannot be levied unless the People consent to them appears in Magna Carta at chapters 12 and 14. Magna Carta was the culmination of a protest against the arbitrary rule of King John, who was using governmental powers which had been established by the great builders of the English nation, William the Conqueror, Henry I, and Henry II, for selfish and tyrannical purposes. In general these abuses took the pattern of increasing customary feudal obligations and decreasing established feudal rights and privileges. The Barons were forced to pay higher taxes above the usual rate... The merchants of London were burdened with heavy taxes... In addition, John’s administration was disorganized and inefficient, and he employed unscrupulous foreign adventurers as royal officers and as sheriffs and bailiffs in every county of the land.”

The events leading up to Confirmatio Cartarum, like those which led up to Magna Carta, show that the king’s violation of established laws oppressed the community as a whole and caused the barons and the clergy to unite in demanding the observance of the law. As was also true of Magna Carta, this oppression often took the form of illegal and unreasonable taxation.

“Confirmatio Cartarum has had two principal effects upon the development of the liberties of the citizen. First it established Parliament as a truly representative organ of government by providing in Section 6 that the taxes must be raised by the common assent of the realm. The imposition of direct taxes without the consent of the people’s representatives in Parliament was now against the very letter of the law.”

[Perry; Cooper, supra at 24-6]

The principle that government must have the consent of the People before levying any tax showed up on the American continent in 1618 with the Ordinances for Virginia.

“The governor should not be allowed to levy taxes on the colony without the consent of the assembly.”

[Perry, Cooper, supra at 50.]

The Petition of Right of 1628 was yet another attempt by the English people to compel the administration of Charles I to obey the law. Again, one of the abuses was taxation without the consent of the governed. At Section X the document states, “That no man hereafter be compelled to make or yield any gift, loan, benevolence, tax or such-like charge, without common consent by act of Parliament.”

The Charter of Massachusetts Bay of 1629 provided for taxation only when consented to by the assembly of freemen. So did the Charter of Maryland of 1632. Other colonies declared that the colonists had all the rights of Englishmen and that Magna Carta and all subsequent documents that secured those rights applied to the freemen of the colonies including the Bill of Rights of 1689.

The Bill of Rights of 1689 was the culmination of a revolution that took place in England which overthrew James II. Again, one of the major abuses of the absolute rule of James II was illegal and abusive taxation. The preamble and forth clause of the 1689 Bill of Rights states,
"WHEREAS the late King James the Second, by the assistance of divers, evil counselors, judges, and ministers employed by him, did endeavor to subvert and extirpate the protestant religion, and the laws and liberties of this kingdom... 4. By levying money for and to the use of the crown, by pretence of prerogative, for other time, and in other manner, than the same was granted by parliament."

[Bill of Rights of 1689]

The remedy provided by the Bill of Rights of 1689 was that taxes could not be levied except:

"4. That levying money for or to the use of the crown, by pretence or prerogative, without the grant of parliament, for longer time, on in other manner than the same is or shall be granted, is illegal."

Back on the American continent was the Resolutions of the Stamp Act Congress of 1765. American Colonists objected to the Stamp Act as it imposed taxes on them without their consent. “John Adams denounced the Stamp Act as a violation of Magna Carta.” Perry; Cooper, supra at 10.

Various colonial assemblies passed resolutions condemning the Stamp Act. The Virginia House of Burgesses was the first. Four of seven resolutions offered by Patrick Henry were passed including number 1 and number 3 below:

“(1) That the first settlers of Virginia brought with them all the liberties, privileges, franchises, and immunities of British subjects; (3) that under the British constitution taxes could be levied only by the people or their representatives.”

Most of the other colonies passed varying degrees of the Henry resolutions. They also called for a congress of representatives to meet in New York and condemn the Stamp Act. Nine of the colonies sent representatives to the congress.

“There was little difference of opinion as to the fundamental questions involved... Resolutions 2 thru 8 expressed the constitutional theory of the colonists that all taxation... without the consent of the people's representatives was illegal... No nation ought to be taxed against its own consent. England had passed through many a year of civil war in defence of the proposition”

[Perry; Cooper, supra at 206-7]

The actual text of the Resolutions of the Stamp Act Congress of October 19, 1765 stated:

“2d. That his majesty’s liege subjects in these colonies are entitled to all the inherent rights and privileges of his natural-born subjects within the kingdom of Great Britain,

“3d. That it is inseparably essential to the freedom of a people, and the undoubted rights of Englishmen, that no taxes should be imposed on them, but with their own consent, given personally, or by their representatives.”

Likewise the Declaration and Resolves of the First Continental Congress of 1774 contained similar language about the necessity of consent for taxation. Additionally, Sir William Blackstone wrote in his Commentaries on the Laws of England,

“No subject of England can be constrained to pay any aids or taxes, even for the defence of the realm or the support of government, but such as are imposed by his own consent, or that of his representatives in parliament...

And as this fundamental law had been shamefully evaded under many succeeding princes, by compulsive loans, and benevolences extorted without a real and voluntary consent, it was made an article in the petition of right.”

This principle was memorialized in the Declaration of Independence. This is one of the great principles upon which the entire system of self-government rests: The consent of the governed must be given to the taxes they must pay. When this principle is not in place, self-government does not exist. Tyranny exists in its place.

The Commissioner claims that his authority to collect the tax in the instant case comes from the Sixteenth Amendment. As part of the Constitution, the Sixteenth Amendment must be interpreted using the everyday language and common dictionaries of the time. There are no “words of art” or “terms of art” in the Constitution, as it is We the People who determine what the Constitution means or doesn't mean. We the People don’t speak using “words of art.” We the People just use everyday language. Therefore the consent for the scope of the meaning of the Sixteenth Amendment is vested in the People, and that meaning will be plain for anyone to see once the evidence has been examined.

An exhaustive review of the Congressional Record during the time of the debates on the Sixteenth Amendment reveals no credible evidence that the members of Congress were contemplating a direct tax on the wages and salaries of the American People. An exhaustive review of other congressional documents during the ratification process yields no evidence that Congress contemplated using the Sixteenth Amendment as a vehicle to place an unapportioned direct tax on the wages and salaries of the American People.

An exhaustive review of law journal articles of the time produced no articles that indicated Congress or the American People were contemplating a nonapportioned direct tax on the wages and salaries of the American People. No evidence was found in the journals on political economy and economics. Nor was any such evidence discovered in an exhaustive search of New York Times articles, which are all cataloged in yearbooks as the New York Times is a New York Times articles, which are all cataloged in yearbooks as a “newspaper of record.”

As there is no evidence that can be found anywhere indicating that the American People sought to place an unapportioned direct tax on their wages and salaries, we can conclude that the American People never consented to the very tax that the Commissioner is attempting to collect in the instant case [Hart v. Commissioner].

The entire weight of evidence as to the purpose of the Sixteenth Amendment indicates that its objective was to place income taxes on net income from unincorporated business and investment into the classification of indirect taxes. Pollock was overturned by the 16th Amendment. No more and no less. The purpose of the Sixteenth Amendment was to shift the tax burden off of consumption and onto incomes from the accumulated wealth of the country such as to bring tax relief to wage earners.

Since the signing of Magna Carta 800 years ago, it has been a well-established principle of self-government among the English speaking people that the people must consent to their taxes. According to author R.L. Perry in Sources of Our Liberties:

"The liberties of the American citizen depend upon the existence of established and known rules of law limiting the authority and discretion of men wielding the power of government. Magna Carta announced the rule of law; this was its great contribution. It is this characteristic which has provided throughout the years the foundation on which has come to rest the entire structure of Anglo-American constitutional liberties." supra at I.

That Magna Carta and all subsequent documents that secured our liberties are relevant to the American Citizen today is borne out by the fact that the single monument on the meadow of Runnymede, between Windsor and Staines, commemorating Magna Carta was designed, paid for and erected by the American Bar Association. The American People never consented to this unapportioned direct tax on their wages and salaries. Therefore the Commissioner is wholly without any delegated authority whatsoever to collect such a tax within the several union states.

5.4.8 Why “domicile” and becoming a “taxpayer” require your consent

5.4.8.1 Introduction

The purpose of establishing government is solely to provide “protection”. Those who wish to be protected by a specific government must expressly consent to be protected by choosing a domicile within the civil jurisdiction of that specific government.

1. Those who have made such a choice and thereby become “customers” of the protection afforded by government are called by any of the following names under the civil laws of the jurisdiction they have nominated to protect them:
   1.1. “citizens”, if they were born somewhere within the country which the jurisdiction is a part.
   1.2. “residents” (aliens) if they were born within the country in which the jurisdiction is a part.
   1.3. “inhabitants”, which encompasses both "citizens", and "residents" but excludes foreigners.
   1.4. “persons”.
   1.5. “individuals”.

2. Those who have not become “customers” or “protected persons” of a specific government are called by any of the following names within the civil laws of the jurisdiction they have refused to nominate as their protector and may NOT be called by any of the names in item 1 above:
   2.1. “nonresidents”.
   2.2. “transient foreigners”.

Source: Why Domicile and Becoming a “Taxpayer” Require Your Consent, Form #05.002; http://sedm.org/Forms/FormIndex.htm.
2.3. “stateless persons”.
2.4. “in transitu”.
2.5. “transient”.
2.6. “sojourner”.
2.7. “civilly dead”.

In law, the process of choosing a domicile within the jurisdiction of a specific government is called “animus manendi”. Latin is used to describe the process because judges don’t want you knowing that you can choose NOT to be protected by the civil statutory law. That choice makes you a consenting party to the “civil contract”, “social compact”, and “private law” that attaches to and therefore protects all “inhabitants” and things physically situated on or within that specific territory, venue, and jurisdiction. In a sense then, your consent to a specific jurisdiction by your choice of domicile within that jurisdiction is what creates the statutory “person”, “individual”, “citizen”, “resident”, or “inhabitant” which is the only proper subject of the civil statutory laws enacted by that government. In other words, choosing a domicile within a specific jurisdiction causes an implied waiver of sovereign immunity, because the courts admit that the term "person" does not refer to the "sovereign":

“In common usage, the term person does not include the sovereign, statutes not employing the phrase are ordinarily construed to exclude it.”
[United States v. Cooper Corporation, 312 U.S. 600 (1941)]

“Sovereignty itself is, of course, not subject to law for it is the author and source of law;”
[Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356 (1886)]

“There is no such thing as a power of inherent Sovereignty in the government of the United States. In this country sovereignty resides in the People, and Congress can exercise no power which they have not, by their Constitution entrusted to it: All else is withheld.”
[Juilliard v. Greenman, 110 U.S. 421 (1884)]

Those who have become customers of government protection by choosing a civil domicile within a specific government then owe a duty to pay for the support of the protection they demand. The method of paying for said protection is called “taxes”.

In earlier times this kind of sponsorship was called “tribute”.

“TRIBUTE. Tribute in the sense of an impost paid by one state to another, as a mark of subjugation, is a common feature of international relationships in the biblical world. The tributary could be either a hostile state or an ally. Like deportation, its purpose was to weaken a hostile state. Deportation aimed at depleting the man-power. The aim of tribute was probably twofold: to impoverish the subjugated state and at the same time to increase the conqueror’s own revenues and to acquire commodities in short supply in his own country. As an instrument of administration it was one of the simplest ever devised: the subjugated country could be made responsible for the payment of a yearly tribute. Its non-arrival would be taken as a sign of rebellion, and an expedition would be sent to deal with the recalcitrant. This was probably the reason for the attack recorded in Gn. 14.

Domicile is an EXTREMELY important subject to learn because it defines and circumscribes:

1. The boundary between what is legislatively "foreign" and legislatively "domestic" in relation to a specific jurisdiction. Everyone domiciled OUTSIDE a specific jurisdiction is legislatively and statutorily "foreign" in relation to that civil jurisdiction. Note that you can be DOMESTIC from a CONSTITUTIONAL perspective and yet ALSO be FOREIGN from a legislative jurisdiction AT THE SAME TIME. This is true of the relationship of most Americans with the national government.
2. The boundary between what is LEGAL speech and POLITICAL speech. For everyone not domiciled in a specific jurisdiction, the civil law of that jurisdiction is POLITICAL and unenforceable. Since real constitutional courts cannot entertain political questions, then they cannot act in a political capacity against nonresidents.

So let us begin our coverage of this MOST important subject.

5.4.8.2 Definition

Domicile is legally defined as follows. We also include the definition of “situs” to help clarify its meaning:

“domicile. A person’s legal home. That place where a man has his true, fixed, and permanent home and principal establishment, and to which whenever he is absent he has the intention of returning. Smith v. Smith,
Chapter 5: The Evidence: Why We Aren’t Liable to File Returns or Pay Income Tax

Generally, physical presence within a state and the intention to make it one’s home are the requisites of establishing a "domicile" therein. The permanent residence of a person or the place to which he intends to return even though he may actually reside elsewhere. A person may have more than one residence but only one domicile. The legal domicile of a person is important since it, rather than the actual residence, often controls the jurisdiction of the taxing authorities and determines where a person may exercise the privilege of voting and other legal rights and privileges."

"Situs: Lat. Situation; location; e.g. location or place of crime or business. Site; position; the place where a thing is considered, for example, with reference to jurisdiction over it, or the right or power to tax it. It imports fixedness of location. Situs of property; for tax purposes, is determined by whether the taxing state has sufficient contact with the personal property sought to be taxed to justify in fairness the particular tax. Town of Cady v. Alexander Const. Co., 12 Wn.2d. 236, 107 N.W.2d. 267, 270."

Generally, personal property has its taxable "situs" in that state where owner of it is domiciled. Smith v. Lummus, 149 Fla. 660, 6 So.2d. 625, 627, 628. Situs of a trust means place of performance of active duties of trustee. Campbell v. Albers, 313 Ill.App. 152, 39 N.E.2d. 672, 676."

Notice in the definition of "domicile" above the absence of the word "consent" and replacing it with the word "intent" to disguise the true nature of what they are saying. Lawyers and politicians don't want you to know that they need your consent to make you into a "taxpayer" with a "domicile" within their jurisdiction, even though this is in fact the case. More on this later.

An exhaustive academic treatise on the subject of domicile also candidly admits that there is no all-encompassing definition for "domicile".

§57. Difficulty of Defining Domicil.--

The difficulty, if not impossibility, of arriving at an entirely satisfactory definition of domicile has been frequently commented upon. Lord Alvanley, in Somerville v. Somerville, praised the wisdom of Bynkershoek in not hazarding a definition; and Dr. Lushingon, in Mallass v. Mallass, speaking of the various attempts of jurisists in this direction, considered himself justified in the remarkable language of Hertius: "Verum in its definiendis mirum est quam sudant doctores." Lord Chelmsford, speaking, as late as 1863, in the case of Moorhouse v. Lord, says: "The difficulty of getting a satisfactory definition of domicile, which will meet every case, has often been admitted, and every attempt to frame one has hitherto failed."

The above admission is not surprising, given the fact that the main purpose for inventing the concept of domicile is to infer or imply consent of the subject to the civil law that has never expressly been given in writing and cannot be proven to exist. No government or judge is going to give a definition, because then people would use that definition to prove that they DON'T have a domicile and that would destroy the source of all the government's civil and taxing authority over the people who employ the definition to break the chains that bind them to their pagan tyrant rulers.

The concept of domicile we inherit primarily from the feudal Roman law system in which the king or emperor or lord claimed ownership over all territory entrusted to him or her by divine right. Everyone occupying said territory therefore became a "subject" of the king and owed him "allegiance" as compensation for the "privilege" or franchise associated with use of his property. That allegiance expressed itself as "tribute" paid to the king, which we know of today as "taxes". What were once "subjects" of the king in Great Britain and the Roman Empire are now called "citizens", and we fired the King when the Declaration of Independence declared all men equal. At that point, everyone became equal and the sovereign transitioned from the former King of England to "We the People" as individuals. Consequently, we no longer have a landlord and the government that serves us cannot therefore lawfully charge us "rent" for the use of the land or territory that we occupy if we own it.

"The people of this State, as the successors of its former sovereign, are entitled to all the rights which formerly belonged to the King by his prerogative. Through the medium of their Legislature they may exercise all the powers which previous to the Revolution could have been exercised either by the King alone, or by him in conjunction with his Parliament; subject only to those restrictions which have been imposed by the Constitution of this State or of the U.S."

"In the United States the people are sovereign, and the government cannot sever its relationship to the people by taking away their citizenship."

[Aforinm v. Rush, 387 U.S. 253 (1967)]

"Strictly speaking, in our republican form of government, the absolute sovereignty of the nation is in the people of the nation; and the residuary sovereignty of each state, not granted to any of its public functionaries, is in the people of the state. 2 Dall. 471"

[Bouv. Law Dict (1870)]

"The sovereignty of a state does not reside in the persons who fill the different departments of its government, but in the People, from whom the government emanated; and they may change it at their discretion. Sovereignty, then in this country, abides with the constituency, and not with the agent; and this remark is true, both in reference to the federal and state government."

[Spooner v. McConnell, 22 F. 939 @ 943]

"In Europe, the Executive is almost synonymous with the Sovereign power of a State; and, generally, includes legislative and judicial authority. When, therefore, writers speak of the sovereign, it is not necessarily in exclusion of the judiciary; and it will often be found, that when the Executive affords a remedy for any wrong, it is nothing more than by an exercise of its judicial authority. Such is the condition of power in that quarter of the world, where it is too commonly acquired by force, or fraud, or both, and seldom by compact. In America, however, the case is widely different. Our government is founded upon compact, Sovereignty was, and is, in the people. It was entrusted by them, as far as was necessary for the purpose of forming a good government, to the Federal Convention; and the Convention executed their trust, by effectually separating the Legislative, Judicial, and Executive powers; which, in the contemplation of our Constitution, are each a branch of the sovereignty. The well-being of the whole depends upon keeping each department within its limits."

[Glass v. The Sloop Betsey, 3 U.S. 6, 3 Dall. 6, 1 l.Ed. 485 (1794)]

5.4.8.3  Domicile is a First Amendment choice of political affiliation

Another very important observation is in order at this point, which is that our choice of "domicile" is a strictly political and not legal matter. It is a matter of our political choice and affiliation. The Supreme Court has ruled that no government may dictate our choice of political affiliations, as revealed in the American Jurisprudence Legal Encyclopedia:

"The right to associate or not to associate with others solely on the basis of individual choice, not being absolute, 70 may conflict with a societal interest in requiring one to associate with others, or to prohibit one from associating with others, in order to accomplish what the state deems to be the common good. The Supreme Court, though rarely called upon to examine this aspect of the right to freedom of association, has nevertheless established certain basic rules which will cover many situations involving forced or prohibited associations. Thus, where a sufficiently compelling state interest, outside the political spectrum, can be accomplished only by requiring individuals to associate together for the common good, then such forced association is constitutional.

70 But the Supreme Court has made it clear that compelling an individual to become a member of an organization with political aspects, or compelling an individual to become a member of an organization which financially supports, in more than an insignificant way, political personages or goals which the individual does not wish to support, is an infringement of the individual's constitutional right to freedom of association. 72 The First Amendment prevents the government, except in the most compelling circumstances, from wielding its power to interfere with its employees' freedom to believe and associate, or to not believe and not associate; it is not merely a tenure provision that protects public employees from actual or constructive discharge. 73 Thus, Annotation: Supreme Court's views regarding Federal Constitution's First Amendment right of association as applied to elections and other political activities, 116 L.Ed.2d. 997 , § 10.

First Amendment principles prohibit a state from compelling any individual to associate with a political party, as a condition of retaining public employment. 74 The First Amendment protects non policymaking public employees from discrimination based on their political beliefs or affiliation. 75 But the First Amendment protects the right of political party members to advocate that a specific person be elected or appointed to a particular office and that a specific person be hired to perform a governmental function. 76 In the First Amendment context, the political patronage exception to the First Amendment protection for public employees is to be construed broadly, so as presumptively to encompass positions placed by legislature outside of "merit" civil service. Positions specifically named in relevant federal, state, county, or municipal laws to which discretionary authority with respect to enforcement of that law or carrying out of some other policy of political concern is granted, such as a secretary of state given statutory authority over various state corporation law practices, fall within the political patronage exception to First Amendment protection of public employees. 77 However, a supposed interest in ensuring effective government and efficient government employees, political affiliation or loyalty, or high salaries paid to the employees in question should not be counted as indicative of positions that require a particular party affiliation. 78 "

[American Jurisprudence 2d, Constitutional law, §346: Forced and Prohibited Associations (1999)]

One's choice of "domicile" certainly has far-reaching legal consequences and ramifications, but our choice of domicile is not a legal matter to be decided by any court. No court whether it be a federal or state court, has jurisdiction over strictly political matters. Below is what the U.S. Supreme Court has to say on this very subject:

"But, fortunately for our freedom from political excitement in judicial duties, this court [the U.S. Supreme Court] can never with propriety be called on officially to be the umpire in questions merely political. The adjustment of these questions belongs to the people and their political representatives, either in the State or general government. These questions relate to matters not to be settled on strict legal principles. They are adjusted rather by inclination, or prejudice or compromise, often.

Another evil, alarming and little foreseen, involved in regarding these as questions for the final arbitration of judges would be that, in such an event, all political privileges and rights would, in a dispute among the people, depend on our decision finally. We would possess the power to decide against, as well as for, them, and, under a prejudiced or arbitrary judiciary, the public liberties and popular privileges might thus be much perverted, if not entirely prostrated. But, allowing the people to make constitutions and unmake them, allowing their representatives to make laws and unmake them, and without our interference as to their principles or policy in doing it, yet, when constitutions and laws are made and put in force by others, then the courts, as empowered by the State or the Union, commence their functions and may decide on the rights which conflicting parties can legally set up under them, rather than about their formation itself. Our power begins after theirs [the Sovereign

Consequently, no court of law can interfere with your choice of legal domicile, which is a strictly political matter. To do otherwise would constitute compelled association in violation of the First Amendment as well as direct interference in the affairs of a political party, which is YOU. You are your own independent political party and a sovereignty separate and distinct from the federal or state sovereignties. A court of law is certainly not the proper forum, in instance, in which to question or politically ridicule one's choice of domicile, whether it be in front of a jury or a judge.

"Petitioners contend that immunity from suit in federal court suffices to preserve the dignity of the States. Private suits against nonconsenting States, however, present "the indignity of subjecting a State to the coercive process of judicial tribunals at the instance of private parties," In re Ayers, supra, at 505; accord, Seminole Tribe, 517 U.S. at 58, regardless of the forum. Not only must a State defend or default but also it must face the prospect of being thrust, by federal fiat and against its will, into the disfavored status of a debtor, subject to the power of private citizens to levy on its treasury or perhaps even government buildings or property which the State administers on the public's behalf.

"Underlying constitutional form are considerations of great substance. Private suits against nonconsenting States--especially suits for money damages--may threaten the financial integrity of the States. It is indisputable that, at the time of the founding, many of the States could have been forced into insolvency but for their immunity from private suits for money damages. Even today, an unlimited congressional power to authorize suits in state court to levy upon the treasuries of the States for compensatory damages, attorney's fees, and even punitive damages could create staggering burdens, giving Congress a power and a leverage over the States that is not contemplated by our constitutional design. The potential national power would pose a severe and notorious danger to the States and their resources."

The Supreme Court said that the sovereignty of We The People is every bit as sacred as that of the states, so why should they not merit the same level of sovereign immunity from suit and dignity, especially in their choice of domicile, as that of the States? To wit:

"The rights of individuals and the justice due to them, are as dear and precious as those of states, Indeed the latter are founded upon the former; and the great end and object of them must be to secure and support the rights of individuals, or else vain is government."

[Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 U.S. (2 Dall.) 419, 1 L.Ed. 440 (1793)]
“We The People” certainly cannot be “Sovereign” in any sense of the word if legal process can be maliciously and habitually abused by the government at great financial injury and inconvenience to them in the process of questioning or ridiculing their choice of domicile. In spite of this fact, this very evil happens daily in state and federal courts in the context of tax trials. We cannot restore the sovereignty of the people unless and until this chronic malicious abuse of legal and judicial process is ended immediately.

In recognition of the concepts in this section, the following book on the common law starkly admits that being a CIVIL STATUTORY “PERSON” is optional, and implies MEMBERSHIP in the body politic. If only lawyers now were as honest as those back at the founding of this country!:
